THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.--NUMBER 13.
WHOLE NUMBER 347.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST AND FAITH OF MARY.

BY THOMAS READ.

EVERY circumstance connected with the nature of Jesus Christ forms a subject of intense interest. Although we are admonished that "no man knoweth the Son, but the Father," yet the things that are revealed certainly belong to us and our children. If we are asked: Who is the Christ? Whose Son is he? We wish intelligently to respond that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, being begotten by the power of the true God; and that Jesus is the Christ, the son of David, being conceived by Mary, and that he is the legitimate heir to his father David's throne through his mother Mary, as well as through his legal father Joseph.

Matthew traces the genealogy of Joseph from David through Solomon; and Luke traces the genealogy of Mary from David, through his elder son, Nathan, to Heli, the father of Mary; and Joseph, being espoused to Mary, became the legal son of Heli. Thus Joseph was the legal heir to the throne of David in his own right, and was also the heir to the throne of David through an older branch in his wife's right. And the male descendant of Mary had the right derived from his mother, and the right derived from her husband, and being thus the heir of the two, in him was centered all the existent title to the throne of David. The knowledge of these things was necessary to regulate the conduct and confirm the faith of Joseph and Mary. How careful is the angel Gabriel in addressing them, to allude to them as being of the royal family of David. Matt. i. 20: "Joseph, thou son of David." Luke i. 32: "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." Joseph and Mary were not ignorant of their lineage, nor of the Scriptures, nor of the prediction of Daniel relative to the time of the Messiah's advent. The prophecy was not a dark enigma to them, as our translation makes it to us. The seventy weeks of Dan. ix. 24, was read by them, seventy sevens; and a seven, they understood as being the period of the lesser jubilee of seven years, making 490 years from the commandment to rebuild Jerusalem to the time when the Messiah should be cut off, and the time of his was indicated within a few years, and was then at hand. They knew the prophecies. Gen. iii. 15: "The seed of the woman shall crush the serpent's head." Isai. vii. 14: "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a Son." Isa. ix. 6: "For a child is born to us; and a Son is given to us; and the government is upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, God the Mighty, pater mellontos aion. The Father of the age to come. The Prince of Peace. His empire shall be multiplied, and there shall be no end of peace: he shall sit upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom; to establish it and to strengthen it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ages.—Septuagint. The Hebrew reads, The Father of the Age, not Everlasting Father, i. e., author, originator. The narrative of the birth of Christ is most circumstantial in

Luke i. 26: "Now in the sixth month God sent Gabriel, his messenger, to Nazareth, a city of Galilee; to a virgin whose name was Mary, was betrothed to Joseph, of the house of David. And the angel upon entering said to her, Hail highly favored! the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women! She was perplexed at his appearance and his words, and revolved in her mind the meaning of this salutation. And the angel said to her, Fear not Mary, for thou hast found favor with God." Verse 31: "And behold thou wilt conceive in thy womb and wilt bear a son, whom thou shalt call Jesus. He will be great, and shall be called a Son of the Highest, and the Lord God will give him the throne of David his father, and he will reign over the house of Jacob for ages; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary to the angel, How shall this be, since I have no intercourse with man?" Verse 35: "And the angel answering, said to her, Thou shalt possess a holy spirit; and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore thy holy offspring will be called a Son of God. And lo, thy cousin Elizabeth also has conceived a son in her old age; and she who is called barren, is now in her sixth month: for nothing is impossible with God. And Mary said, Behold, the handmaid of the Lord. Be it unto me according to thy word. Then the angel departed."

It will be observed that the translation of part of the 35th verse is changed. In the common version it reads "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee." The Greek is pneuma hazion, without the Greek article, and seems to refer to an obedient and believing disposition which should descend upon or be possessed and exhibited by Mary, who being encouraged by the angel by a somewhat similar example of faith in her cousin Elizabeth, and his allusion to the power of God, to whom nothing is impossible, and remembering the prophecy of Isaiah, and her own and Joseph's relationship to the house of David, she beautifully illustrates this holy spirit, this pneuma hazion, this obedient, submissive disposition, by exclaiming in humility and submission: "Behold, the female slave of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And the power of the Highest co-operated with her faith and the result was the birth of Jesus, the future King of Israel." Mary goes immediately to see and rejoice with Elizabeth, who confirms the foregoing idea, and says: "Blessed is she that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord." Thus ascribing her conception to her faith in the word and power of God, or to her holy disposition.

Is there any thing contradictory to the above rendering? Matt. i. 18: ek pneumatos hazion: out of, or proceeding from a holy spirit. Verse 20: ek pneumatos estin hazion: is from a holy spirit [in Mary.] It will be said that the article is sometimes omitted when the noun follows a preposition. True; but the preposition gives no grammatical authority to insert the definite article where it is not implied. Read Matt. xii. 32: "But whosoever speaketh, kata tou pneumatos tou hazion; against the Spirit, the Holy [one,] it will not be forgiven him, neither in this age nor in that to come." Here where the Holy Ghost is certainly meant, the definite article is repeated twice, notwithstanding the preceding preposition kata. But mark; there is no preposition in verse 35, Luke i., governing pneuma. It may be objected that this interpretation contradicts the "Apostle's Creed." Their creed is expressed in their writings. There is indeed a document called the "Apostle's Creed," that, although very ancient, was not in existence in apostolic times. This creed reads: "I believe in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary." The words in italics may have been translated from words similar to those found in Matt. i. 18. The creed says: "conceived by the Holy Ghost;" but the angel says to Mary, verse 31: "And behold, thou wilt conceive in thy womb." And the prophet says, vii. 14: "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son." Better contradict the creed, than the angel, and the prophet, and the Scriptures. But this creed has been changed several times in other parts, and perhaps in this. It taught in the older copies, "The resurrection of the dead;" which was altered to, "The resurrection of the flesh." It now reads, "The resurrection of the body." Such a changeable thing, is utterly without Scriptural authority.

There are other passages where pneuma occurs, in which the unauthorized addition of the definite article in English spoils the translation.

This exposition may help us to comprehend how Jesus is the Son of God, the Son of man, and the Son of David. But Jesus, having been slain, his life for a time taken entirely away, became emphatically the Son of God, because he was begotten again by his Father by a resurrection from the dead, not in a soulical, but in a spiritual nature. Likewise that man, being like Christ, is in the image of God as to his external form. That while Jesus is in the form of Abraham, he is in the form of his Father, an impress of his substance. Heb. i. 3. Glory be to God.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

DONE GIVING.

BY C. A. GOODRICH.

A GENTLEMAN of high respectability, and a member of the Presbyterian church, made this remark the other day, when informed that an application was about to be made to him in behalf of some charitable object: "I have done giving," said he. When I heard of this remark, it awakened in my mind a train of reflection which I have thought it might not be amiss to communicate through some religious paper.

Done giving! Has he indeed? Why? Has he given all? Has he nothing left to give? Has this disciple done what his Master did? Was he rich, and has he become poor for others, that they through his poverty might be rich? Oh, no! he is rich still. He has the greatest abundance—more than enough to support him in elegance, and to enable him to leave an ample inheritance to his children. What if he has given a great deal? He has not only not impoverished himself, but is probably richer now, through the favor of Providence, than he would have been had he never given any thing. Now if by honoring the Lord with his substance, his barns instead of being emptied, have been filled with plenty, he had better continue this mode of honoring him. He should rather increase than arrest his liberality.

Done giving? Why? Is there no more need of giving? Is every want abundantly supplied? Is the whole population of our country furnished with the means of grace? Is the world evangelized? Have missionaries visited every shore? Is the Bible translated into every language and distributed in every land—a copy in every family—and every member of every family taught to read it? Are the accommodations for widows and orphans as ample as they should be? Is there a house of refuge for every class of the human family that needs? or have the poor ceased from the land? Oh, no! There are no such good reasons as these for ceasing to give. Why, then, has he done giving? Is it because others do not give as they ought? But what is that to him? Will he make the practice of others his rule of conduct, rather than the precept of Jesus Christ? If others do not give, so much the more should he. Will he add another name to the list of niggards?

Does he feel worse for having given away so much? Has it made him unhappy? Is his experience different from the Lord Jesus, who said, "it is more blessed to give than to receive?"

Has he, who thinks he will give no more, been led to that conclusion by having found that what has been given hitherto has done no good? And is it so, that no good has been done by all the Bibles published, and all the tracts distributed, and all the missionaries sent abroad into the land and into the world; and all the schools established, and all the children taught to read, all the civilization introduced, and all the asylums opened, and all the poverty relieved? Has no good been done? Good, great good has been done by what has been given; but still more will be done by what will be given hereafter. Bibles can now be printed at a much cheaper rate than heretofore, and the conductors of our charitable operations have learned by experience that economy which can be learned in no other way. And yet at this time, when a dollar goes so far in doing good, here is a man who says, "I have done giving!" If I had his ear for a moment I would ask him if he has done receiving? If God has done giving to him? I would ask him, moreover, if he has done spending, or done hoarding, or done wasting? how, if he has not, he surely should not stop giving. When he ceases to waste, to hoard, and to spend, except for the merest necessities, then he may stop giving, but never till then.

Done giving! i. e., done lending to the Lord! Done sowing and watering! Done watering! Done offering the sacrifices, with which God is so well pleased! Done making the widow's heart to leap for joy, and bringing on himself the blessing of them that were ready to perish! Well, I am sorry—sorry for the sake of the poor, and the sick, and the orphan, and the ignorant, and the heathen. But no less sorry am I for the man's own sake. Poor man! poor with all his affluence; for there is really no one more poor than he, who, with all the ability to give, has not the inclination. He has it in his power to give, but not in his heart. He is enriched with abundance, but not with liberality.

Done giving! Well, then, if he will not give his money, he must keep it. And yet how short the time he can keep it! Had he not better freely give away some of it, than to wait for it all to be torn from him? The thought that he has given will be at last as agreeable a meditation in his dying moments, as the reflection that he spent, or that he laid up.

I hope that gentleman who said, "I have done giving," will recall his resolution, and take revenge on himself for having made it, by giving more liberally than ever.

TIME OF WEEPING.

[Continued from last number.]

BUT we can say something more than this. Whatever may be the reason for it, there is no doubt as to the fact that the deepest joy is attained through suffering, the highest exaltation rises from the depths of humility, hope in God springs to life when every other hope has been torn from the heart. And this is the lesson taught most constantly by a thousand conditions and analogies in this earthly life.

Everything which is best worth possessing even in this world, is ordinarily secured by efforts that are most painful and costly. The daily experience of this present life teaches us to sacrifice everything to attain the infinite inheritance of the future. We give toil, and study, and patience and pain for possessions that perish. Shall we be less willing to give all earthly gains, and life itself, for possessions that will crown us with glory and honor, and fill us with joy and peace through everlasting ages? We do not think it strange that the good things of this world can be secured only by toil, and sacrifice and conflict. Why, then, should we be surprised that the infinite treasures of the future, the inheritance which passes all estimate in value and duration, should cost us our all? Why need any one say, or think, or feel that a religion of self-denial and spiritual conflict is a forced and unnatural religion, or that the hope of an eternal and blessed life can ever cost too much?

It is to be feared that many entertain this thought, and that some even go so far as to ask why a Being of infinite beneficence need bestow his blessings at so severe a cost upon creatures that are utterly poor. Why should not the Supreme Giver take to himself the greater glory of giving without conditions, and making his unhappy children blessed without effort or sacrifice on their part? "Why," says the proud and perverse spirit, "need I be cast down and crushed before I can be permitted to stand erect and unrebuked before my Maker? Why must I be pierced through with the sorrows of penitence and self-abasement, before I am permitted to share the peace that passeth all understanding? Why should not the path to heaven be made easy, and all the walks of duty resound with music and gladness to allure unwilling feet?"

All such questionings and objections are not simply against the way of restoration and the theory of duty taught in the Gospel. They are against the whole constitution and order of nature; against the primary elements of our spiritual and responsible being; against the only way in which the sinning and unhappy can ever find peace. No experience or philosophy, reason or invention of man, has ever found rest for the sinning soul save that which comes through penitence and sorrow for sin. The deepest joy of the heart springs from the deepest humiliation. The most enduring strength and nobleness of character are built upon the foundations of patience and trust and submission to God. Tears are not always the evidence of weakness. Grief does not necessarily spring from despair. When one has sinned against a holy and merciful God, when he has committed a deep and dreadful wrong against the best friend he has in the universe, there is nothing more just or noble for him to do than to confess and deplore his sin in bitterness of soul. He will never recover his lost self-respect, he will never feel entitled to the confidence of the wise and the good, until he does. The Christian mode of building a strong and symmetrical character begins at the foundation by causing man to meet the demands of truth and duty as they are, and so giving him respect for himself, confidence toward God, preparation for all that the future may bring.

And so the Christian mode of cultivation combines great tenderness of feeling with great firmness of purpose, great susceptibility of heart with inflexible strength of will and unconquerable patience and endurance. A thoughtful man sees much in the world around him, and more in his own heart to make him weep. A brave and strong man, who had faced torture and death to do his duty in ancient time, said when contemplating the sin and misery around him, "Oh that mine head were waters, that mine eyes were fountains of tears, that I might weep day and night."

And the man must be very insensible to his own condition, and the condition of the world around him, who never has any such feeling. The trials of life are many and great, and the sins which we have all committed against God are flagrant and awful; and it does no credit to the feelings or conscience of any man to talk about such things as if they were trifles. Embittered and vain as are the joys of earth, the human heart must grieve for their loss or cease to be human. The earthly husbandman who would join the angel-reapers in shouting the harvest-home, in the great reaping-time of the earth's ripeness, must sow precious seed beside all waters, mingling his tears with heaven's rain and the night's dew. In his sore pilgrimage of trial and of sorrow he must have prayed many a time, in unison with the prayer of the Hebrew exiles in the strange land, "Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as the streams in the south!"

"The streams in the south," of which the captives sung by the waters of Babel, were summer torrents, flowing only when rain had fallen on the distant hills. In anticipation of their coming, the husbandman sowed the parched ground, and then waited for the fertilizing flood to flow among all the fields. But while it delayed its coming, he watched every gathering cloud; he listened for the sound of the wind that might foretoken the needed rain; he studied the reddening of the setting day; he noted all the signs of the earth and sky, if peradventure he might gather any promise of help from the distant hills, any hope of the returning streams among the valleys. He would carry every day a heavier load upon his heart while the clouds refused to form, and the whole air was hot and hazy with powder and dust, and the stony beds of the torrents were bare, and the fields were burnt with drought, and the food of the flocks dried up, and famine looked in at the peasant's door. And when at last the blessing of the skies came in a single night, there was music for the husbandman in the voice of the thunder, and there was beauty in the blackness of the storm. And when the morning shone upon the gladdening torrents bursting from the hills, and the reviving herbage rose with new life from the fresh baptism of the flooded streams and the falling rain, then the husbandman needed only a human heart to rejoice with tears of gratitude and to sing aloud for joy.

So from natural and necessary reasons as well as from divine appointment, must we all learn to toil and to wait. As faithful husbandmen in God's great field of the world, we must sow with tears and with patient expectation, if we would reap with joy unutterable when the pitying heavens are bowed and the gracious rain descends and ensures a plentiful harvest. The tears shed in the time of sowing give promise that the reaper shall bring home his full sheaves rejoicing. The troubles and sorrows, the temptations and burdens which try the spirit most severely, only help us on in the heavenly way.—Night Scenes in the Bible.

THE MOUNT OF OLIVES.

"EUSEBIUS," a correspondent of the "Observer," writing from Jerusalem, says:

"Apart from the sacred associations of the Mount of Olives it is one of the most interesting places in the region of Jerusalem. The view of the city itself is the finest to be had from any point. The summit of the Mount of Olives is three hundred feet above the area of the temple, on which it looks directly down, as upon the whole city which lies spread like a map before one's eyes. Every point in the city can be distinguished, and every mountain round can be seen, and, looking eastward, we see the Valley of the Jordan. The Dead Sea itself, although nearly twenty miles distant, and three thousand nine hundred and thirty-five feet below, is as plain to the sight as Jerusalem. If the view is so interesting now, what must it have been when Jerusalem was in its glory and the land of Palestine like a garden?

"I was greatly interested, when ascending the Mount of Olives at different times, in tracing out the path that David took—when he fled from the treachery of Absalom. 'And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and went barefoot; and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up.' Nothing in the history of the reverses which kings have suffered could be more touching than this. The scene was constantly recurring to my mind as I went up the mountain from time to time. I was almost expecting to meet Shimei as I passed over its summit. The Mohammedans were there with their curses if he was not."

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

WILL the European Congress, at London, secure the peace of Europe? The "New York Herald" suggests that the Pope of Rome shall preside at the great conference! The old dotard, with the loss of his temporal principalities, his epileptic fits, his last great folly, the Pope's infallibility, his fear to stir an inch beyond the confines of the Vatican, his eighty years of age, the Bishop of the Church of Rome, (what is he to the Church of Christ?) the idol of the faithful in that vast but unenlightened communion, his would be a splendid appointment.

Now there is greater fitness in the suggestion than might at first appear. The Pope is a broken down king. He was king of the oldest dominion in Europe. His throne had stood a thousand years. Archbishop Spalding says it should date back to the days of Constantine. We trace it to the time of Justinian. It is something like thirteen hundred years that the Bishop of Rome has had the authority of the "three that were plucked up," "three of the first horns," three kingdoms of the ten, into which Imperial Rome was divided. And the same three, at least (and sometimes almost all Europe), have been kept by the said Pope, until this blessed year of grace 1870. In 1815 he was given by the Congress of Europe the three States of the Church, over which, we know very well, he ruled as a king. He has no throne now. In previous interruptions, flights, captivities, he was an exile from his court and throne. Then the kingdom was there, now it is vastly different; he is there, but the kingdom is gone. Catholic prelates admit what they never admitted before, that the kingdom is gone; that the temporal power of the Pope no longer inheres with the good Pius IX., with the Vatican, or the city.

The earnest advocates of the papacy are now striving to show that he is a temporal prince, by right, and should have his power back. They do not observe the logic of events. The Congress will assemble to declare the peace of Europe—to preserve the old status, when it is already gone; to settle the Eastern question when it is already settled that Russia will do after her own imperial mind, in regard to the Black Sea and the Bosphorus. Now a Prince who is not a prince, who has lost his throne, will be a fit President of a Congress to preserve that which does not exist, and to settle that which has been settled arbitrarily, by one of the powers, after its own irresponsible pleasure. But who will guarantee that which remains of the peace of Europe till the Congress meets? Who will assure the world that the Eastern question shall remain in statu quo till the great Conference shall decide upon it?

Let us notice a few things. A dispatch from London, of the 8th, says: "The Russo-Prussian newspapers of Berlin and St. Petersburg publish strong denunciations of England." "Russia is almost certain to follow the notice for the abrogation of the treaty of Paris with overt acts, as already intimated, pending the assemblage of the Congress in London." "The Minister of the Czar is still pressing the Sultan." "A telegram, dated at Pera, on the 7th inst., says that Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Minister, assumes a very decided attitude in his diplomacy on the Eastern question." Another dispatch from London says that "The French Government will enlarge the Conference on the Black Sea question, but the attempt is discountenanced by the London and St. Petersburgh Cabinets, on the ground that it would endanger the assemblage of the Conference. Turkey is in preparation."

The contention over Earl Granville's reply to the second note of Prince Gortschakoff, in the Russian Cabinet, does not in the least imply that Russia will recede from her position. Note the following:

"ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 8.—A warlike feeling is prevailing over the whole Empire. The arrival at Sebastapol of the news of Gortschakoff's circular created universal joy. The notice given by the Emperor to the reserve corps to hold themselves in readiness is considered of great importance. This measure has not been resorted to since the Crimean war. Russia is committed to a bold line of conduct, and is resolved to carry it out in spite of all opposition. It has been announced by the Emperor that forty millions of roubles will be devoted to extraordinary war expenses. By the 1st of January 49,700 remodeled guns and 150,000 breech-loaders will be ready for use."

"TURKEY PREPARING FOR WAR.

"PERA, Eec. 6.—Councils of Ministers are held nightly during the feast of Ramseau. The fleet is under immediate sailing orders, and every preparation is made in anticipation of war. An American captain has organized a torpedo service. Generals Sheridan and Forsyth express great satisfaction with the efficiency of the Ottoman army. The earthworks at Odessa bave been greatly extended and extensive preparations for war are making at Kertch, but Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Minister, asserts that there will be no war."

Permit me to cite a passage or two from an English writer on this subject. It does not look like peace. Let us not be deceived. The Conference would result in a piece of patch-work or an open rupture. With France altogether broken down by the war, Louis Napoleon trying to limp back to the throne, by the aid of King William's crutches, the old imbecile Pope with his lost kingdom dancing like a departing spirit on his dreaming vision, England shivering and vascillating, trembling for fear of the great Autocrat on the East, and the giant Republic on the West, while two overwhelming powers shall rise to the point of supreme dictation. The writer says:

"As I have said, the one subject which has occupied men's minds to the almost complete exclusion of all others, since last Wednesday, has been the Russian note and the possibility of a renewal of the conflict imperfectly ended fourteen years ago. The snake was "scotched," not killed, and that party which, in 1856, in England, expressed its dissatisfaction at the terms granted to Russia, and loudly declared that the war was too hastily concluded and the peace a patched-up one, make good use of the proverb just quoted, and triumph in the realization of their prophecy. Again, I repeat, it is the topic of the hour. Versailles, Orleans, Paris, Bazaine, Von der Tann and Gambetta no longer monopolize every corner of our papers, every line of our news posters. From Vienna, Berlin, Florence, Constantinople to London, and from each of those cities to each of the others, messages of explanation, of confirmation, of addition and of denial, flash all day, all night long; but no longer about France and Frenchmen, Prussia or Btsmarck. Gortchakoff now is the monarch of the hour. In this statement there is no exaggeration. Until four days, even three days ago, "the war" occupied the most prominent position in every part of our newspapers, as it did everywhere the attention of the public. Now the telegraphic summary is headed 'Treaty of 1856,' 'Russia,' etc. The first 'leader' of every journal is devoted to that subject. However, all this is but a repetition of what I have already said—that Russia and her new claims have monopolized the position hitherto accorded to the great war.

"There is every possibility, every probability, in fact, that in the case of the breaking out of hostilities, some measure of compulsory service will be passed, including all men between certain ages, say between twenty and thirty or thirty-five years, with permission to buy off liability to serve for a certain fixed sum. This would not be a permanent measure, only a temporary one to meet the necessities of the moment, while steps were taken to everthrow the old system of recruiting by bounty and creating something analogous to the Prussian system. Up to the present moment nothing has been done, and the system of reductions inaugurated by Mr. Cardwell at the War Office, is daily lessening the country's power of resistance. Very vigorous measures indeed will have to be taken to place England in any thing like a proper state of defence. For the present her army is totally unfit for offence. The navy is the only power she can use to that end.

"LOOKING TO AMERICA.—To be obliged to fight with such allies as we can get—the Russia of to-day, plus Prussia and her victorious army—sounds rather appalling; but there is still, looming in the back-ground, a doubt which appears still more threatening. Men remember the entente that has existed between Russia and America for the past ten or more years, and now ask themselves what will be the attitude of the great men at Washington. I fancy it is generally feared that even if at the very outbreak of hostilities America does not demand a prompt, immediate and favorable settlement of the Alabama and other questions, and thus bring on enmity and hostility—even, I say, if this do not happen, it is feared that such a cloud of privateers will be formed in American ports as entirely to neutralize if not destroy, British commerce, and ultimately lead to a quarrel with the great West."

We see that peace is held as desirable, and we have only to consider the longing for peace, by all in Europe and America, in consequence of the devastating war in France, to understand how great the longing would be after all Europe were in arms—as it will be sooner or later, for the peace which the world cannot keep. To be the subjects of the divine wrath, as the old nations will be when the "whirlwind comes up from the coasts of the earth;" to suffer the succeeding tempests of desolation; to see that the times now require a still farther breaking up, will be to realize the fulfilment of the old prophetic word. The throne of Louis Napoleon is gone down, and the dynasty of the Bonapartes has gone to perdition. Is there any bottomless pit for it to emerge from now?

Napoleon III. may plot again with King William for his seat at Paris, but he will have to fight for it. He will never get it. The attempt would only plunge France into still deeper ruin. The old Pope, just at the time he gets his prelates to say he is infallible, ("she saith I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow") loses all that gives him authority; and now we must look for the advent of the great King, the desire of nations.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., Dec., 1870.

PSALMS. CX.

BY J. B. COOK.

WE have here the royalty, the priesthood and the triumphant conquest of Christ. In the foregoing Psalm, He is "the poor and needy" one crying to God for deliverance. In this, we have the answer, prophetically; in His ascension and session at the right hand of power, and the victory that He, himself, would achieve over all opposing powers.

I. He is called Lord (Adon, Heb. omitting the termination). Thus "Jehovah said to Adon, sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."—V. 1. (Jehovah, Lord, is put in capitals.—Verses 1, 2 and 4. Adon, Lord, in small letters, where printers express the distinction, v. 1 and 5; Matt. xxii. 44).

II. "David in spirit," then tells Adon, what honors awaited Him, namely, the rod of power to "rule in the midst of his enemies;" a willing people to join in the achievement of universal "victory," Matt. xii. 20; Rev. xvii. 14, 20, and the royal, everlasting Priesthood—confirmed by the oath of the Almighty! All which is so applied in the New Testament.—Heb. i. 10.

III. Turning to Jehovah, he rehearses, as in prophetic vision, the easy and absolute conquest, by Adon, v. 5–7, over all his foes. He shall strike through (crush) kings IN THE DAY OF HIS WRATH! He shall JUDGE among the heathen (or nations). He shall wound the heads over many countries. He shall set in judgment in the earth."—Isa. xlii. 4; Rom. xv. 12. In this great prophetic Psalm, the Lordship, the Judgeship and avenging victory of Christ, isthe crowning appointment of Jehovah to Jesus, the son and yet the Lord of David. It is oft enforced by the prophets and apostles of Christ.

A denial of this Lordship seems the culminating point of apostacy, in our age, as described by the apostles, 2 Pet. ii. 1; and Jude iv.; John v. 22; Acts x. 42.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

MURDOCK'S SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT.

GEO. W. YOUNG, 24 Chambers street, New York, will supply "Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament" for two dollars and sixty cents: this is 26 cents less than the regular price.

Note by the Editor.

Let those who wish that work send their orders as above. Mr. Young is reliable.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 4, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

FROM THE EDITOR IN HIS SICK ROOM.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN AND FRIENDS: I am unable to address you, with pen and ink, at present, and therefore do so, by dictation, through my daughter.

It is now more than two months since I have been able to read or hear read, our beloved HERALD, yet I am not unaware of the earnest prayers and cries to God, that you have offered in my behalf. In some good degree, those prayers have been answered; my life has been spared. I am slowly improving, and hope, ere long, to communicate with you, by mine own hand. My mind has been kept in peace, stayed on the Lord, and my meditations on his word have been sweet, for which I bless His holy name, and that of our LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ.

On this day, Sunday, January 1st, 1871, we enter upon a new year. First, then, I wish you all a "Happy New Year." Happy it will be, if we love God as we ought, and are, in all things, submissive to His will. It may be the year of Jubilee, we have so long and so earnestly desired. But, my beloved friends, be not too sanguine; God's ways are not as our ways, nor His thoughts as our thoughts. The climax may and will be sudden, but the work preceding and following, gradual, as all God's works have been. Therefore, let us all watch and pray, and wait with patience, for come he will, and that, at no distant period; this is our joy and our hope. All who thus watch and pray, whether asleep or awake, will enter into the joy of their Lord at his coming and kingdom. With much love to you all, yours, looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, and fashion it like unto the body of his glory.

GEO. STORRS.

THE EDITOR'S HEALTH.

BROOKLYN, January 1st, 1871.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: Two weeks ago to-day we wrote concerning our beloved Br. Storrs, and no doubt you were all much pleased to know that he was then improving. Two weeks you have been without a paper and without information, and you are all very anxious for the paper to come, and the first thing you will look at is the editorial column, and there you will find a joyful "New Year's surprise."

Br. Storrs, of course, is not able to write with his own hand yet, but how natural and good it will seem to see even his dictation in the HERALD OF LIFE.

He says it is to him a "Happy New Year indeed." It is also so to his family, and to others of us who have wept with him, but now rejoice. We, who have been with him and seen him when it really seemed as if the enemy, death would close its jaws upon him, and he would be laid away in darkness till the resurrection morn, feel as if he has been brought back from the land of the enemy.

We give thanks and praise to our covenant keeping God. O words are weak and inexpressive. We render to Him the adoration of our hearts in thus restoring one who has labored so faithfully, and who has been so useful in the vineyard.

We all feel that Dr. Miller has been the instrument in saving his life, and as Br. Storrs' daughter wrote me, "Money can never pay Dr. Miller for what he has done for my father."

We pray the Doctor may have a blessing for taking the case in such a seemingly hopeless condition, coming so far and going through in such a thorough untiring manner.

Now, dear ones, we know the above will be good news to you, and we love to impart good tidings.

We bid you all a happy New Year, and who knows but before this year closes we shall be in our peaceful and eternal home. We can't say positively, but let us be ready, with our lamps trimmed and burning, and like unto men that fear their Lord. Then we can look up with joy and say, "This is our God we have waited for Him; our King, he will save us.

HELEN ROBERTSON.

SISTER HELEN ROBERTSON'S residence for the winter has been and is at Dr. Miller's Hygienic Institute, No. 41 West 26th street, New York, where Water Treatment, Turkish Baths, Electricity, Swedish Movement Cure, etc., are given to those patients who become residents in the house and who desire it, together with all the comforts of a home.

H. W. S.

HERALD OF LIFE, BOUND.

ONE vol. of No. vi. and two of No. vii., for sale at this office. Price $4 per volume.

IMMORTAL SOUL.

THE doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the idea that man possesses in himself the principle of eternal life became so thoroughly seated in the human mind as to be generally regarded as a self-evident matter, and any attempt to prove the soundness of the proposition was looked upon as a useless effort. Almost universally though this idea was entertained, there have always been some who, taking the word of God as their only source of knowledge respecting a future life, have known and contended for the truth that man is by nature wholly mortal and can only have a future life upon conditions, but such ones have usually been esteemed subjects of pitiful delusions.

During the past few years, however, a change has come over the spirit of this great human dream. Science has itself undermined almost everything that was thought to be evidence of a possession by man of an entity capable of self-existence, and men, following the light of scientific development, have come to know the same facts concerning man's nature that the Bible reveals, but in death he is wholly lost to them. Science, regarded by many as the highest source of knowledge, whether as respects the present or the future, traces man from his earliest existence in life down into death, and there all life is lost to it. Hence the existence in the scientific world of very many what are called Materialists, men who believe there is and can be no life beyond the present. Revelation, agreeing perfectly on the subject with true science so far as the latter is able to go, reveals a life beyond that which ends in death. That life is a gift of God. It is to be had upon certain plainly stated terms, and comes by a resurrection from the dead. They who hold to this divinely revealed truth are sometimes classed with the Materialists spoken of, but never by properly informed minds. The study of revelation has marvellously increased in these latter days, and one result is a steady and marked unsettling of belief in inherent immortality, and a corresponding recognition of the truth on the subject. This development of truth is now assuming proportions which are justly thought to render it dangerous to the inherent-immortality position, and so it is now found to be necessary to try to support, by the best evidence that can be obtained, what has so long been held to be self-evident. Accordingly lectures and discourses of various kinds, in the pulpit and out of it, in defence of the crumbling doctrine have become frequent. Of course the Bible is seldom appealed to by men of liberal thought and experience, so well is it known that that Book gives no real countenance to the theory; and a contemplation of the vastness of the scope of search for evidence is as amusing as the character of the very best evidence that is brought is weak and pitiable. Intellectual attainments seem of no avail in these efforts, giants on other questions being mere pigmies when perched on this.

One of these lectures, by Ralph Waldo Emerson, was recently given before a large Boston audience. No appeal was made to revelation, and the lecture was manifestly designed to establish the theory against the attacks of rationalistic Materialists. "The Egyptians," said the learned lecturer, "were the people of the earliest historical civilization, and they were the first to affirm the immortality of the soul." This is quite true, and it must have been an unwelcome announcement to those defenders of the doctrine who profess to take the Bible for their guide, for with such the question must arise, "How came it that the heathen knew of it before God's chosen people, they to whom He revealed himself?" A pertinent query, and one not easily answered upon the assumption that the doctrine is of divine origin. And then, too, how about the doctrine of Metempsychosis—transmigration, which the Egyptians made a necessary part of immortality? It involved the immortality of brutes as well as of men. Indeed, it is a question whether it might not involve the immortality of brutes only, for it was held by very many that souls accomplished scores of transmigrations before they reached human bodies. Thus that animal only could be strictly said to have immortality which the immortal soul first inhabited. But the lecturer was not surprised that the doctrine should be held in a "base form" by the heathen. That the Egyptians, or heathen generally held it in a base form is a bold assumption, for it is a question whether the immortality of the soul as now held is not much more base and inconsistent than as held by many heathen.

While nearly all the arguments that are now offered in proof of the existence of deathless entities in human beings prove equally the existence of such entities in brute animals, the doctrine as now held denies immortality to them, whereas heathen philosophy accorded it. In many respects the heathen idea of immortal-soul-ism was superior to the present, and was less a libel upon the character of God. We presume it never occurred to Mr. Emerson or his hearers that the fact that the doctrine originated in heathenism and has been changed to suit the fancies of the various ages, without any reference or appeal whatever to revelation, is proof conclusive that the doctrine is a human invention merely, and is altered to suit men's tastes. It was asserted in the lecture that the Egyptians "seemed to think that the chief end of man was to be buried well, and with them masonry and embalmment were the chief arts in request." True again; and the fact shows that despite their speculations about their real life inhering in something within them, they considered the outward, the visible self the most worthy object of attention. The fact is strongly suggestive, too, of the thought that they did not right soundly believe what they professed to, an example followed by many in the present day respecting certain points attendant upon belief of the doctrine.

In his observations upon the teachings of the moral sentiment in affirmation, so supposed, of immortality, Mr. E. remarked that it "is strange that Jesus is esteemed the bringer of this doctrine." . . . "He was never weak or sentimental, and was very abstemious of speech upon the subject, and never preached the personal immortality." If any are in doubt as to the correctness of Mr. E.'s statement that Christ never preached the immortality of the soul, let them immediately institute a thorough search of everything containing the Master's sayings. Their doubts will then speedily vanish. They will, in fact, find upon thorough examination of the Bible throughout that the doctrine has no place in the word of God. While it is true, it is not quite proper to say Jesus "was very abstemious of speech" upon the affirmative of "the subject," his teachings, that bear upon "the subject," being all against the doctrine. Jesus did preach a "personal immortality," in the Scripture sense of that expression. He came and suffered and died that men may attain it. He soon will come again, and then will he reward his people with immortality by bringing them out from among the dead unto eternal life.

Men love life; they desire immortality, and the very existence of that desire is an overwhelming argument against the assumption that men now possess it, for people do not long for what they already have. God's love has placed the gratification of this holy desire within reach. It is only to be had conditionally. They who fail to meet the conditions lose life forever. We have said that in discussing the affirmative of inherent-immortality, intellectual attainments seem of no avail. This was notably exemplified by Mr. E. throughout the whole course of his lecture, but in no part more so than in the following:

"Two Senators of the United States, while in office, daily in the intervals of legislative work, engaged in conversation on the immortality of the soul. They separated at the close of their terms, and did not meet again for twenty-five years. The first interrogatory of each, after the usual salutation, was an inquiry of the other if he had in the interval got any light on the subject. The reply of each was, 'None.' They shook hands and parted, never to meet again." The lecturer remarked, says the report, "that in his opinion the impulse which constantly drew them to this theme, was a better affirmative evidence of the truth of the doctrine than their failure to obtain the light they sought was negative evidence."

It may be remarked, and truly, that immortal soul believers generally are satisfied with very slight evidence. If this were not so the doctrine would soon be without supporters. Two intelligent men, Senators of the United States, search through a period of thirty years for evidence of the immortality of the soul, and absolutely failing to find any, the impulse which led them to examine the subject is interpreted as "affirmative of the truth of the doctrine." Truly the doctrine of inherent immortality is not the only thing borrowed from heathenism. The manner of sustaining it is borrowed from the heathen mode of sustaining the credit of the ancient oracles. In answering the questions of those who consulted the oracles, care was taken to so arrange each reply that whatever the event the presumed reliability of the oracle would be preserved. When Crœsus, after making a most munificent donation, consulted the Delphian oracle in relation to his proposed invasion of Persia, he received this reply:

"Crœsus, crossing the Halys, shall destroy a great empire."

On the strength of the prediction, and delighted with the brilliant prospect of destroying the Persian empire, he opened the war which terminated in the loss of his own. When he reproached the oracle for having deceived him, he was complacently informed that the oracle had simply declared the loss of an empire, and that further inquiry should have been made as to whether it was his or the Persian that was meant. Just so it is with inherent immortality. Whatever happens, its advocates place all to the credit of the doctrine. If certain supposed evidence is sought and found it is well, but if not found it is equally well, for the very failure is considered "evidence of the truth of the doctrine." When they find the doctrine is not taught in the Bible, they say it is too self-evident for inspiration to notice, that the Bible assumes it, etc. All the sayings of Christ are carefully searched for some recognition of the doctrine, but, finding none, it is at once, with great show of wisdom concluded that the Saviour "was never weak and sentimental," and therefore he never "pleased the people with such pictures" as did "Plato and Cicero." Precisely so; it is certain he never did. When near the close of his lengthy lecture, Mr. Emerson remarked, possibly under a painful conviction that he had effected nothing in his attempt to prop a tumbling theory, "the real evidence for immortality" (inherent, of course) "is too subtle for statement." This is in reality just simply another way of expressing the fact that the doctrine is utterly baseless, and is alike opposed to reason and revelation. Had he made just this declaration in plain terms, he would have stated more unalloyed truth in few words than his whole lecture contained beside.

We have said, substantially, on other occasions, and we now repeat that we are impressed with the existence of a pre-eminent necessity for earnestly, persistently and in all respects faithfully setting forth those glorious truths we are banded to proclaim. Let us rescue all we can from the damning clutches of Spiritualism, falsely so called, and from infidelity in all its forms, and give our fellow-creatures better views of God and His character. May the Lord help us to be fruitful in this and in every good work.

L. C. T.

"UNREST."

THERE is a rapidly-growing sentiment in Great Britain that there exists a lamentable and dangerous contrast between the two extremes of society. It is shown that there is in London alone 137,000 paupers. Think of the vice, the suffering, the appalling moral degradation which is inevitable in a community where there is to be found so vast a number of destitute persons. And the very system which, it is claimed, tends greatly to augment the number of this class is productive of untold evils, bearing, as it does, with needless severity on a class of society which would be but too heavily burdened by the requirements of a government the most wisely and economically administered.

The "Reform League" recently held a large meeting in London, at which some severe and bitter speeches were made in contrasting the magnitude and condition of the pauper element to the immense income of the Queen. She draws nearly $2,000,000 a year on her own account, besides other large sums for the royal family. The people, educated and uneducated, are appealed to, to decide by ballot whether or not the present oppressive and evil-bearing system of government should not give way to the establishment of a republic. Whether such a movement ever meets with success or not, the time is not distant, we trust, when that and all other unjust and burdensome human governments will be compelled to a government established in justice and administered in righteousness. Let the faithful of every nation wait patiently, for the glorious kingdom will be set up in God's good time.

L. C. T.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

ALTHOUGH nothing of a particularly startling character has transpired in Europe during the past few days, the march of events has been steady, and the great European problem is being gradually and surely solved. It is thought by most people outside of France, that she has prolonged the contest long after the expiration of all hope of successful defence, and that the thousands of lives sacrificed in the hopeless struggle are simply so many murders. Nowhere, and naturally so, is this feeling so strong as in Prussia. A Prussian correspondent of "The London Times," writing of the bitterness of feeling against France, says:

"In Prussia there are many people and papers advising the Government to accept the surrender of the hostile capital only if it consents to deliver up not herself alone, but all France at the same time. In other words, Paris is not to be rescued from the pangs of hunger unless its Government and people ratify the German terms of peace in advance, and more particularly approve the cession of the two coveted provinces. The severity of this proposal will give you an idea of the tone of the public mind in this country. Arguing on the conviction that as the French began the war for vanity's sake so are they continuing it because too conceited to give in, although they know they have no chance of success, the Germans having been latterly denouncing the conduct of their neighbors in terms of increasing hatred and contempt. No matter how great the glory achieved by their troops, each successive battle adds to the irritation against those who have forced the citizen warriors of this country to leave their homes, suspend their industry, and take to the heroic. The Germans are certainly determined to go on beating the French as long as they will not concede them the terms considered to contain the only guarantee that peace will not be broken the day after its conclusion."

The bombardment of Mont Avron, one of the defences of Paris, was last week commenced by the Prussians, and it, together with some adjacent posts, has been evacuated. Mont Avron is among the most unimportant of the outworks, but has doubtless been made the first point of attack in order that the invaders may obtain a good position from which to operate against the outlying forts. It is likely that the work of bombardment, having been commenced, will be vigorously prosecuted, this first step being the introduction to a general shelling. Operations in the North and East of France have been active but no serious conflicts are reported.

A London telegram says that M. Gambetta has notified the Holy See, on the part of the French people, of his desire that France shall terminate the concordat with the Sovereign Pontiff, so that "the entire separation of the church from the State may be secured." Thus, little by little, though very rapidly, every appearance of Papal political power is being destroyed.

The Black Sea question assumes a new phase. Roumania, Danubian Provinces of Turkey, claimed a few days since that the Russian abrogation of the Paris Treaty is a nullification of her obligations enforced in that document, and she has now declared her independence. A dispatch from London, dated Dec. 29, says: "It has been officially announced here that the Roumania Government repudiates the Paris Treaty of 1854, and declares independence. The announcement has also been made in Constantinople, causing great excitement." This event, happening so soon after Russia's action in the matter, and in view of Prussia's treatment of the whole case, is strongly suggestive that there has been an understanding between the Czar, King William, and the reigning Prince of Roumania, who is a member of the house of the Prussian King. Altogether it looks as though Turkey is to submit to division. It is nowise probable that Roumania has taken this step unadvisiedly; if with the advice of Russia and Prussia, or either, they will sustain her. The matter lends a more warlike aspect to the Eastern question.

Affairs in Spain betoken a stormy experience for King Amadeus. It is somewhat doubtful if his vote represents more than a mere faction. Protests to his reign come in from every quarter. Opposition clubs are forming throughout the country, and they do not even take the precaution of secrecy. Republican agitators clamor for violent resistance to the new King. An attempt to assassinate Gen. Prim, a leader of the King's party, was made on the 29th ult. Both he and his Adjutant were wounded by pistol shot, and although it was at first reported that neither were dangerously injured, the General has since died. The young King's prospects are not bright. He should not forget that a neighbor of his some time since became Emperor over an unwilling people across the sea, and that now a mad ex-Empress is all that is left to remind Europe that the sister Empire ever existed.

L. C. T.

A NEW ORGAN.

WE are in receipt of No. 1 of THE BIBLE BANNER, bearing date January 1871. The paper is devoted to a dissemination of general advent truths. It is edited by Brs. John Couch, Wm. Sheldon, and A. A. Phelps, and is published monthly, at 240 Broadway, in this city, by H. A. King. We are pleased with its appearance in all respects except the diversion of so much of its space in advertising. We hope it may prove a success, and be instrumental in the accomplishment of much good.

L. C. T.

KNOWLEDGE AND SALVATION.

BY A. G. M.

I THINK it a very mild statement to say that very many Christians are not too ready to think that others professing to be Christians will be saved. We have so long been accustomed to judge men by their creeds, or opinions, that we often overlook the spirit within, which alone is the mark or sign of Christian character.

But knowledge is necessary to eternal life; and it is most needful to know how much or how little knowledge is necessary to secure life. No one will doubt that it is a knowledge of Christ, or of God, as manifested in Christ. Whether it may not be possible that some heathen have, without a written revelation, believed in the Christ character, and been imbued with the Christ Spirit are questions worthy of thought, but not very important to those believing the Bible.

"He that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." This is plain and reasonable, for no one can seek a thing until he believes in its existence, and further that some good or reward will come from such seeking. A knowledge of Christ and trust in him would seem to be the essential of salvation. Not a knowledge of a whole system of theology, of trinity or unity, of predestination, necessity or free-will—nor even a knowledge of the coming kingdom, or more than a faint glimpse of the resurrection from the dead. It is rather such a knowledge that the Christian, in his ignorance, puts his trust in Christ, believing that he shall receive his reward, though knowing little of what that reward shall be. It is easy to set up a standard of knowledge, without which no one can be saved; but with such a standard adapted to average intellects, how shall the very ignorant be saved? Faith may be strong where knowledge is very meager, the Spirit of Christ may dwell where learning and philosophy have no place. We think when we see men blinded by prejudice, that, if they would, they might see the truth, which to us is so plain. Perhaps they might, yet they remain ignorant. This they do, they trust in the name of Christ, and who shall dare believe that Christ will forsake them? Knowledge is most desirable, but who shall dare say in the presence of Him who came to save the lost, "Stand aside, I am wiser than thou?" Rather shall he not say, "The way is rugged, the night is dark, the winds howl and the storm beats, let me help thee, my brother, in thy toilsome way." Kindness is a better weapon against prejudice than is logic.

Again: Who shall say that he is himself free from prejudice and ignorance? Not many, perhaps not one. We can only feel sure that some are less prejudiced or less ignorant than others. We differ in degree rather than in kind. Christians live and die in hope of going to heaven. Though mistaken in this hope, if trusting in Christ, they will not be forgotten. We may fancy with what wonder the Christian may awake on that glad morning, and look about him to see whether he is really himself or the disembodied soul he expected to be. As a weary child full of anticipation of to-morrow's joys forgets itself in sleep, so the Christian full of the anticipation of heaven, may forget himself in death to awake at the resurrection. The Master knew he was in error, but he let him rest till the appointed hour, then called him to see a world he did not expect, a world none the less beautiful because unexpected. How much of error, prejudice and bigotry must be left in the grave! Do we always look with sufficient charity upon those who are bound by errors from which we have but just escaped?

The Christian religion seems adapted to the wants of all. The most ignorant may have knowledge enough to secure salvation, and the profoundest philosopher may spend his three-score years and ten, and yet scarcely begin to learn of God and the world to come. Christ will raise all his people, but each shall feel that it is God's goodness and not his own wisdom that has given him part in eternal life.

When we take into account the whole boundless extent of the unknown, the difference between the wise and the ignorant is but a point. God is infinite, and the study of Him in all his manifestations may go on forever, and yet He not be known in all that He is; for the finite can never measure the infinite. May not the most ignorant Christian, when once launched into eternal life, go on to know God in manifestations of which no mind has ever yet conceived? How dignified then is the lowest Christian! What a hope is within him, what a prospect before him! With Christ's Spirit as the germ, who can say what we shall be? Let us seek, then, first the Spirit of Christ, afterward all knowledge within our reach.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM STEWART CARLISLE.

BR. THORNE: We feel like giving thanks to our heavenly Father for signs of returning health to our beloved Editor. We wish to be submissive to him that doeth all things well, and yet we could wish to have him spared until the King in his glory shall come. The Lord be praised for raising up such men to scatter the seeds of truth, when the tares of error and superstition had well-nigh choked out the living truth of God, and men were groping their way in Pagan darkness, like blind men feeling after something upon which they could rely with implicit confidence. Such is the doctrine of "Life only in Christ," a doctrine which many well-meaning persons are not willing to examine. Consequently they have no hesitancy in denouncing it, and in some cases style it "the doctrine of the devil."

A few weeks since, this blessed truth found its way into the heads of three young men in this city, all of whom held official relations with a popular M. E. church. A stir was made, an excitement aroused, (and still exists) bitter feelings found vent in bitter words, and the (so-called) author of this state of things, was very charitably called a—a—"fugitive from Pandemonium, clothed in vestments of light, doing the work of King Diabolos, and deserving only banishment." These three young men were summoned to appear before a council of the faithful, and upon examination it was found that their position in society would be greatly endangered, their influence in the church lost, their worldly prospects dimmed, and they themselves in danger of losing character. Under this pressure two yielded; the other, having a better knowledge of truth, a longer experience, and the truth in his heart, was and still is unmoved. They were unable to make the pressure hard enough, for he had previously counted the cost. May this blessed promise ever keep him, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Thank God we believe it.

On Thursday evening last we both went to the church love feast, and opportunity presenting, felt like honoring the Master by bearing testimony, and as mine was the last, and I happened to say "eternal life," the elder took up the whip of denominational prejudice and cracked it somewhat smartly for awhile, but its music only pleased the faithful, as their Amens fully testified. It left no marks whatever where it was intended to strike. May our heavenly Father give us all that charity that rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.

"And now abideth faith, hope and charity, but the greatest of these is CHARITY."

Yours, in gospel hope.

WILMINGTON, DEL., Dec. 25, 1870.

FROM S. I. BRANSON.

DEAR EDITORS: On Saturday, the 3d inst., I met Mr. I. Redfern in debate on the following proposition:

"The Scriptures teach the soul is immortal, it will not die." Mr. R. affirmed; I denied.

He commenced his argument by saying that God has a soul and body; that He is immortal; that man was created in the image and likeness of God, and consequently is immortal. I showed that the "Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed in his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul;" that the living soul and the man are the same; that there was nothing added to this man, that was perfectly formed and made, to constitute him a living soul, but the breath of life. I showed that this living soul, or man had a law given him, and a penalty was attached to its violation, which penalty was death; that this "living soul," or man transgressed the law given him, and was condemned and sentenced to death, to return to the ground, "for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." I showed that this "living soul" (Adam) did die in whole and not in part only. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." We have no account of any part of Adam living longer than nine hundred and thirty years; his whole life and being terminated, and he died as a unit at the age of nine hundred and thirty years.

I showed that souls were to be cut off for eating leavened bread, Ex. xii. 15, 19; for doing work in the Sabbath, Ex. xxxi. 14; that souls were to be cut off for eating and touching things unclean, Lev. vii. 19, 20, 21, 25, 27; to be destroyed for doing work on a certain day, Lev. xxiii. 30; that man, soul and person are the same, and were to be cut off for uncleanness, Num. xix. 13, 20, 22. Joshua smote souls with the sword and destroyed them. Joshua x. 28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39, 40; xi. 10, 11. I asked the question, "Can intangible, invisible, indestructible, immaterial, immortal souls be killed and destroyed with a sword? My opponent answered, "No." I claimed that he had yielded the question, for the Scriptures here taught that souls were destroyed with the sword, consequently they were not immortal but were tangible, mortal, destructible and dying.

I showed that the wicked shall "perish forever," Job xx. 4–8. They shall "remain in the tomb," Job xxi. 30, 32. "All they that be fat upon earth shall eat and worship: all they that go down to the dust shall bow before him: and none can keep alive his own soul."—Psa. xxii. 29. "Behold the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy; to deliver their souls from death," etc.—Psa. xxii. 29. "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away."—Psa. xxxvii. 20. "He made a way to his anger; he spared not their souls from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence."—Psa. lxxx. 50.

"What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?"—Psa. lxxxix. 48. "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezek. xviii. 4–20. "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea."—Rev. xvi. 3. I showed that immortality and eternal life were the same thing; that it is to be sought after; that it is the gift of God; that Jesus is the resurrection and the life; that there is no resurrection or life from the dead but in Christ; that Jesus is the Life-giver and Vivifier; that he obtained the victory over death for himself and his saints, and is alive forevermore, and has the keys of death and of hades, etc. These, of course, are only a few of the proofs that I brought forward.

My opponent had cut his proof texts out of the Bible and pasted them on sheets of paper. He did this expecting to get a new Bible from me, as I had offered to give one to any person who would show any text in the Bible which says that man has an immortal soul. But he has come to grief; the judges decided against him. Mr. R. had any and all sorts of texts for his proof; seemed not to know which side of the subject he was on. He quoted to prove the soul was immortal and would not die, the following texts: "He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." "For this corruptible must put on incorruption; and this mortal must put on immortality." "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

I pray that the Lord will soon restore Br. STORRS to health, so that he may resume his wonted labors in the great field.

KEENVILLE, ILL., Dec., 1870.

FROM J. D. SHERIDAN.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: In lonely moments, when left to commune with my own thoughts, in the absence of your weekly visits, I am led to cry out, O how good the Lord is to give us his holy word; in which we are enabled to discover the true character of our Creator, the great and glorious promises to Israel, and of his boundless goodness in offering free pardon to a guilty and rebellious world.

But as the pardon offered to us is to be received only through the acceptance of the only mediator, of what avail will the death of Christ be to those who reject the offered pardon? It appears to me that all who reject the offered salvation must remain under the law of sin and death.

And as I look around upon ungodly beings who are persistently saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us," who are altogether given over to idolatry, and the church joining hands with the world in all the fashions, frivolities, pride and oppressions of the present day, I am led to exclaim, verily we are living very near the end of this dispensation and Gentile rule. And as we ride on the surging billows, and near the rock-bound coast, on which many a proud and boasting ship is destined to be dashed to atoms, how consoling and comforting to the weary pilgrim, who is watching and waiting for the return of the Life-giver, to read his comforting promise, "I will come again."

Comforting is it also to consider the work to be accomplished by the Lord of glory, at his second coming. He is to raise to life all the worthy dead, change to immortality all the living saints, and gather the remnant of Jacob. My heart swells within me as I meditate on the blessed hope. My greatest desire and prayer to God is, that I may so spend the remainder of my days, that when the Life-giver comes to set up his everlasting kingdom on the earth, I may be found among the number "which shall be accounted worthy of that world, and the resurrection from the dead," that thereby I may have an opportunity of doing in the kingdom some humble service for the Master, who I feel has already done so much for me.

Since writing the above, I am in receipt of Nos. 9 and 10 of the HERALD OF LIFE. The cause of their both coming at one time I am unable to give, but to me it was a joyous meeting indeed, as this is my only means of communion or exchange of views with any of the Life and Advent pilgrims.

I am unable to describe my anxiety to hear from our dear Br. STORRS. It was a long two weeks to me, I assure you, but inasmuch as it had been suggested by some of the brethren that under existing circumstances it might be best to discontinue the paper a part of the time, I felt entirely willing to abide the decision of the Editors. My heart was made glad to learn that there was still a hope of the recovery of Br. STORRS, and also to read the remarks of the Assistant Editor, in which he expresses such a fatherly care for the lambs of the flock, who are scattered so far away from the privileges which some are permitted to enjoy. May the Lord bless him with a liberal portion of the Spirit, that has so abundantly rested on Br. STORRS. May the Lord also, in due time, raise up to health and still more usefulness our sick brother, or, if it be his will, bring him down in peace to his grave, as a shock of corn fully ripe and fit for the Master's eternal use.

OSAGE, IOWA, Dec., 1870.

FROM L. B. LAMB.

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE: Are we not loudly called upon at the present time to have faith in God? The standard-bearers are fainting in the conflict. Have we not trusted in them too much? Hardy and reliable as they have been, they are but mortal men that may be crushed like the moth, and wither as the grass and herbs, while the Great I Am is from everlasting to everlasting, and changes not. In Him we can confidently put all our trust, and with childlike simplicity ask for the recovery of Br. STORRS, and all for whom request has been made. How rich the closing sentiments expressed in the Lord's memorable prayer. The petition closes with faith in God, for His is the kingdom, the power and glory. Then there is no room for failure. They who realize the meaning of this petition can express the hearty, amen, so let it be.

We may plead, in Jesus' name, for the recovery of these dear ones, for He said whatsoever ye ask in his name that he will do; also if we abide in him and his word abide in us we may ask what we will and it shall be done. These are perfect assurances, without any limitation. Our Father knows better than we do how much the cause of truth needs Br. STORRS. He also sees perfectly how precious the trial of faith in His children, being more so than all gold, that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, but will be found unto praise and glory at the appearance of Jesus Christ, who, though we see him not now, yet believing we rejoice with exceeding joy, and full of glory. His people are represented as the apple of his eye, and He guards them every moment.

We have naught to fear. In Him we move and have our being. Could words express more? Life derived from the fountain, with the promise of life abundantly even endless being. Transformed into the likeness of the Great Life-giver, we move by the same pure, unlimited source of power. What a motive to deter from association with evil, and from worldly conformity. All the elements of being derived from Him who proclaims himself the Lord God, merciful and gracious, slow to anger, forgiving iniquity. The mind is lost in contemplation while such themes pass in review, while with the apostles we exclaim, O the depth of the love of God! His judgments are unsearchable, and His ways are past finding out. The apostle John crowns our highest imaginings with the declaration that it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as He is. This, then, is ours in sickness and in health. Let us be steadfast a little longer, and all will be over.

ST. PAUL, Dec., 1870.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

BR. THORNE: O how sweet is communion with God and with his Son Jesus Christ. With what unswerving confidence in the promises may we in time of need approach the mercy seat, and while lowly bending by wayside, by the side of that old storm-beaten rock, or at the bed-side of the prostrate sufferer, shut out from our minds all the world, save those for whom we weep, and groan, and pray, being alone with the Lord; and as we have ever found him true and faithful, as in the case of Br. W. S. Campbell, with many others, and in my own case at three different times in the past five years; and now, Br. THORNE, please tell me why it is, that after so repeatedly and so constantly praying for our precious Br. STORRS, not forgetting his dear family, nor you and your office help, and glorious truth of future life through Christ alone; and when I see the multitude in the world, as it were just beginning to wake from that long slumber of false theology, and ask what do things mean; O my brother be so kind as to tell me if you can, when I rise from my devotion, with an assurance that the Lord hears and spares for the glory of God and the advancement of his truth; and I go forth with increased vigor for the remaining of life's mission; why is it that when our precious paper comes to me of late, my first impression is to see if its borders are surrounded with a broad dark line? Am I asking amiss? Should I rather ask the Lord to let the mantle of Br. STORRS fall on you, with a double portion of his Spirit?

O may the Lord help us, for vain is the help of man. May you and our Editor, with his family and his attending physician, be directed and blessed in all things that pertain to life and godliness.

My best love to all that love life and would see good days. I am still permitted to climb the rugged mountains, and search the winding vales looking for a bride for my Master. I am trying to love God and his truth, and to let my light so shine that all may see it and glorify God.

Tell Sister Storrs and her daughter to trust in the Lord and do good. So will he bring it to pass.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., Dec. 26, 1870.

FROM DANIEL HAWKS.

BR. STORRS: By the HERALD OF LIFE I learn with sorrow you have been near unto death, but now, with gratitude to our heavenly Father, that thou mayest recover; that possibly you may serve the cause of God and be at your post again for a season.

I feel truly grateful to our heavenly Father for delivering me from many errors which I had imbibed through the teachings of false theology, and for revealing his truth in me, as I humbly trust, through your instrumentality. You have accomplished much, and sorrow would fill my heart if you should be called to give an account of your stewardship, and I to be deprived of receiving any more of your friendly advice and instruction.

I like the HERALD OF LIFE because its columns are open and free to all to express their honest convictions of truth to each other, if expressed in proper language and Christian spirit, although it might differ with the dogmas of popular theology of the day, by which error is exploded and truth advanced. We should prove all things, hold fast that which is good and cast the bad away.

Br. STORRS, as I said before, you have done much to eradicate error and false theology, and for the advancement of truth and righteousness, through your books, tracts, pamphlets and the HERALD OF LIFE. But I am strongly inclined to believe there are errors, gross errors in the popular dogmas and theology of the present day; such as 1st. The immortality of the soul, which I believe to be the root of errors. 2d. The resurrection of all the dead to immortal life, and the eternal torment of the wicked, and souls of saints going to heaven at death in the presence of God, and knowing more than before death. These, with various others growing out of the immortality of the soul, which I shall call the root of errors, you have combatted and shown their utter falsity to my mind. And I feel truly grateful to the Father of all mercies, through your instrumentality and others, for delivering me from errors now promulgated from the sacred desk, and bringing me to see and believe the cardinal doctrine of the word of truth that God is love, and his tender mercies are over all his works.

There is one thing in particular I would like to have explained in the HERALD; that is, the Saviour's mission to earth. Was it, as some say, to reconcile God to man, to bear the wrath of God to man, to bear their sins, suffer the penalty of the law, etc., due us in our room and stead? These with several other expressions in regard to his mission I cannot see. I learn by his word He came to do his Father's will; bring life and immortality to light; fulfil all righteousness, and by precept and example teach men to be reconciled to God, and by so doing to become heirs of eternal life. In short, His mission was to affect us and bring us to God, and not to suffer and die and do something to affect and satisfy God in our room and stead.

ANDES, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

FROM MRS. J. P. BROCK.

DEAR EDITORS: Feeling it to be my duty, as well as privilege, to write a few lines for the HERALD OF LIFE, I will say that there is a small band of pilgrims here in Manchester who hold to the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. I believe they are of those that the Lord will be pleased to number with his jewels when he comes!

The Lord has blessed us with the labors of our much beloved Br. Stuart. He was with us three Sabbaths. We were strengthened in our hope of soon seeing the great Prince of life and glory, and were increased in the knowledge of the divine word. I feel to praise the Lord with all my heart that He is increasing the light of His word, and that there are venerable veterans in His cause who boldly and manfully stand up to defend the glorious dispensational truths that belong to us, the generation that shall be alive at the second coming of our Saviour.

Among those veterans who have ably and nobly defended the truth, are Brn. STORRS and STUART. It is my sincere prayer to the Lord that the life that they now have may be preserved until the Lord shall come and give them an honorable discharge from their warfare.

Under the labors of Br. Stuart in this place, attention has, I trust, been aroused in the minds of some to the great truths that he advocated, viz.: the soon coming of the Lord, and kindred truths.

I trust that the Lord will add to our numbers such as he will be pleased to recognize as His own when He comes.

We cordially invite any of the Lord's ministering servants to come and give us that portion of truth that shall be "meat in due season."

MANCHESTER, N. H., Dec., 1870.

FROM FREEMAN GLADDING.

BR. THORNE: Although personally a stranger to you and you to me, yet by your communications through the HERALD OF LIFE, I seem to be well acquainted with you. Should have been glad to have seconded Br. Grim's proposition to spare you, by a fortnightly issue of the paper, but was at the time unable to write. Should be sorry to do without it whenever it is issued. I am sorry that not only you but all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE are deprived of the counsel and cheer of our editor's words, for the time being. Yet the Great Shepherd knows what is best for his sheep, and will do all things well. I became acquainted with BR. STORRS in this city, in 1841 or '2, and took the "Bible Examiner" most of the time it was published and the HERALD OF LIFE so far. Would be very sorry to part company with it now. It is sometimes urged against the life views that nobody is ever converted by them. I recently met with a man in this city, who was formerly a Baptist, who says that he went to different churches, and heard so much that clashed in every sermon that he was nearly driven into infidelity, but, becoming acquainted with the Life Views, through the HERALD, was led to embrace them, seeing they were in harmony with the Scriptures, and harmonious in themselves, and now he and his wife rejoice in the truth, and are waiting for the coming of the Lord. May we all be ready when he shall appear.

ALBANY, Dec., 1870.

FROM DANIEL CHASE.

BR. STORRS: I take my pen once more to inform you and the rest of like faith, that I am as firm as ever in the faith once delivered to the saints. I say blessed hope, big with immortality, and full with the hope of eternal life—when Christ our life shall appear. He will reign until he shall subdue all his enemies, then he will be King of kings, and Lord of lords. Bless the Lord, O my soul, all that is within me bless His great and holy name, for all His dealings with the children of men. He does not afflict willingly. He takes no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but would have them turn from their wicked ways and live. He says turn ye, for why will ye die? In this faith God is honored. By it He is seen to be merciful. I can see in it justice and mercy combined. All who die in their sins will be as though they had not been.

The West is a great field for labor, and I am trying, in my feeble way, the Lord being my helper, to set the truth before the world. My inquiry is "What is truth?" But it seems that gross darkness yet covers the earth. When will men see God as He is? May he help man to know him.

FITZWILLIAM, N. H., Dec., 1870.

FROM F. E. DOWNS.

BR. THORNE: I am glad to see that Br. Boyd has given us his opinion in regard to where the next annual meeting of the Life and Advent Union shall (or perhaps I should say where it shall not) be held. I most heartily concur in his view and, without entering into any argument on the subject of a proper place, I would say it does seem to me that a more suitable point than Springfield might be found. Do you ask me to name a better? I have no choice, but think that almost any place south or west of that would be preferable; at least I see no harm in trying it once. But the Lord's will not mine be done.

Yours, in the faith.

MORRISVILLE, Dec. 20, 1870.

FROM HENRY F. LONG.

DEAR EDITORS: I am very well pleased with your paper. By reading it I have been strengthened in my faith and revived in spirit, and feel like making renewed exertions through Christ for eternal life. I too believe that there is no immortality out of Christ. I would ask you to pray for me so that I may with you be enabled to persevere unto the end, for I find that the crown is not in the beginning, nor in the middle, but to him that perseveres unto the end. The end I truly believe is not far off. The signs that were to precede his coming have mostly been fulfilled, so far as I am able to understand them. For one, I feel like lifting up my head, for my redemption is drawing nigh. Praise the Lord all ye saints, for it will be a glorious day when our Master comes to make up his jewels. May God's peace be with you is my prayer.

Yours, in love.

MILLERSTOWN, Dec., 1870.

JOSEPH EATON, of Leonardsburg, Ohio, writes: Especially do I feel under obligation to assist those in temporal things, who have ministered so much to me in spiritual things, as has my beloved Br. STORRS; and more especially now that he is prostrated by disease, brought on probably by care and overmuch labor. May the Lord restore him to health again is my prayer. May the HERALD OF LIFE be sustained, even should it be necessary to suspend it occasionally. It is as "a light shining in a dark place."

SAMUEL B. HILL, of Fair Haven, Conn., writes: Please find nine dollars for the HERALD OF LIFE for the coming year. It is what we cannot do without. May God's blessing rest upon it, and upon our dear Editor, and all concerned in its reading and publication. Your brother, waiting for the promise to be fulfilled.

J. W. DYE, Jordan, N. Y., writes: I think everything of the paper, and could not do without it. I hope soon to hear the Editor has been restored to health, and to see something from his pen again.

ALONZO BILLINGS, Northfield, Mass., writes: Please continue my paper, as I should as soon think of going without meat as without it. Indeed many are perishing for lack of the food it contains.

HIRAM DROWN, of Newport Centre, Vt., writes: I hope you will not discontinue my paper; I am in hopes to pay for it soon. It is the best paper I ever read, and I do not know how I could spare it.

E. A. LEWIS, of Ashland, Ill., writes: I prize the paper highly, and watch eagerly for the day of the week that brings it. I am glad to hear there is a probability of Br. STORRS' recovery.

L. H. BRIGHAM, of East Bethel, Vt., writes: Find inclosed my subscription for the HERALD OF LIFE, which I prize above all my periodicals. May God strengthen you, so that its weekly visits may be continued until the Life-giver comes.

GEO. ADAMS, Jr., of Attica, N. Y., writes: I cannot do without the paper, for it is the best that I know of. Hoping and praying for the blessing of our heavenly Father upon Brs. THORNE and STORRS, and that the latter may recover his health, I am with esteem.

APPOINTMENTS.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) Sunday, Jan. 8.

WM. S. CAMPBELL.

MERIDEN, Conn., Jan. 15.
SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 22.

CHAS. G. BARKER.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—Mrs. A. C. Holden, Jeremiah Chandler, Geo. U. Lewis, Henry F. Long, Wm. Turner, W. N. Houghtaling, H. Rockwell, M. P. Brock, C. F. Kittridge, H. Seitz, J. Mayell, Arzilla J. Bryant.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Jacob Deitsch, Mrs. P. C. Macomber, Elisha Piper, George G. Draper, Enos M. Smith, Lewis Watson, Osbert Arnold, L. F. Arnold, James Westover, Geo. Adams, Jr., Cephas Whipple, E. W. Young, John Whipple, Mrs. J. K. Conklin, Walter Patterson, L. H. Brigham, W. H. Cole, Henry I. Parsons, William Slater, Mrs. Teresa Brown, S. D. Morse, E. A. Lewis, C. T. Ellis, Sarah Joy, D. H. Metcalf, Chas. M. Burt, B. W. Matteson, A. C. Brindle, D. Brindle, T. K. Allen.

VARIOUS SUMS—J. W. Dye, $5; R. D. Chase, $5; B. M., $5; I. H. Elliott, $2 50; F. S. Mason, $3; A. G. Merwin, $4; Thos. Apthorpe, $5 on pledge; T. R. Crocker, $50 on pledge; Geo. Patterson, $4; Geo. U. Brown, $3; E. S. Westcott, $3.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Fliza Tefft, Henry F. Long, Mrs. A. C. Holden, Chas. Wesley Morse, E. A. Lewis.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

F. WINANS.—Your paper is mailed regularly.

MRS. N. B. SMITH.—Your subscription expired Oct. 1, 1870.

"We'll All Meet Again in the Morning."

Oh, wild is the tempest, and dark is the night,
But soon will the daybreak be dawning;
Then friendships of yore
Shall blossom once more,
"And we'll all meet again in the morning."

Art thou doomed in a far distant region to roam,
To meet the cold gaze of the stranger;
Dost thou yearn for the smile of the loved ones at home?
While thou prayest God to shield them from danger?
Ah! the height of the waters may shadow my form;
Yet soon will the daybreak be dawning;
And thou'lt mingle once more
With loved ones on shore,
For "we'll all meet again in the morning."

Dost thou miss the sweet voice of a fond loving wife?
Whose music brought balm to thy sorrow?
Did'st thou see her decline in the sunset of life,
Nor felt one bright hope for the morrow?
O, cheer up, dear brother, the night may be dark,
Yet soon will the daybreak be dawning;
Of all ties bereft,
One hope is still left—
"We'll all meet again in the morning."

Art thou wearied, O pilgrim, on life's desert waste?
Dost thou sigh for the shades of the wild wood?
Have the world's choicest fruits proved bitter to taste,
And mocked all the dreams of thy childhood?
Oh, cheer up, poor pilgrim, faint not on thy way,
For soon will the daybreak be dawning;
Then the dreams which have fled
Shall arise from the dead—
And all will be bright in the morning.

Oh, servant of Christ! too heavy thy cross,
Has thy trust in thy Master been shaken?
In doubt and in darkness thy faith has been lost,
And thou criest, "My God I'm forsaken!"
O cheer up, dear brother, the night will not last,
For soon will the daybreak be dawning;
The trials of earth
We have borne from our birth,
Will all be made right in the morning.

—Selected by I. James Schaff.

Divisions.

BY A. H. CLEAVES.

They at first appear to spring up spontaneously, but a second look will convince the dullest that separations usually have a cause.

Gilfillan speaks of a pious preacher named Greenham, who was called before Dr. Cox, the bishop, upon a complaint of nonconformity, and asked whether the blame of the schism in the church was attachable to the conformists or nonconformists? He replied, "that it might be attached to either or to neither. For if both parties loved each other as they ought, and did acts of kindness for each other, thereby maintaining love and concord, the blame would be on neither side; but which party soever made the rent, the charge of schism belonged to them." The bishop is said to have been so well satisfied with this answer, that he dismissed him in peace.

The apostle Paul entreats his brethren in this direction, saying, "Now I beseech you brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them."

The words in this passage require no explanation, yet they expound the apostle's meaning in themselves. He has not accommodated his Gospel to the tastes of the community around him, neither has he forgotten the uproar which his preaching occasioned in Jewry, nor the fact that the preaching of the cross was to the Greeks foolishness, and to the Jews a stumbling stone, and so he is careful to specify the persons to be avoided as those who cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which they had delivered. Not that divisions or offences were in themselves contrary to the doctrine which had been received, for if this were the case then the language would evidently contradict the words of him who said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword;" but the manner of bringing them about was the difficulty which the Apostle was denouncing in regard to divisions.

It was considered a ground of happiness by another apostle for a person to be buffeted and thrown into prison for the testimony of Christ; while of the person who was buffeted for his faults, he inquired what reason he had for complaint. So if we look at the history of the Church in the past, we shall find the preaching of Christ, and the declaration of the truth which he proclaimed a continual cause of division and offence; yet they were not divided against themselves in giving the testimony which they did, when men persisted in telling the truth. It is not unfrequently the case that religious assemblies are destitute of the forbearance exercised in a political caucus or town-meeting.

The rules of any deliberative assembly when respected and carried out, permit the members of the party assembled to express their opinions freely upon the subject before the meeting, and while they confine themselves in their remarks to the question, and refrain from making any speeches which are evidently insulting to individuals or the assembly itself, they are permitted to talk without interruption, and if they choose, diametrically oppose everybody else in the room in their views of the matter, and that too without constituting themselves the enemies of all present.

How frequently it occurs that an individual speaking in a prayer meeting, and differing from the majority, is looked upon at once as the mortal enemy of all assembled, and considered as making, in his remarks, a personal attack upon every one in the house; and immediately he is assailed with a shower of abusive language, his individual character slandered, while his remarks which may have been made without a tone of injury, are passed over entirely unnoticed. The apostle's doctrine was one of love, and while he proclaimed the gospel, he left no occasion of complaint for his enemies, and when accused by them his only admission was, that after the manner which they called heresy he worshipped the God of his fathers.

In accusing him, his enemies assumed a right which God had reserved to himself, the prerogative of judgment in things pertaining to conscience; and where the only accusation brought against a person is made in reference to his doctrine, his accusers have established one point at least, which is, their own ignorance of the first principles of Christianity. Dr. Hiscox has some valuable propositions in the Baptist Short Method. "The Bible he proposes is to be our only guide, source of knowledge, and standard of authority in matters of religion." As to the right of private judgment in the interpretation of the Scriptures, "every man has the right to read and explain the Bible for himself, being responsible to God alone for the correct interpretation of the sacred Word." In speaking of the freedom of conscience he says, "every man has the right to hold such religious opinions as he may believe the Bible teaches, without hindrance or dictation from any, so long as he does not interfere with the rights of others in so doing;" and of liberty of speech he says, "all men possess the right, not only to believe, but also to profess and declare openly, and without fear of harm whatever religious opinions they may entertain, providing they are not contrary to common morality."

Mark those individuals who in opposition to such wholesome rules, and in neglect of the apostle's language ("let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way,") go about, as it were, canvassing a place in the consciences of their hearers, and laboring to tear down what other men have built, together with their good name. They are usually known by their selfishness and egotism; their enmity is the gauge of their religion, and one of such, like the leader of a faction described by Samuel Butler, is generally a great haranguer, talks himself into authority, and like a parrot, climbs with his beak.

Avoid them which account the religion of Jesus Christ a field of pleasure and immorality, if they refuse to change their practice; and those whose ideas of knowledge are far in advance of piety and brotherly love in themselves. If you will examine the surroundings of those men, whose love of peace and tranquillity induces them to compromise the truth for such advantages, you will usually discever among the inducements to such a love on their part, a comfortable position occupied by themselves, which a declaration of the truth would be likely to jostle. Persons of this class are usually ready to expel a few with the truth they hold, for the good of the larger number as they explain it; and like Caiaphas are ever willing to consider it expedient for one man with the truth to die, rather than have the whole nation perish.

The tree is known by its fruit. Men of corrupt minds are usually crooked in their conduct, and the best indicator of the heart is found in the outward action. When in their anxiety to promote the cause of religion men become easily irritated, and manifest a want of that charity which suffereth long, and is not easily provoked, appearing to forget that God is a faithful and wise Creator, upon whom they may cast their care, feeling that He will care for them, they may be safely considered as wanting that lowliness and meekness which endeavors to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; and when men of gentle dispositions, who are kind to one another, tender-hearted, and forgiving, are despised and rejected on account of their faith, and induced to leave father or mother, or home and lands to feel the sympathy of Christ, "may they be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that they may be filled with all the fulness of God."

And may those men whose only business is to run down heretics, meet a light from the word of God which shall furnish them confusion equal to that of Saul of Tarsus; and finding such a reception, may they be led like him to leave their narrow profession and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us. May those who have obtained a better knowledge of life and immortality than others around them, be proportionately situated in regard to spiritual purity and brotherly love, remembering that the love of Christ passeth knowledge.

It was said at one time of the gospel movement, that if it came from God it was useless to resist it; while if it was from men it would share the fate of other enterprises which had preceded it; and an apostle writing at a later period of an immoral class of men, says, their folly shall be manifest to all.

If these statements were worthy of attention then, it may be advisable to consider them now; and while we avoid foolish and unlearned questions, let us hold fast the form of sound words and follow righteousness, faith, charity, and peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart; and where we find men following the doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, and patience which Paul exhibited in his life, let us receive them and show a preference for them, in the presence of conceited and impatient men who are too proud to be gentle and cease from strife.

While we shun profane and vain babblings, let us study to rightly divide the word of truth. Study the evident meaning of Scripture teachings, and as far as possible make the language of the Bible the foundation and frame of all our doctrine.

So associate line upon line, and precept upon precept; a passage here and another there bearing upon the same subject, that the meaning of the whole will be evident from the text itself; and so conduct in the daily walk of life that if an unbeliever were called upon to judge us his only discovery would be in relation to one Jesus which was dead, and whom we affirm to be alive.

Boston, Mass., Dec., 1870.

The Earliest Mention of the Aurora Borealis.

The first appearance of the Aurora Borealis in Mr. E. J. Low's "Natural Phenomena and Chronology of the Season," is that on Jan. 30, 1560. Other appearances are mentioned under the years 1564, 1574, and 1575. No further record of it appears until Nov. 10, 1707, when it was seen in Ireland. Five more displays are noticed between this and the memorable one of Feb. 23, 1716, which, happening to take place on the day of Lord Derwentwater's execution, obtained for the phenomenon in the north of England the appellation of "Lord Derwentwater's Lights." On March 6 of the same year occurred another grand display, which is referred to in the chronologies of remarkable occurrences published in the almanacs of the last century as "The Great Amazing Light in the North," continuing to be seen (more or less) at several times since, yearly. Previous displays in this century had probably not been visible in London. The phenomenon is thus described, with an attempt at explanation, in the "Flying Post" of March 8:

"Last Tusday night, as soon as it was dark, a pale sort of a light broke out in the north-west part of our horizon, which looked like the dawn of day, or rather like the moon breaking through the clouds. It darted many streams toward all parts of the sky, which looked like smoke. It proceeded toward the south-east and continued by several intervals till midnight, when it totally disappeared. Some ignorant people, whose ideas are on such occasions stronger than their senses, fancied they saw armies engaged, giants with flaming swords, fiery comets, dragons, and the like dreadful figures; and others fancied they heard the report of fire-arms and smelt powder; whereas there was nothing but what may easily be accounted for from natural causes, the sun having been hot for two days past, and particularly that afternoon, by which vapors were inhaled both from the earth and water, and the sulphurous particles mixed with them taking fire might occasion that light, and some coruscations, as is very common over marshy and fenny places in spring and summer nights."

The writer goes on to observe that "the disaffected party have worked this up to a prodigy, and interpret it to favor their cause," which accounts for a very obvious design to write the phenomenon down. Another display, not in Mr. Lowe's list, was witnessed at Leominster, on Feb. 21, 1718, as appears by a letter in the "Weekly Journal" of March 1. The streamers are there compared to the tail of the great comet of 1681.—Nature.

Children must be Led to God, not Driven.

A mother, sitting at her work in her parlor, overheard her child, whom an older sister was dressing in an adjoining bed-room, say repeatedly, as if in answer to his sister, "No, I don't want to say my prayers; I don't want to say my prayers."

"How many church members in good standing," thought the mother to herself, "often say the same thing in heart, though they conceal even from themselves the feeling."

"Mother," said the child, appearing in a minute or two at the parlor door; the tone and look implied that it was only his morning salutation.

"Good morning, my child."

"I am going out to get my breakfast."

"Stop a minute; I want you to come here, and see me first."

The mother laid down her work in the next chair, as the boy ran toward her. She took him up. He kneeled in her lap, and laid his face down upon her shoulder, his cheek against her ear. The mother rocked her chair slowly backward and forward.

"Are you pretty well this morning?" said she in a kind, gentle tone.

"Yes, mother; I am very well."

"I am glad you are well. I am very well too; and when I waked up this morning, and found that I was well, I thanked God for taking care of me."

"Did you?" said the boy in a low tone, half whisper. He paused after it—conscience was at work.

"Did you ever feel my pulse?" asked his mother, after a minute of silence, at the same time taking the boy down, and setting him in her lap, and placing his fingers on her wrist.

"No, but I have felt mine."

"Well, don't you feel mine now?—how regularly it goes beating."

"Y-e-s!" said the child.

"If it should stop beating I should die."

"Should you?"

"Yes; and I can't keep it beating."

"Who can?"

"God."

A silent pause.

"You have a pulse, too, which beats in your bosom here, and in your arms and all over you, and I cannot keep it beating, nor can you. Nobody can but God. If he should not take care of you, who could?"

"I don't know," said the child with a look of anxiety; and another pause ensued.

"So when I waked up this morning I thought I would ask God to take care of me. I hope he will take care of me and all of us."

"Did you ask him to take care of me?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Because I thought you would ask him yourself. God likes to have us all ask for ourselves."

A long pause ensued. The deeply thoughtful, and almost anxious expression of countenance, showed that the heart was reached.

"Don't you think you had better ask him for yourself?"

"Yes," said the boy readily.

He kneeled again in his mother's lap, and uttered in his simple and broken language, a prayer for the protection and blessing of heaven.

Suppose another case. Another mother, overhearing the same words, calls her child into the room. The boy comes.

"Did I hear you say you did not want to say your prayers?"

The boy is silent.

"Yes, he did," says his sister behind him.

"Well, that is very naughty. You ought always to say your prayers. Go right back now, and say them like a good boy, and never let me hear of your refusing again."

The boy goes back pouting, and utters the words of the prayer, while his heart is full of mortified pride, vexation, and ill-will.

Take my Hand, Papa.—In the dead of night, I am frequently wakened by a little hand stealing out from the crib by my side, with the pleading cry:

"Please take my hand, papa!"

Instantly the little boy's hand is grasped, his fears vanish, and soothed by the consciousness of his father's presence, he falls into sweet sleep again.

We commend this lesson of simple filial faith and trust to the anxious, sorrowing ones, that are found in almost every household. Stretch forth your hand, stricken mourner, although you may be in the deepest darkness and gloom, and fear and anxious suspense may cloud your weary pathway, and that very act will reveal the presence of a loving, compassionate Father, and give you the peace that passeth all understanding.

The darkness may not pass away at once, night may still enfold you in its embrace, but its terrors will be dissipated, its gloom and sadness flee away, and in the simple grasp of the Father's hand, sweet peace will be given, and you will rest securely knowing that the "morning cometh."—Congregationalist.

An Indian and a white man, being at worship together, were both brought under conviction by the same sermon. The Indian was shortly after led to rejoice in the pardoning mercy. The white man, for a long time, was under distress of mind, and at times almost ready to despair, but at length he was brought to a comfortable experience of forgiving love. Some time after, meeting his red brother, he thus addressed him: How is it, that I should be so long under conviction, when you found comfort so soon? "Oh brother," replied the Indian, "me tell you; there come along a rich prince, he propose to give you a new coat; you look at your coat, and say I don't know; my coat is pretty good; I look on my old blanket; I say, this good for nothing; I fling it right away, and accept the new coat. Just so brother, you try to keep your own righteousness for some time; you loth to give it up: but I, poor Indian, had none; therefore I glad at once to receive the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ."

It is said that the fresh water canal which was built alongside the great Suez canal to supply transportation and water for man and beast while at work, has already changed the face of the country for miles on either side of it, covering the strips of sandy desert with vegetation. Without an inhabitant ten years ago, this was a useless, dismal waste. But today towns and villages, thrifty and enterprising, stand at short intervals.

By one of the laws of Pittacus, one of the seven wise men of Greece, every fault committed by a person when intoxicated, was deemed worthy of a double punishment.

Habitual Kindness.—Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart, and secure comfort.

To live nobly, we must be noble; and we become noble by resolutely banishing every unworthy thought and feeling.

The French women of San Francisco have raised $50,000 for the benefit of the wounded in the European war, and have remitted the entire sum.

Children's Department.

Shut the Door.

"Don't look so cross, Edward, when I call you back to shut the door; grandmother feels the cold, wintry wind; and, besides, you will have to spend all your life shutting doors, and might as well begin now."

"Forgive me, grandmother; but what do you mean? I am going to college, and then I am going to be a lawyer."

"Well, admitting all that," said his grandmother, "I imagine you will have a good many doors to shut, if you ever make much of a man."

"What doors?" said Edward. "Do tell me, grandmother."

"Sit down a moment, and I will tell you of them," said the old lady.

"In the first place, Edward, the doors of your ears must be closed against bad language and evil counsel of the boys and young men you meet in college, or you will be undone. Let them once get possession of the door, and I will not give much for your future prospects.

"The door of your eye, too, must be shut against bad books, idle novels, and low, wicked newspapers, or your studies will be neglected, and you will grow up a useless, ignorant man. You will also close them sometimes against fine things exposed for sale in shop windows, or you will never learn to save your money, or have any left to give away.

"The door of your lips will need special care, for they guard an unruly member, which makes use of the bad company let in at the doors of the eyes and ears. The door is very apt to blow open, and if not constantly watched, will let out angry, trifling, or vulgar words. It will backbite sometimes worse than winter's wind, if it is open too long. I would advise you to keep it shut much of the time, till you have laid up a store of knowledge, or at least till you have something valuable to say.

"The inner door of your heart must be well shut against temptation, for conscience, the door-keeper, grows very indifferent if you disregard his call, and sometimes drops asleep at his post; and you may think you are doing very well, when you are fast going to ruin.

"If you carefully guard against the outside doors of the eyes and ears and lips, you will keep out many cold blasts of sin, which get in before you think. This shutting of doors, you see, Eddie, will be a serious business—one on which your well-being in this life and the next depends."—Child's Paper.

Don't Throw It.

One summer day a little four year old boy was rambling around in the grass, and watching the flight of the pretty birds that were playing around him.

Presently a beautiful bob-o-link perched himself on the drooping bough of an apple-tree which extended within a few yards of where the boy was sitting, and sat there as if fearing no danger.

The boy seemed astonished at his impudence, and after regarding him for a moment or two, he picked up a stone that lay near his feet, and obeying the instincts of mischief within, prepared to take good aim at the incautious bird. The little arm was thrown backward, and poor "Bob" was within an ace of danger, when lo! his throat swelled, and nature's plea came gushing forth

"A—link—a—link—a-l-i-n-k, bob-o-link! bob-o-link! a-no-weet! I know it! I know it! a-link! don't throw it! don't throw it! throw it! don't throw it!" etc., etc.

And he didn't. Slowly the little arm descended to its natural position, and the stone dropped to the ground. The minstrel charmed the murderer, finished his song, and continued his flight unharmed.

"Why didn't you stone him, my boy?" said a person who had watched the whole performance. "You might have killed him and carried him home."

The little fellow looked up, half sad and half ashamed, and replied, "Couldn't, 'cause he sung so."

So music has charms for children's ears and hearts. Music awoke humanity, and humanity aroused mercy. The bird—one of God's birds—was saved; yes, and the boy—one of God's boys—was saved from doing a mean and wicked thing.

Dear little boys, spare the birds. They are God's birds, and he feeds them—even the little sparrows eat thousands of bushels of the Lord's grain—and the Lord doesn't want his boys to stone his birds or break their little eggs.

Be merciful, little ones. Since God has been so merciful to you, and forgives your many sins, you too, must be kind and tender-hearted to all his creatures. Don't hurt the little pretty birds. And if you pick up a stone, and feel the mischief rising in you, "Don't throw it; don't throw it."—Selected.

No Use for It.—One day a class of boys was called out to recite the tables in arithmetic. When it came to ale and beer measure, one little fellow, noted for good lessons, was quite unprepared with the lesson.

"How is this, John?" asked the master.

"I thought it was of no use, sir," said John.

"No use!" cried the master.

"No, sir; it's ale and beer measure," said John.

"I know it is," said the master.

"Well, sir," said the boy, "father and I both think it is of no use to learn about ale and beer, as we never mean to buy, sell, or drink it."

The warden of the Massachusetts State-prison says:

"Eight out of every ten come here by liquor; and a great curse is not learning a trade. Young men get the notion that it is not genteel to learn a trade; they idle away their time, get into saloons, acquire the habit of drinking, and then gambling, and then they are ready for any crime."

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should allow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	"
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

George Storrs, Box 4,658,
New York

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 14.
WHOLE NUMBER 348.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

WILL THE WICKED DEAD BE RAISED TO LIFE AGAIN?

BY THOMAS READ.

PROPOSITIONS.

1. THAT the resurrection from the dead is a peculiarity; the distinguishing prerogative of the righteous only.

2. That the offer of life, and everlasting life to persons who will surely die, is equivalent to the offer of a resurrection from the dead.

3. That the offer of a kingdom in a future age, implies a resurrection from the dead.

4. That future life, or a resurrection from the dead, and the inheritance of a future kingdom are the purchase of the death of Christ, to be enjoyed only by believers in Christ, and are the distinguishing features of the Gospel.

5. That death is the penalty of the law to be inflicted upon all offenders. That death means, when applied to the wicked, the entire extinction of their being. The death of the righteous is the entire suspension of all the functions of life, they are said to sleep, because sleep implies awaking. The penalty will not be remitted to the wicked.

6. That the above are sustained by the general tenor of the Scriptures.

7. That the Scriptures contain positive declarations that certain wicked ones will not rise again, that others have already been annihilated at death, consequently they cannot be raised, and if some, then all.

8. That the wicked are never promised nor threatened with a resurrection.

9. That, finally, the non-resurrection of the wicked is the teaching of the Scriptures.

There are two sources of life to mankind; one, which is animal, pertaining to the present age, and derived from God through Adam; the life principle being contained in the blood: the other spiritual, pertaining to the age to come, the life principle being spirit, acting upon the organization, without the intervention of blood. The life pertaining to the age to come is only for those who become united to Christ by a faith that works by love and purifies the heart.

There are four Greek terms translated life, viz.: bios, zoe, pneuma, psuche. The first two only bear upon the issue before us. Pneuma, spirit, the principle of life, is sometimes put for life itself, as in Rev. xiii. 15, "And it was given him to give pneuma, life to the image of the beast. Psuche, soul; as the essential attribute of a soul is life, so psuche is often put for life itself. Hence for a man to lose his soul, is to lose his life, or to lose himself. Bios means animal life, the life we possess at present. 1 Pet. iv. 3, "The time past of our life," bios. Zoe means life, but in a more emphatic sense than bios. Zoe is often used for true life. The Syriac word for salvation and zoe are from the same root and both mean life. In the translation of the Syriac, we read live, Life-giver, life, instead of save, Saviour, salvation. When life is connected with the future age, it is invariably zoe.

Connected with our subject are the words, aion and aionios. Aion means age, a period of a shorter or longer duration, but limited. It sometimes means the period of a man's life, the jubilee of seven years, the jubilee of fifty years. The aions before the law, the aion between the birth of Christ and his second coming, and emphatically, the aion, or age of the Messiah. Aionios is the adjective from aion, and though translated "eternal" and "everlasting," it is always circumscribed within the limits of the aion to which it refers. It would seem awkward to translate it "during the age," "throughout the age," etc., but when aionios refers to the age of the Messiah, as that age will have no end, instead of writing "pertaining to the age," or "azical," it will be written "everlasting," with this disclaimer.

It is true that God has given to the wicked, as well as to the righteous, everlasting life, and it is equally true that Christ died for the wicked as well as for the righteous; but this everlasting life is vested only in Christ.—1 John, v. 11, 12, "And this is the testimony which God has borne concerning his Son, that God has given to us everlasting life, and this life is in his Son. He that has the Son has this life; he that has not the Son of God, has not this life." John iii. 36, "He that believes on the Son has everlasting life, and he that believes not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abides on him."

These passages, and they might be multiplied, prove that no man can have everlasting life, but such as are united to Christ by a living, fruit-bearing faith. But the wicked are not united to Christ; therefore the wicked will not have everlasting life, nor a conscious existence in the future age, nor obtain a resurrection from the dead.

Christ is the Resurrection and the life; none will be raised from the dead but by him, and through him; the righteous, having lived in the present age, will be raised simultaneously at the last day (of this age), or at the beginning of the age to come. Lazarus was not raised to everlasting, that is, to azical life, but to animal life, and died again.

We refer to John vi. 39v, "This is the will of Him that sent me, that of all which he has given me I should lose nothing, but should raise (anto) the same up at the last day. For this is the will of my Father, that every one that sees the Son, and believes on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise the same up at the last day." That everlasting life, or the resurrection life, is conferred only on the righteous; is taught again in 44 v. and is again solemnly declared in 53 and 54v. "Jesus therefore said to them: Truly, truly I say to you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, (63v. spiritually, that is metaphorically appropriate to yourselves, his sacrificed flesh and blood,) ye have no life in you. He that eats my flesh, and drinks my blood, has everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." The whole chapter from the 22 verse is a sermon on the Resurrection and the Life, and contrasts in many places, the destiny of the righteous and the wicked.

The righteous will have everlasting life, and consequently be resurrected at the commencement of the age, and the wicked will not be resurrected at all. Christ had just fed 5,000.

The subject of discourse is food. Some kinds of food preserve the bios, animal life, Christ offers himself as food that would preserve them to zoe, life, that would be life indeed. "Work not for the food that perishes," supporting only animal life, "but for the food that endures unto everlasting life, zoe, which the Son of man will give to you." Christ is the bread of life.

57 v. "As the living Father sent me, and I live through the Father; so he that eateth me, shall live through me. This is the bread that came down from Heaven. Not as your fathers ate the manna, and are dead;" (that is, shall never rise to life again) "he that eats this bread shall live, eis ton aiona, throughout the age;" meaning the age of the Messiah. To the Jews, this was equivalent to saying, that those whose carcasses fell in the wilderness would never be raised to life; while he that eats Christ, shall be raised, and he only.

Rom. viii. 11, "If the spirit of him that raised up Christ from the dead dwells in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also make alive again your mortal bodies (dia) on account of his spirit that dwells in you."

Those only will be raised who have the spirit of Christ; the wicked have not this spirit, and therefore will not be raised.

Mat. xvi. 18, "I say unto thee, Thou art petros (or a rock), and on this petra or rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell, (or powers of death), shall not prevail against it." As if Christ had said; Death for a time, may lay my people in hell, (hades); but shall not utterly overcome them; for I soon will redeem them from hell, by the sacrifice of my own life: but as the Father will raise me again to life, so will I raise them again to life.

Does not this promise that death shall not ultimately prevail against the church, prove that those not of the church will be consumed by hell, or death?

The verse says nothing about the supremacy of Peter. Paul was not at all behind the very chief of the Apostles. 2 Cor. xi, 5, xii, 11. But Peter had the keys, and he was the first to introduce the Jews to the Church, and also the Gentiles. Rock is feminine and Christ had to-day petra, when he spake simply of a rock, but he had to use the masculine petros for Peter.

The testimony of Paul in his sermon on the resurrection, 1 Cor. xv, is "If there be no resurrection, and if Christ be not risen," 18v. "then those also that have fallen asleep in Christ, have perished." "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

Here Paul takes it for granted that the wicked dead will not be raised to life; that they have already perished; and predicating all future life upon the resurrection of the dead, he exclaims, that the righteous also have perished, if there be no resurrection from the dead, and upon this supposition, all their hopes in Christ were confined to the present life. He plainly says, If there be no resurrection, there is no future life for the righteous, and certainly none for the wicked. If there be no resurrection, let us make the most of what we have, and all we have. "Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die;" and there is the end of us. But the Greek of the 18 v. is stronger still. "Arakai oi koimethentes en Christo, apol-onto." The two verbs are not in the perfect tense as translated in the English version, but are coupled together in the past tense, and will bear this construction: "Then those also who fell asleep in Christ, were annihilated when they fell asleep." Greek authors always mean the total destruction of the object to which they apply the active verb apollumi, and apolonto is the past tense of apollumi. Christian brother! why is it you attach so little importance to the resurrection from the dead? It is to be feared that many do not believe the doctrine, and so they alter the words of Jesus and Paul into the phrase, "Resurrection of the Body." But the Scriptures teach the resurrection of dead men.

(To be Continued.)

DIGNITY OF THE REDEEMED.

BY WALTER PATTERSON.

"HE that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." What a glorious motive to "give all diligence to make our calling and election sure." He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and be a son of God. What a dignity! What a position! When we think upon the glory and blessings in store for them "who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," we are lost in wonder and admiration at the greatness of God's grace; at the boundless ocean of his love. A child on the sea beach looks at the great expanse of water before him, but he can form no conception of its vastness. He may leave the shore, but the waters expand on every side as far as the eye can reach. The heaving billows tell of its increasing depth, yet he can form no idea of its length, breadth, or depth. Just so with us when we come to the shores of eternity, to take a view of the glorious dignity of them who have overcome, and are owned to be sons of God. We may truly say, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

We shall have a dignity of person. We may conceive a contrast between the lowest and the highest grades of human condition; we may see that poor despised wretched form of humanity, the very embodiment of poverty, disease, misery and wretchedness in contrast with a person of the highest condition of life, possessing youth, beauty and health, and adorned with all the accompaniments of wealth, yet what trifling contrast would that be in comparison to those who will be clothed with immortality, having a body like unto Christ's glorious body. Our bodies now are at the best but hot-beds of disease, that will soon consume our beauty and lay us low in corruption, but then they will be raised in glory, in power, in all the beauty of immortal vigor. Having borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly, and become "partakers of the divine nature."

But this dignity will not consist merely in dignity of person. If we are among this blessed number we will have a nobleness, a dignity of mind. In our present state of existence, how often we have to lament over the sinful, grovelling state of our mind, our proneness to evil, so that we are often led to exclaim, with Paul, "Oh wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But in the world to come, being fully redeemed from sin and death, we shall no longer be under the necessity of mourning over our wayward disposition, but will have that moral rectitude which is the foundation of all true dignity and nobleness of mind. So that we shall be all fitted and prepared for the high position we shall be called to occupy. It may emphatically be said, "Thy people shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever."

This dignity of person and of mind, will qualify us for a dignified position. Men will sacrifice much to gain some honorable position among the governments of earth. They will run the gauntlet of personal abuse, calumny, detraction of character, that their aspirations may be crowned with success. And even a petty office under such governments will sometimes fill the human mind with a sense of greatness. But what is the true Christian's faith, the Christian's hope? And what will be the reality of the Christian's position in the world to come? A judge, to judge the world, to judge angels. A prince, to rule in judgment, with power over the nations, to break the power of these oppressive governments, to execute the judgments written against them. "This honor have all his saints." To be kings and priests to God, to reign on the earth. And this regal power and authority is not of the ephemeral, transient nature that characterizes the honors of earth, but they will endure forever.

If some monarch of earth were to raise us from our obscure position, and adopt us as a son or daughter, with his assurance that we should be heir to his throne, would we not esteem it a high dignity? But what would that be in comparison to the "high calling of the Gospel—to the high calling of God in Christ Jesus?" "To be heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ?" But there is another thought with respect to the dignity of the redeemed. We will have the dignity of relationship. What a glorious, high dignity to be a son of God! To call God "our Father," and Jesus Christ our Elder Brother! Men feel proud of their ancestry when they are the descendants of the great, the noble, the good, but who can be compared to the Almighty God, "whose greatness is unsearchable," who is "glorious in holiness," and who is "abundant in goodness?" This is a glorious relationship, especially when we consider from what we are taken, born of earth, full of corruption, black with sin, wallowing in iniquity. The glorious God, the Maker of heaven and earth, the King of Kings did look upon us in love, touched us with the sceptre of his grace, bids us look up and live, breathes into our being new aspirations of a glorious life, making us "partakers of the divine nature." He assures us on the most reasonable terms, "I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord God Almighty." "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

This privilege is offered to the whole human family. It may be yours, it may be mine. It is offered on conditions. These conditions must be complied with, or the glorious privilege will be forever lost. The fulfilment of these conditions will constitute the worthiness of those who shall obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead. We must overcome self, the world, and all evil. We are perfectly able. "Through Christ strengthening us we can do all things." O let us be one with God. "Let us live by faith on the Son of God," who has become "the author of salvation unto all them that obey him."

FERGUSONVILLE, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

THY WORD IS TRUTH.

BY A. G. M.

CAN God ever threaten a penalty, conditional upon the commission of some sin, and then fail to inflict that penalty? Can the God of truth ever fail to keep his word when so given either in promise or threatening? To these questions there will be but one answer, he cannot. Did God threaten Adam, and in Adam all mankind with eternal torment as the penalty or part of the penalty of sin? The answer by a large portion of the Christian world is, he did so threaten. Did man become liable to that penalty, whatever it was? All agree that man did become liable. Will God inflict the penalty upon man, as he threatened to do? Those who believe in eternal torment, say that he will not so inflict the penalty upon those who are saved. Then has not God failed to keep his word? The answer is he has not failed, because Christ became man's substitute, and the penalty was inflicted upon him. Did God say that the penalty should be inflicted upon a substitute? By no means. Then God threatened a penalty upon one being and inflicted it upon another. Is it true that the word of God to Adam or man was that he should suffer eternal torment for the violation of the law? To me there seems but one answer: it is not true, for he said that man should suffer punishment, not that Christ should suffer it. That is, God did not say He would do one thing to one being, man, and instead do quite another thing to another being, Christ.

I am told that God has a right to substitute Christ. Has God a right to violate his own word? Some say that Christ suffered all that was due to man. Admit that he did, and ten thousand times more than was due to man, what has that to do with God's word given to Adam? Nothing whatever. God did not say, In the day thou eatest thereof, thou or some other being "shalt surely die," meaning "shalt suffer eternal torment." This is not a matter of theology or of logic, but of fact. Could God keep his word to Adam unless he punished him just as he told him that he should be punished? There would appear to be but one answer. Whatever man was threatened with, he must suffer. If threatened with eternal torment, God's word must be broken or man must suffer eternal torment. If the law says a man must suffer death for murder, the voluntary sacrifice of a whole nation cannot be carrying out of the law against the murderer. It cannot be the carrying out of the law in any sense whatever. The murderer must suffer in his own person or the law is broken. This is so plain that no statement can make it plainer. No more is the penalty inflicted upon Adam, or man, by the suffering of the innocent Jesus.

The fallacy lies in assuming that God threatened man with eternal suffering. The penalty was death, and death has passed upon all men. Even Christ suffered the penalty, though not on account of his own sins. The penalty was death, and it must be executed; but there was in that penalty no bar to prevent a redemption by giving a new life. Christ came not to prevent the infliction of the penalty, for the word of God had made prevention impossible, but to redeem, bring back after the execution. If God had said, "Thou shalt surely die, and shall never know a future life," the sacrifice of a universe would not have rendered a future life possible. The penalty is inflicted, man is mortal, he dies, the grave gains a victory. But Jesus gives life to his followers, robs the grave of its victory by a resurrection from the dead. How Christ can give a new life I do not know; faith must accept the fact which reason cannot explain.

Again: if it be granted that God could, without doing violence to his word, inflict upon Christ the penalty threatened against man, thereby allowing man to go free, as if he were innocent, is it not possible, nay probable that some other means of escape will be found for those who reject Christ? It is believed that the penalty of transgression was eternal suffering; that man transgressed; but because Christ came eternal suffering did not necessarily follow. It is now believed that eternal suffering will be the punishment of those who reject Christ. But if the word of God given to Adam did not make it certain that he should suffer the penalty, then the word of God never can make it certain that any being shall suffer in the future for sin. Upon the theory of eternal suffering, God threatened a penalty which he did not intend to inflict upon all men; and if the God of truth may thus disregard his word in the one case, he may in a thousand. If God's word can be truth and Adam not suffer the whole penalty of sin, it seems impossible to escape the conclusion that God's word can be true and every other person escape every other penalty threatened against sin. That is, God having failed to keep his word in Adam's case, He may fail to keep his word in every other case.

The truth is simple. The promise of the gospel looks beyond the penalty to a resurrection. The good die, not having received the promise except by faith. There is a land of darkness whither all have gone. The penalty has been inflicted. Faith looks through the thick clouds and sees eternal glory, everlasting joy, an endless life.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

NAMES WRITTEN IN THE BOOK OF LIFE.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names are not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."—Rev. xvii. 8.

From this passage many infer that the names of some people were not written in "the book of life" from the foundation of the world. In this we agree with them. But, perhaps, we may differ with them in understanding what is meant by those names. Some think they are names of individuals which their parents gave them. But, were this true, then the parents of every child must be infallibly inspired to give it the same name which was recorded in the book of life from the foundation of the world; and, it may be justly added, that the relatives and neighbors, in numerous cases, must also be inspired, for the name of a child often depends upon the notions of some of them. For this reason, and for the fact that in the majority of cases the name originates with wicked persons, who often change the name many times, we are forced to believe that there is no inspiration about it; and, therefore, it cannot be the divine meaning.

The word name in Scripture frequently signifies character, which will appear plain by reference to a few passages: "In Judah is God known; his name is great in Israel."—Psa. lxxvi. 1. God used the word in this sense when he spoke to David by Nathan, the prophet. "And I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and I have cut off thine enemies out of thy sight, and I have made thee a great name."—1 Sam. vii. 9. "Proud and haughty scorner is his name, who dealeth in wrath."—Prov. xxi. 24. [See Exod. xxxiii. 18; xxxiv. 5, 6, 7; Phil. ii. 9.] Hence, it looks clear to our mind that the names recorded in the book of life were the characters of those who shall be saved, and it is left with us as free agents to choose eternal life by seeking a character of holiness—of harmony with God—or to continue in the broad road which terminates in destruction. If, at the great day of the Master's return from heaven, our names are not found in the book of life, the fault will rest with us. God forces no man to be saved, but from blood-stained Calvary he offers to all full and free salvation.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. Dec., 1870.

TIME OF WEEPING.

[Concluded.]

THERE is a bird in Eastern lands possessing a form so graceful, and a plumage so brilliant with all the hues of heaven, that it has seemed to men too bright and beautiful a creature to be an inhabitant of this world; and as if supposing it to belong to the glory lost in Eden, they have named it the "Bird of Paradise." We are told by intelligent travellers that that bird never, from its own choice, flies before the wind. When compelled by fright or danger to do so, its gorgeous train of delicate plumes is disordered and torn by the favoring breeze, and soon the bird, so beautiful with all the hues of heaven, is wearied, baffled, beaten down, and all its glorious plumage trailed in the dust. But then again, let it mount upon the wing and face the rushing wind, and soon the dust is swept from the soiled plumes by the opposing breeze, the bird recovers her seemly shape and graceful motion, and ascends with unwearied flight.

The most beautiful thing in all this earth is the creature man when purged from sin renewed in the image of Christ. In his new creation he is the child of immortality, whose robes are Divine and whose destination is paradise. And yet even such an one, with angels to guard and God to help him, and his name already written in the book of life, can secure his promised possession only by struggle and conflict. To rise from the earth he must lay aside every weight—to reach his heavenly home he must face the storm. The favoring breeze of worldly prosperity will disarray the garments of his glorious beauty. The wings of faith and love will be soiled and burdened by worldly success. The abundance of temporal blessing will impede his upward flight, or even make him content to dwell in the dust. He must be willing to sow in sorrow if he would reap in joy. He must be bowed down with penitence and humiliation for his sins, if he would stand unrebuked in the presence of the King of kings.

And this penitence, this sorrow for sin, which the Gospel requires, is the beginning of all strength, all self-mastery, all nobleness of character. Let me suppose the case of a careless worldling, by accident or by contempt, entering the room where a little company of God's children meet for evening worship. Their heads are bowed low in the act of devotion, and the voice of one ascends in tremulous and fervent prayer. But he has not come there himself to pray. He looks around with indifference or with idle curiosity upon the supplicating throng. He cares little for that mercy which they are seeking with tearful earnestness. He takes no part in the confession of sin which they pour out with sighs and brokenness of heart before God. He has lived for this world alone, and his conscience does not rebuke him very sharply for what he has done. He only smiles while others weep around him. His heart is shut against all the appeals of the Divine word. He is insensible to the presence and power of the Divine Spirit, by which others are so deeply moved. He thinks it only a matter of course that he shall leave that room and say lightly that it was only from curiosity or to gratify a friend that he went there.

But no; while he is revolving such thoughts, a shock of deep seriousness steals over his face. His lip quivers with rising emotion. He has caught the deep feeling which is struggling in the hearts around him. He bows his head and covers his face, and tears burst from the fountains that had been sealed long ago. He begins to feel himself to be a sinner in the sight of God. He sees his whole life to have been a perpetual wronging of an infinite Friend. His whole being is seized and shaken by that sorrow which is the beginning of peace and joy.

And let no one call it weakness that he weeps. That rising emotion is evidence that his lost strength is coming back to him. The angel within him is getting the mastery over the demon, and he will be a man again. He is stronger, greater, superior in every excellence of character, now that he has shown himself capable of weeping for his sins. The penitence and humility with which he bows at the foot of the cross are infinitely nobler and better than the scorn that was upon his lip and the pride that was in his heart.

Let me suppose, again, a boy of noble and manly feelings to commit a flagrant wrong. It is done in a moment of thoughtlessness or passion, and regretted as soon as done. But his companions applaud the deed, and his pride is enlisted to deny or defend it. What shall he do? Confess and deplore the wrong, or shut it up in his heart to poison his peace and embitter his life? The tempter will tell him to disown his sin, and hide the sense of guilt in his own bosom. But if he takes that weak and wicked counsel, he will submit to be led by blind passion; he will bring on himself the intolerable tyranny of an accusing conscience; he will make himself a grief to his best friends; he will wound and destroy his self-respect and his peace of mind. He may assert his proud superiority to the relenting of a contrite heart, and the tenderness that dissolves in flowing tears. But he will only avail so much as to become "lord of himself, that heritage of woe."

But if, on the other hand, his feelings are deeply touched when he begins to reflect upon his misconduct, if the trembling lip and gathering tear indicate that penitence and sorrow for sin are getting the mastery of his heart, you may be sure that genuine strength and nobleness of character are still his. He will prove himself greater, purer, stronger by every tear that he shed for the wrong he has done. Joy will again spring up like a living fountain within him. He will reap the blessed fruits of penitence in gladness and peace.

This, then, is the conclusion to which we come. Peace must be sought through conflict with the temptations of the world and the wandering desires of our own hearts. This earthly life will be well spent if we make its whole course a pilgrimage to heavenly rest. Meekness and lowliness of heart are the qualifications for strength and victory. The kingdom of the blessed and the crown of glory are waiting for him who is willing to take his place in penitence and humility at the foot of the cross. Blessed are they that weep and mourn for their departure from the living God. Blessed are they that return from their wanderings with confession and brokenness of heart. They shall find their Father looking and waiting for their coming. Their names shall be written in his book of remembrance, and they shall be precious in his sight. —Night Scenes in the Bible.

THE CAMP-GROUND.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE UNION: The Committee appointed by the "Life and Advent Union" at the Camp-meeting last August, to select a grove and fit it up for our annual meeting, met in Springfield, Dec. 8, for consultation, and after mature consideration, voted unanimously to locate said meeting in Springfield.

Your committee have been very fortunate in securing a beautiful grove of about twenty acres. The trees are large, tall and shady; the ground is dry, with an abundance of good pure water, easily obtained by digging from ten to twelve feet. The grove is about one and a half miles North East from the depot on the Chicopee Falls road, and about half a mile North of Chapin's grove (the old Camp-ground). The grove, we think, is a very superior one, and when properly arranged, it will be a very desirable place to spend a week in praising and worshipping God.

The Committee have negotiated with Br. J. C. Day to fit up the grove, and to erect a boarding-house and preacher's stand, and his long experience in such things, together with his ardent love for the cause, is a sure guarantee that it will be efficiently and tastefully executed.

Now, brethren, we have done the best we could to find a pleasant and central location for our annual feast of tabernacles, and we appeal to all lovers of the truth to send in their pledges at once, so we may have the necessary funds to carry forward the work to completion.

"The Life and Advent Union" at the last meeting voted to raise $1,000 for this purpose, and opened a subscription paper, and nearly six hundred dollars were pledged.

We now publish the names of those who made pledges then, and hope to see others respond until the full amount is received.

All remittances should be made to Geo. K. Carroll, Treasurer, No. 58 White St., N. Y., or to T. R. Weaver, Secretary, No. 1 Opera House, Springfield, Mass.

COMMITTEE.—S. W. Bishop, Jacob Grim, T. R. Weaver, Geo. K. Carroll, Geo. W. Brown, Caleb Thompson, Dr. C. C. Barker, John C. Day, T. R. Crocker.

THOS. R. WEAVER, Sec'y.

Names and Pledges toward Fitting up a New Camp-Ground.

Bal. paid from Geo. T. Adams, Treas.,	$175
L. C. Thorne, New York,	50
W. H. Thorne, "	50
Geo. K. Carroll, "	25
Jacob Grim, Philada.,	25
Wm. Roworth, New York,	25
Three Brethren, Prov., (Caleb Thompson),	50
A. Powell, New Britain, Conn.,	10
J. L. Boyd, Philada.,	14
Mrs. S. F. Rogers, New London, Conn.,	10
T. R. Weaver, Springfield, Mass.,	10
Silas Goodell, Hartford, Conn.,	10
Cora C. Belden, New Britain, Conn.,	10
Thos. Wilkins,	10
J. O. H. Newton, Southwick, Mass.,	10
E. H. Glass, Vt.,	5
Thos. Thornton, New York,	5
Kate Clapp, E. Hampton, Mass.,	5
J. F. Whiting,	5
S. Cooper, (paid)	5
F. C. Upsil, Westfield, Conn.,	5
S. W. Bishop, (paid)	5
Mrs. L. J. Beach,	5
H. Kilom,	5
Miss R. J. Turner, Hartford, Conn.,	5
H. Rockwell, New Britain, Conn.,	12
John Oldershaw, Hartford, Conn.,	5
R. R. Bunnell, New Haven, Conn.,	5
John C. Day, (to be applied in work),	25

OBITUARY.

DIED, in Stetson, Me., Dec. 20, 1870, Eld. HENRY PERKINS, aged 61 years. Br. PERKINS for many years lived an upright Christian life. He was a firm believer in, and advocate of, the Bible doctrine of future life to the righteous only, and died in the faith of soon living again. He was sensible he must die, and made arrangements for his funeral. He selected a text, Prov. xiv. 32, to be spoken from at his funeral. We buried him in the "Stetson village" burying ground, where he rests in hope of future life, by "a resurrection from among the dead," which he will no doubt be accounted worthy to attain.

He has left a wife and children, and a large circle of acquaintances to mourn his loss. We feel that it is a loss indeed, for a "WATCHMAN has fallen; but we "sorrow not as others who have no hope." The funeral was attended by the writer.

E. V. B. EDGERLY.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 11, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

REMOVAL.

THE HERALD OF LIFE Office will be removed this week down one flight of stairs, to room 4, on the main hall, No. 208 Broadway. Entrance from Broadway same as before.

FROM THE EDITOR.

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS: My health, by the blessing of our God, continues to improve, yet I have been unable to write more with mine hand, this week, than the brief note attached to an article found on the last page of this paper.

I am enabled to walk about my room, and occasionally have been down stairs; but the latter shows me how weak I still am. The chief reason why my strength comes slowly, seems to be because my appetite does not yet return, and I am obliged to live on the simplest food. I trust this difficulty will soon be overcome. The Lord doeth all things well, and in due time will bring me forth to His work again, if He has more for me to do.

Your brother in Christ, waiting for redemption at His appearing and kingdom.

GEO. STORRS.

SUNDAY, Jan. 8, 1871.

THE NEW YEAR.

WITH our adieus to the old year just spoken, and our words of greeting to the new still lingering upon our lips, we pause upon the threshold of 1871, how fraught with startling events none but God can know until time reveals them, and look back upon the many marvellous changes that have made 1870 an ever-to-be-remembered one.

In many respects it has differed little, if any, from not a few that have gone before it. The same scenes which they witnessed were re-enacted in this. The many of all ages and classes in society have been unyielding, perhaps untiring in the pursuit of the same delusive baubles, the deceitful, flitting, elusive phantoms which have allured so many millions down to ruin in mad chase for happiness they promise but have no power to give. To appease insatiable ambition, the mire of the same noisy, fretting, bewildering strife which others have vainly wallowed in and finally turned in loathing from, has been recklessly plunged into. The few, with faces set Zionward, and with eye of faith firmly fixed on the incorruptible inheritance, have wearily journeyed forward, and, heedless alike that the wicked now rejoice and flourish, and that the righteous mourn, they increase in the inestimable riches of unfeigned faith, content to meekly serve the Master.

The weekly records throughout the year show much the same appallingly wretched and lamentable state of society. Casualties most heart-rending, very many of them the result of culpable carelessness and a reckless disregard of human life and safety; crimes of every hue and specie, with a marked heavy proportion of the more deep, dark and revolting have so filled up the measure of the year that a faithful record of them would tower mountain high.

Except, perhaps, the greatness of degree, in all these respects the past year has differed little from its predecessors; but when we look across the sea, and glance over the present political condition of Europe, we see that which, as we have already remarked, has made the old year an ever memorable one. Events of stupendous importance to the home-sick mariner upon the sea of time, have been transpiring. They are beacon-lights, and the hand of God has stamped their names so plainly upon them that a reference to the great chart, the word of God, enables us to take our reckonings with a good degree of precision.

When the great and proud Council met in Rome to do the Pope's bidding, the eyes of all studious ones were turned in that direction, and many of us said, "it is but the prelude to some startling occurrences." Some thought it might be this, and some thought it would be that, but few even dared to think of so much as the complete overthrow of the "woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martys of Jesus;" together with the beast that carried her. But so it is. He which ascended out of "the bottomless pit," and played so prominent and brilliant a part has, with his boasting rider, gone "into perdition." And still the hand of God is visible, gathering the nations together to battle. Still does He first permit them to cry war, and plunge recklessly into deadly strife "with confused noise and garments rolled in blood," and into confusion and strife of every kind, and then overrule all to the working out of his own eternal will and glory.

Since such wonderful and unexpected events have transpired in 1870, who can tell what more wonderful ones may occur during the present year? Who can say that the return of our absent Lord will not suddenly burst upon us? Who shall assert that ere 1871 shall be numbered with the past, Zion's King shall not descend with his shining angel host, raise from the dust of the earth his sleeping saints, change from mortality to immortality his living, waiting ones, take unto himself his kingdom and his crown and inaugurate his glorious and triumphant reign? Ah! who? We say not that it will be this year, or next, or the following, for we neither know nor profess to know, but we see not why the long expected and anxiously looked for glory may not be ushered in at any time. Pending that, the true position of the church is one of laboring, watching and waiting. Every watching one should be in a state of perfect readiness, "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Each soldier of the cross should be continually clad in battle array, having on the whole armor, and valiantly fighting the good fight of faith. May the Lord, when he comes, find us all thus doing, for so shall we be fully prepared to enter in to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

L. C. T.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

INFORMATION from London, by cable, dated Jan. 4th, is to the effect that the bombardment of the forts on the east side of Paris has been so effectual that only Fort Nogent now replies to the Prussian fire. The same dispatch says, substantially, that Paris advices received at Bordeaux reveal intense excitement among the population (of Paris) who demand that a grand sortie be made. A number of the Mayors of the city had called upon Gen. Trochu, and insisted upon his yielding to this demand of the people. It is also said that some of the Paris journals accuse Trochu of feebleness, and that a number of the Bordeaux journals express the same opinion. Fort Nogent, above spoken of, has since also been silenced.

A dispatch from Versailles to London, dated 6th inst., announces that the French army of the North, under Gen. Faidherbe, has been dispersed by the forces of the Prussian General commanding that department. Later advices, however, received in New York, contradict this, and give the victory to Gen. Faidherbe. A telegram dated, London, Jan. 7, Saturday, accords victory to the French and places their loss at about 4.000, that of the Germans larger in fearful disproportion. The latter would seem to be an exaggeration. Accounts respecting operations in the northern department have been so conflicting during the past week it is difficult to ascertain what are the results of the operation. It is certain, however, there has been bloody work.

Concerning the struggle immediately about Paris, a London correspondent of a New York journal says, by telegram, dated 7th inst., "It has got to be a common saying here that the French are eternally doing what they ought not to do and leaving undone things which they should do. It is a matter of much surprise and satisfaction at the German headquarters that they have been allowed to occupy Mont Avron, which, perhaps, could not have been prevented; but that they have been permitted to hold and use it against Forts Rosny and Nogent is something which cannot be accounted for. The Germans have used Fort Avron with such effect that they have speedily silenced Forts Rosny and Nogent, which now in turn can be taken, when nothing can hinder the Germans from thus getting, to all intents and purposes, to the rear of Forts Romainville and Noisy, when the suburbs of Belleville and Lavellette will be completely at their mercy.

The capture of Avron had a tremendous moral effect on the besiegers, and, as we learn by proclamation from Gen. Trochu, received here through a deserter, the besieged are terribly dispirited. There is nothing more certain than the fact that any sortie that will be attempted will prove unsuccessful.

I had an opportunity of learning from the lips of the deserter that half or two-thirds of the population of Paris undergo terrible sufferings—First, on account of food of all descriptions being very scarce, and next, because wholesome food is entirely unobtainable. Though the government undertakes to feed destitute members, it is practically impossible to preserve a proper distribution of such meagre rations as are procurable until many thousands have been from twelve to twenty-four hours without food."

The Prussians, it seems, have established several besieging lines on the North, South and East of Paris, and we may expect a speedy bombardment from other of those lines than on the East. Those on the South are already efficiently at work.

The facts concerning the war, then, appears to be that while the Prussians are meeting with some severe opposition, and though the French are effecting some repulses of the invading army, the Germans are, on the whole, steadily progressing. The fall of Paris, it is altogether reasonable to believe, must soon be an accomplished fact. Many people there are, of course, who are enthusiastic in the belief that the Germans will yet be ignominiously driven from French soil, but there is certainly nothing in the present condition of affairs to indicate even the possibility of such a result, looking at it from mere human stand-point. The armies of France have fought valiantly since the overthrow of Napoleon and his army, and have done much to remove the disgrace of that humiliating defeat, as human honor is reckoned, but there stands the stubborn fact that they have been prolonging a bloody, destructive and hopeless struggle. A large portion of France has been overrun by a, thus far, invincible foe. Although every French ruler for generations past has sought to make this overrun territory impregnable, nearly every fortification of any importance has fallen. Paris is apparently doomed, and so is the whole country unless the people resolutely demand a cessation of hostilities. But this, notwithstanding the vast amount of suffering that is heaped upon them, they will hardly be likely to do, for "madness is in their heart."

The Eastern question remains about as last week, little having since transpired respecting it. Jules Favre has informed Count Bismark, through Mr. Washburne, our Minister at Paris, that he (Favre) knows nothing of the European Conference, and will not leave Paris to attend it. Spain has settled down into comparative quiet. King Amadeus has arrived there and is on his way to Madrid.

L. C. T.

THE WAITING CHURCH.

WE so often and so greatly mourn over the wide departure of the professed church from the faith once delivered to the saints, teaching, as it does, for doctrine the commandments of men, and neglecting the great object of true Christian hope, the return of our Lord from heaven, that it is really refreshing and encouraging to hear an organ of latter day theology speaking upon the all-important subject of Christ's return. The following, under the above caption, is from the "Churchman":

"The position of the Christian Church since the departure of Christ from earth, like that of the Jewish Church before His coming, has been one of waiting. Having finished his work here below, and opened a way of salvation, having become the one offering for sin, and having established a Kingdom, a Body, and made it ready for receiving the Holy Ghost, He, in accordance with the announcement made to his disciples, went away from them, ascended into heaven, there to remain an intercessor at the right hand of the Father until his coming again to judge both the quick and the dead, and to receive his children unto himself.

For the first few centuries after his departure, and even down to the time of Constantine, his church was emphatically a waiting and a watching church. The thought of his return was the one hope which burned with increasing brightness in proportion as the darkness of persecution deepened. Watchmen stood upon the walls anxious above all things to detect signs of the promised morning, to discern the first heralds of his glorious coming. The apostolic faith in Christ was among other things, a faith in him as about to return and gather his suffering followers into a kingdom blessed and illumined by his divine, yet personal presence. He was regarded as an absent Lord, and therefore the nature of his presence on earth, in the sacraments, was not discussed. They regarded the whole existing economy both civil and spiritual, as only temporary. Many of them, and among them St. Paul, believed that the looked for coming, the 'blessed hope,' would be accomplished during their own life time. They thought of themselves as alive then, and were cheered with the assurance that they would not 'prevent them which were asleep.'

They accepted the parting benediction of their Master when he was lifted from among them out of sight, into heaven, in its literal meaning; believed as they were told, that "the same Jesus" would come again in the very same manner in which they had seen him go, that is visibly, personally, surrounded by clouds, not of mystery, but yet of glory.

That promise was thenceforth the central hope of his orphaned church—the comfort and stay of the espoused Bride. It breathed in every epistle, from the first, and the last prediction of the Apocalypse, "Behold I come quickly," was only a continued echo of what had been constantly heard since the hour of the Lord's ascension.

And the belief of Christians in that promise was, more than physical signs and wonders, the secret of their marvellous power of patience. This attitude of waiting for a Judge and Saviour, about to return; for a Christ, then localized as to his presence, only in heaven, yet soon to become localized on earth, separated the early church, by lines which no one could mistake, from the careless, self-seeking, and scoffing world. If men then speculated too much upon prophecies relating to Christ's Second Advent, they were thereby prevented from speculating upon other subjects which have since done so much toward making the unity of the church little more than a name.

But because the Christ of the apostles was a waiting Christ, and their church a waiting church, the faith was kept as delivered, and the kingdom remained unbroken all through that fearful night of persecution.

And it was not till the church ceased to watch and to wait for the Bridegroom's return that it showed signs of unfaithfulness. But when it forgot its absent Lord, and looked no longer for his coming, heresies and corruption began to rend and stain its heaven-wrought vesture.

This attitude of waiting, in which Christ left the church, should and must be preserved until the end. Every advent season through all the more than eighteen hundred that have come and gone, has brought nearer the consummation which seemed so near to those who first believed. Every moment of this waiting, every moment which lengthens the period of the Lord's delayed coming, hastens the hour of his return.

Let us then trim anew the lights that have been growing dim, and gird up our loins, as those whose word it is to watch, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

For while Christ waits, he pleads for the reconciliation of souls to God, through himself, by the Spirit, and for the building up of his saints unto such an image of his measure and stature as will make them meet for the promised inheritance."

We congratulate our neighbor upon its boldness in speaking out upon this subject, though we must dissent from the opinion that Paul expected Christ's return would occur during his day. At one time he doubtless did believe it, but many of his writings show he was taught otherwise. Speak again, and again, and yet again, and continue to plead the cause of our absent Lord, for thus will your peace and joy in believing be greatly increased. But remember this, and be prepared for it: As you thus speak, one by one your friends will forsake you, and say you are given over to vain delusions. Nevertheless, heed not the voice of unfaithfulness, but raise louder still the cry, "Behold thy King cometh!"

L. C. T.

BORN AGAIN.

BY A. W. BLAKE.

"And you hath He quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins."—Eph. ii. 1.

How often we hear it stated that such an one has embraced religion, and joined a church. This is the substance of the whole matter, so far as we are informed by modern teachers. A., B. or C. has entered an anxious seat, has gone forward to the altar, or has risen to his feet in a religious meeting in response to the invitation of some modern Evangelist, who has been around with his inventions and machinery, and with his little hymn book, singing to so-called enquirers about heaven, that happy place fitted up for their immortal souls, and of that other place invented by man out of one of Jesus' most instructive lessons, given in a parable; their names are written in the church book; in the convert's meeting we hear them relating their experience in about the following language: "I have made up my mind to be a Christian. I want your prayers. I will meet you in heaven." Now it seems sad to one enlightened, as he takes a view of that wonderful work done for every person born again. And is it not more sad to contemplate that such ones have none to inform them of the magnitude and mercy of the work done for every real birth to christianity; that such are left to a great extent to grope in darkness, never knowing what is truth, truth not having set them free?

Let us see what God in Christ does for him, and what through God's spirit, those called teachers should make plain to him. Tell him he has again entered the heavenly family; that he is no longer in bondage to sin, and has been transferred into the kingdom of God's dear Son; that he has passed from death unto Life; that he is now a joint heir with Jesus, God's own Son, and is made a partaker of his divine nature; has put off the nature of Adam, unbelief and all unholy affections, and, through faith in what Christ our great Redeemer has done for us, has put on and been clothed with a new Adam, in whom he shall ever abide, if obedient unto the faith; and now he has perfect liberty to approach his reconciled Father for all that Jesus is able to bestow, light, life, wisdom, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. That he has the promise of the life that now is, and also of that new and future life found only in Christ through a resurrection from the dead; has the promise of a new body, fashioned like unto Christ's glorious, resurrected body, and will be accounted worthy, through him, to live forever with him on the redeemed earth, our restored Eden. There are only a few of those things done in the man, and for the man born of God, through the Spirit.

Now we ask if converts to Christianity could be informed that this is the privilege of those who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, would they not set a higher value on the work of God's grace within them? Would we not hear less about backsliding? And would they, as many do all around us, cast aside religion, as not worth the keeping? Would they not, with Paul, say: Rom. viii. 35, 37, 38, 39—"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Our prayer is that God may enlighten those called teachers, that so they may in turn instruct others that Jesus came into the world to bring us life, and that life is in him.

STOCKTON, CAL.

OUR EARTHLY HOUSE OF TABERNACLE.

BY B. MATTHIAS.

"For we know that if our earthly house of tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands; eternal in the heavens."—2 Cor. v. 1, and on—

Whatever is meant by this positive language, ("we know," etc.) we know what the Apostle did not mean. He did not mean to say, it is a well-known fact, that to die is a pleasant affair, and to lose one's life is no loss but a good speculation, giving an old frail tent for an eternal house—an ivory palace, perchance. He does not mean to say either that death is no affliction, no privation. Nor does he mean to say, if you want to be present with the Lord, you must die, must leave the low associations of tabernacle life, and be ushered into the sublime, courtly life of the great King. We know also that the language does not teach that if one's corporeal life is destroyed, he can readily put on the "house not made with hands, which is eternal, in the heavens."

Reasons for our positiveness: The Apostle himself sustains us in this confidence. He says: "We have a building of God, a house not made with hands."

This house is not called heaven, where they say the good people go, but is in heaven, prepared for those who wait for it in good order upon the earth. Hear Peter on this subject: "Begotten us, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation; ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Peter. i. 4. Our Apostle also refers to the same house, this building of God, as a reserved inheritance, of eternal durability, in contrast to a tent life, and the present reliances, which are to be dissolved, and which things he calls temporal, in the last verse of the previous chapter. "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Chap. iv. 18. He speaks of the same inheritance in another epistle. He says Abraham and his sons tabernacled as strangers, in their own land, looking for this same great house. "He looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."—Heb. xi. 10. "But now they desire a better country, that is an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city."—ver. 16.

"For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is in heaven." In this the Apostle explains the foregoing and anything following, on this subject.

He desires the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, of which he speaks in all his epistles, in which are some things hard to be understood.

We would rather not be unclothed. We will put up with the present inconveniences of bad government, and a pilgrim sojourn, until we can have our kingdom. "Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour,—who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. iii. 20, 21. "For we walk by faith and not by sight."—4th verse "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan." —5th verse. "Now He that hath wrought us for the self same thing is God, who also has given unto us the earnest of the Spirit." This is what he calls the "First fruits of the spirit" in another epistle. We which have the first fruits of the Spirit, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body, "for we are saved by hope."—Rom. viii. 23, 24. In this he desires redemption for the body, not separation from it. So also in the text under discussion, he would not "be unclothed." If to be "unclothed" is to be dead, and disembodied, as many religionists believe, it is just what our Apostle declares against. The Apostle says, we would not be unclothed, but clothed upon with our house from heaven, that mortality might be swallowed up in life. Certainly this is desiring translation, not dissolution.

What is meant by "dissolving house of tabernacle?" "To be home in the body, is absent from the Lord."—(verses, 1, 6, 8. We will keep in mind that the "house" is not the "tabernacle," nor the "tabernacle" the "house." It is not the "tabernacle" that is to be dissolved, but the house of tabernacle or of sojourn. The following questions will make this plain: "The land of their pilgrimage."—Ex. vi. 4. "Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." Psa. cxix. 54. Our text does not read "House of this tabernacle"; but "House of tabernacle." We that are pilgrims do groan; we are in "affliction, necessities, distresses, imprisonments; in labors, in watchings, in fastings; as dying and behold, we live; as chastened and not killed,—chap. vii. 4, 5. And we can afford it, for when Cæsar and the Popes, great and small, have had their day, we will have a substantial house to take their place. The house of David, that will stand forever, whose king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. Officers shall be peace, and the executors righteousness.

To be home in the body, is to be absent from the Lord. Verse 6. This making ourselves at home in the body, or not, is a matter at our option. we may or we may not, as we elect. If we choose to be at home, we may save some groans, but lose the presence of the Lord. "For we walk by faith, and not by sight,"—ver. 8. Hence "we are confident" it is best to be out of communion with the body, either political or ecclesiastical. "Let us therefore go forth unto him, without the camp, bearing his reproach, for here we have no continuing city; but we seek one to come." —Heb. xiii. 13, 14. It is well for us, before we leave this subject, to listen to the Apostle's exhortation, touching this very matter. "O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you our heart is enlarged. . . . I speak as unto my children, be ye enlarged . . . . . Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrigheousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? . . . . Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord,—and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons, and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."—2 Cor. v. 11, 18.

I thought to stop here, but a thought is suggested. If the expression, "In this we groan earnestly, desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven," be so interpreted as to make the Apostle say, he earnestly desired to die, he is represented in a very improper light; that of a "master builder," anxious to leave his work at the foundation. Like a General of an army proposing to ground his arms when he is assured of victory. "I fight not as one that beateth the air," said Paul, "or like one in a race, confident of winning the prize, yet stopping before reaching the goal." Besides, what an example for an Apostle to set. To leave the church; to encourage cowardly shirking and selfishness.

Nehemiah said, "Shall such a man as I flee? Shall I go into the temple to save my life?" Far be it from our Apostle to practice anything so small. It can't be that those who so interpret Paul are in earnest. If they are sincere, they are not a little fanatical. If it was lawful and right and good for Paul to be of such a mind, it is proper for all. But as it happens those who allow our Apostles in this practice are very clear of it themselves.

Brethren, the example and exhortation of the Apostle to intelligent believers is appreciable, and easily understood. His earnest desire was for the kingdom to come. We, at this time, with the kingdom at the door, even entering the door, should intensify that earnest desire for "our house from heaven." His best advice to us is to be individuals; to be careful lest we neutralize our identity, and lose our personality in unconscionable bodies. He saw the mystery of iniquity working in his day. It came to a head long since, and still is. It is specious, seductive, adulterous Babylon, with innumerable titles ready made, and others made to order.

Babylon is composed of all who have ADULTERATED THE TRUTH, the promises and the word of God. All that compose Babylon shall be dissolved with fervent heat. Let us give their "beggarly elements" a wide berth. Let us not forget, night and day earnestly to desire to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven.

LANESFIELD, KAS., Dec., 1870.

WHEN AND BY WHOM WAS JOHN BANISHED INTO PATMOS?

BY B. F. THOMPSON.

THERE is a wide-spread opinion at the present day, and one that we often hear expressed by our Advent preachers, and see in our papers, and tracts, that John was banished by the emperor Nero. I wish to show that this opinion is an erroneous one.

Nero died A.D. 66, and the date of the Apocalypse is A.D. 96. Was John on Patmos all those thirty years and more? If so, when did he found the many churches in Asia Minor, that history informs us he did? And we must remember that it was his earnest labors in establishing these churches and his great zeal in preaching the Gospel that caused his banishment. Nearly all the early ecclesiastical writers mention his banishment, and they all, with a single exception, agree in attributing it to Domitian. He was a cruel tyrant, a persecutor of the Church, and reigned from A.D., 81 to A.D., 96. Ireneus, the disciple of Polycarp, who was the disciple of John himself, in writing of the vision of the Apocalypse says: "It is not very long ago that it was seen, being but a little before our time, at the latter end of Domitian's reign." This, it would seem, ought to be conclusive evidence with any one.

At what time John went to Asia Minor to preach is not known. Dr. Lardner thought it was about A.D., 66. So the truth seems to be this: That for about 25 years he labored throughout Asia Minor, preaching the Gospel, founding churches, and doing missionary work, and that he was banished to Patmos by Domitian about A.D., 92 or 94. That Emperor dying in 96, his successor, Nerva, soon released John and he returned to Ephesus, where he died about A.D., 100, being nearly if not quite one hundred years old. How the idea that John was banished by Nero has been made to prevail so widely I know not. Sir Isaac Newton advanced the idea, but his arguments were ably and learnedly refuted by Dr. Lardner.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Dec., 1870.

THE ROMAN QUESTION.

BY MRS. JOHN PELL.

I HAVE read the various articles in the paper on the Roman question, and as yet have seen nothing clearly satisfactory to our minds. It appears to us there have been some of the points of the prophecy overlooked. It is generally understood by prophetic students that the beast, of Rev xvii. is the Napoleonic Dynasty, and the woman that sits upon it is Papacy, having its seat at Rome. The ten horns upon, or, as the Syriac reads, with the beast, are the ten kingdoms, or principalities of Italy. These ten horns are represented as having one mind, and giving their power and strength to the beast. They are also to hate the harlot, and make her desolate, and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire. It is well known that the Pope has, since 1848, only kept his temporal power in Rome by the aid of French troops, therefore she (the harlot) sat upon the beast, and while Napoleon has been supporting this power at Rome he has allowed the ten horns (the Italians) to pick the Pope's pockets, to make her desolate and naked, eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. In the 17th verse of the above chapter it reads: "For God has put in their hearts to fulfil his will and to agree and give their kingdom to the beast until the words of God shall be fulfilled."

How marked is the prophecy; and we think here is the point that has been overlooked since the downfall of Napoleon. The ten horns are to fulfil the will of God, and to agree and give their kingdom to the Napoleonic beast until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

Let us examine and see what are the words of God to be fulfilled. We turn to 2d Thessalonians, chapter ii, Paul's "man of sin" is to oppose and exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God (The Pope declaring his infallibility.) Again: Dan. vii. 2, "I behold then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake." (Declaring himself Infallible.) How marked is the prophecy?

These shall hate the harlot and give their kingdom to the beast until the words of God shall be fulfilled. We will see how the events have marked the correctness of the prophecy.

The Pope declared his infallibility on the 19th day of July, 1870, on the 22d of the same month Napoleon declared war against Prussia; and eight days after, the French troops had all left Rome, leaving the infallible one to take care of himself. On the 19th day of July the words of God were fulfilled, and then the harlot power could sit upon the Napoleonic beast no longer, and the ten horns ceased with the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome, to give their power and kingdom to the beast. The words of God having been fulfilled, there was no further use for Napoleon.

The ten horns have taken possession of Rome, proclaimed it the Capitol of the Nation, and have confiscated the Pope's property. In the 18th chapter of Rev. we read that her plagues shall come in one day, death, mourning and famine. Death, we understand to be the loss of her temporal power. The mourning has already commenced. Great efforts are making at present by the Roman Catholics of England, Ireland and the United States to make the most of the present position of the Pope, as a prisoner, as he calls himself, in the hands of the Italian Government. Protests, not only against the indignities offered to the Pope, as a sovereign, but against the occupation of Rome by the Italians are made from nearly all their churches, especially in cities, and many efforts made to get up excitement on the subject.

A monster demonstration was held by the Catholics of Philadelphia, on Sunday, Dec. 4, and meetings were held in all the churches of that denomination in New York city, to consider the same subject. A protest by the Archbishop of Westminster was read in all the London churches on the same day, denouncing the act as sacreligious and treasonable, and also subversive of religion and morality.

This we understand to be the commencement of the mourning, and in the end she is to be overthrown with violence, and be found no more at all. Such, we think, is the fulfilment of the prophecy.

Even if Napoleon should be reinstated on the throne of France, an event not improbable, he cannot reinstate Papacy at Rome. We notice that some writers are of the opinion that the city mentioned, Rev. xviii., is Paris; but that, we think, cannot be, as Paris is not built on seven mountains, neither has it reigned over the kings of the earth. Rome has done that; she is Babylon, the highest dignitaries of the Papal church having ruled there. But there is every reason to suppose that Paris is the city of Rev. xvi. 19: "And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and Great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath." The Syriac translation reads, "the city of the nations fell; and Great Babylon came in remembrance before God." Paris is evidently the city of the nations. She is called the queen city. The French say it is not Paris that is blockaded, but the rest of the world. It looks at present as though the city of the nations will soon fall. And what next? Great Babylon comes in remembrance before God, She will go down with violence. Such, we think, is and will be the fulfilment of the prophecy. Let us watch and be sober, for at hand are great events that may usher in the coming of the King of kings.

PLEASANT VALLEY, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

UNFEIGNED FAITH.

"I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day; greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy; when I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also."—2 Tim. i. 3-5.

HERE we have something above and beyond everything ecclesiastical—something which one must have ere he is introduced to the church, and which will stand good though the church were in ruins around him. This unfeigned faith connects the soul immediately with Christ, in the power of a link which must of necessity be anterior to all ecclesiastical associations, how important soever they may be in their due place—a link which shall endure when all earthly associations shall have been dissolved forever.

We do not get to Christ through the church. We get to Christ first, and then to the church. Christ is our life, not the church. No doubt church fellowship is most valuable, but there is something above and beyond it, and it is of that something that "unfeigned faith" takes possession. Timothy had his faith dwelling in him before ever he entered the house of God. He was connected with the God of the house, previous to his manifested association with the house of God. It is well to be so clear as to this.

We must never surrender the intense individuality which characterizes "unfeigned faith." We must carry it with us through all the scenes and circumstances, the links and associations of our Christian life and services. We must not traffic in mere church position, or build upon religious machinery, or be upborne by a routine duty, or cling to the worthless props of sectarian sympathy or denominational predilection. Let us cultivate those fresh, vivid and powerful affections which were created in our hearts when first we knew the Lord. Let the beauteous blossom of our spring-time be succeeded, not by barrenness and sterility, but by those mellow clusters which spring from realized connection with the root. Too often, alas! it is otherwise. Too often the earnest, zealous, simple-hearted young Christian is lost in the bigoted, narrow-minded member of a sect, or the intolerant defender of some peculiar opinion. The freshness, softness, simplicity, tenderness, and earnest affection of our young days, are rarely carried forward into the advanced stages of vigorous manhood and mature old age. Very frequently one finds a depth of tone, a richness of experience, a moral elevation in the early stages of the Christian life, which too soon gives place to a chilling formalism in one's personal ways, or a mere energy in the defence of some barren system of theology. How rarely are those words of the Psalmist realized: "They shall bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing."—Psa. xcii. 14.

The truth is, we all want to cultivate, more diligently, an "unfeigned faith." We want to enter, with more spiritual vigor, into the power of the link which binds us individually to Christ. This would render us "fat and flourishing" even in old age. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree;" he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God." We suffer materially by allowing what is called Christian intercourse to interfere with our personal connection and communion with Christ. We are far too prone to substitute intercourse with man for intercourse with God, to walk in the footsteps of our fellow-man rather than in the footsteps of Christ, to look around rather than upward for sympathy, support and encouragement. These are not the fruits of "unfeigned faith." Quite the opposite. That faith is as blooming and vigorous amid the solitudes of a desert as in the bosom of an assembly. Its immediate, its all-engrossing business is with God himself. "It endures as seeing him who is invisible." It fixes its earnest gaze upon things unseen and eternal. "It enters into that within the veil." It lives amid the unseen realities of an eternal world. Having conducted the creature to the feet of Jesus, there to get a full and final forgiveness of all sin, through his most precious blood, it bears him majestically onward through all the windings and labyrinths of desert life, and enables him to bask in the bright beams of millenial glory.

Thus much as to this most precious item in the divine provision for "perilous times"—this "unfeigned faith." No one can ever get on without it, let the times be peaceful or perilous, easy or difficult, rough or smooth, dark or bright. If a man be destitute of this faith, deeply implanted and diligently cultivated in his soul, he must sooner or later break down. He may be urged on, for a time, by the impulse of surrounding circumstances and their influence. He may be propped up and borne along by his co-religionists. He may float down along the stream of religious profession. But most assuredly, if he be not possessed of "unfeigned faith," the time is rapidly approaching when it will be all over with him forever. The "perilous times" will soon rise to a head, and then will come the awful crisis of judgment, from which none can escape save the happy possessors of "unfeigned faith." God grant my reader may be one of these! If so, all is eternally safe.—Selected by MRS. J. C. DAY.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM MISS ELIZABETH SMITH.

BR. STORRS: It is some time since I wrote to you, and in the interval one of the sad changes which are daily visiting our hearts and homes has come into our little midst and taken away my dear, my precious father. He is asleep in Christ. O how beautiful he looked as he lay cold in death; it seemed as though I could not leave him. He looked so sweet and peaceful that it almost seemed as though he would soon awake and look upon me. Ah! yes, he will soon awake. He will look upon me and speak to me, too. I with you, dear father STORRS, trust the happy time is not far away. O! what a comfort it would be at this sad hour, to receive from your kind heart words of sympathy. But, O, I do trust in and lean on my Saviour. Father was only confined to his bed three days. He did not say much during his sickness. A good deal of the time he was very stupid; disease had a strong hold upon both mind and body.

One morning he asked me to sing to him

"My heavenly home is bright and fair,
Nor pain or sickness enter there," etc.

When I was through he said, that was a blessed thought. I think he realized he would not live, and would probably have said more had it not been for mother. He was always so tender of her, and she seemed to hold up such good courage that he would get well. He fell into a deep sleep about dark, and never came out of it, but slept his life away, dying without one struggle.

O how tried my heart does feel this morning as I think of the scene of confusion which surrounds me. The whole creation is travailing together in pain, sickness and dying. If it were only natural death, well might it be for us all; but O if we are dead spiritually, dead to God, where is our hope of life? To be dead both spiritually and physically is indeed death, eternal death. O how disease is taking hold of the minds as well as bodies of men! They are folding their arms and crying peace and safety. How selfish ambition, and love of popularity, like some fierce disease which sometimes destroys sight or hearing, and again makes cripples of men, is destroying the purity of the souls of men, taking away the love of simple truth, making bigots and boasters of those in high places, and dupes of the poor and ignorant. The former class are losing, and some have lost their true sight and hearing. Eyes have they, but they see not; ears but they hear not. And why? Because self is so big it covers the entire vision. The latter class are made cripples. Feeling and mistaken respect will not allow them to assert their blood bought liberty in Christ. They would hardly dare say amen to a sentiment they feel in their hearts, or bless the Him who made them, unless their leaders set the example; how many such we have in this wide world. The precious Bible says the way-faring man, though a fool. may not err in the path there marked out for him. O that all the sons and daughters of Adam would remember it, and would arise and come to the great physician and have their minds healed from the wound sin has made, and be enabled to assert their liberty in Christ. Christ gives us liberty to be overbearing toward no one, but to esteem others better than ourselves; to be gentle and kind, but always honest, free-hearted men, sons of an almighty Father, and brothers of a divine Redeemer. No man has a right to lord it over God's heritage. We should be examples to the flock. We are God's heritage, if we are His children, and if we are His, to Him must we give account.

Dear father STORRS, how my heart goes out sometimes, and if I were a man, I would stand up in the great congregation and declare what my heart tells me is truth, and I know the Lord would help me. It seems to me this morning as though I could take hold of my fellow men and lift them up to God, that they might be enabled to see the snares which beset them on every hand, and to cast out self and receive the Spirit of Christ who lived alone to bless and save others.

Are we begotten? Are we daily growing in grace and knowledge? If so, we shall soon be free from mortality, with all its aches and pains, sighs and sorrows, and be the free sons and daughters of God when the former things have all passed away and all have become new.

O bless the Lord. It may be so, it can be so, Whosoever will may come, and drink of the waters of life freely. So I say bless the Lord, O my soul, all that is in me bless His holy name.

I will send pay for the paper, for our house would be doubly lonely without it. How father used to love it! He would spend hours in reading its precious contents. He was weary and worn with the journey of this life. May the consolation there is in Christ be in and abide with you even unto the end. Amen.

LAPEER, MICH., Nov., 1870.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. THORNE: I take my pen to address a few lines to you as a token of love and encouragement, and may God abundantly bless you in the place you are called to fill. I know that He is faithful, and that He has said, "As thy day is, so shall thy strength be." Blessed be His name, we are not to stand alone, all holy beings are on our side. O what a blessing it is to be a polished, sanctified instrument in His hand, continually feeling to say, "Thy will, O God, be done;" yes, in all things.

I feel much for Br. STORRS, and if it could be, I would willingly bear a share of his sufferings; but as for his sleeping, or waking, i. e., living, I feel all will be right, just as God would have it. No wonder he feels weary, it seems to me that more than a century of wrestling with error, and battling for truth. Has not God been showing what great things He can do with a chosen instrument? surely. Now if it is the will of God that he shall sleep, let him sleep, for "blessed are the dead, that die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." May God grant that you, my dear brother, with all of God's precious ones may meet our long tried Br. STORRS.

"Where a blasted world shall brighten,
Underneath a bluer sphere,
And a softer, gentler sunshine,
Shed its healing splendor here;
Where earth's barren vales shall blossom,
Putting on her robes of green;
And a purer, fairer Eden,
Be where only wastes have been;
Where a king, in kingly glory
Such as earth has never known,
Shall assume the righteous scepter.
Claim and wear the holy crown.
Yes, Meet and Rest,
'Mid the holy and the blest!"

If Br. STORRS is alive when you receive this, give him my unfeigned love. May God fill him with his Spirit; surround him with every needed blessing; hold up the dear ones that administer to his wants; and if he falls asleep in Jesus, may

"Hope make for him a pillow,
And faith a garment rare,
To keep him in his slumbers
Till Jesus shall appear,
And when the trumpet soundeth,
And the shadows flee away,
And the gilding rays of glory,
Proclaim the coming day.
And when the glorious morning
Breaks in his little room,
May he rise, and shout, "Hosannah,
Deliverance has come!"

Never fear, brethren and sisters, deliverance will come. And if Br. STORRS is taken away from us, God will fill his place; and whom the Lord approves, let us approve, and hold up his hands, and make him feel that we love him.

Let us all be up and doing with our loins girt about with truth, our light trimmed and burning, and we like unto men that look for their Lord.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Dec., 1870.

FROM ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

DEAR FRIENDS: I can with heart and soul wish all the readers of the dear HERALD A happy New Year! And indeed, all the believers in the great theme of life in Christ only: may they have a year. if the year goes on, of joy and peace and truth and work!

I am so glad to have the privilege of stepping into the office once more, that I could not refuse to greet the saints from this interesting point.

I, who have been raised from the gates of the grave, who have begun again to sound the truth, and to find, I trust, that the things that happened unto me have turned out unto the furtherance of the Gospel. I am happy to speak, to seize again the trumpet and sound it!

Yet still my joy overflows, to learn that our Br. STORRS is fast recovering; that he is preserved to us! There is cause to hope that the veteran watchman on the walls of our Zion may soon be at his post again.

We had obtained adverse news, a few days ago, and gloom filled our hearts. Now I am happy and in the belief that we may have his counsels, and possibly some of his labor in the conflict of truth for time to come.

Dear Brn. let us rally a little. Let the brethren pray more and speak out more. Let the preachers pour forth the streams of living truth with increasing force and inspiration. Let the writers increase the stream and fan the flame. Let us have articles that will burn. Amen.

HERALD OF LIFE OFFICE, Jan. 6, 1870.

FROM T. K. ALLEN.

DEAR READERS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE: I have recently read the tract of Br. STORRS, entitled "God is Love," and I think I have never had a clearer understanding of the love of God than I have had since reading it. I do believe with its author that love is the great central truth of the Bible, from which all other truth radiates. God is love and all his administration to man flows from that principle. His creation of man, placing him in a garden of delights, putting him on probation, that he might learn to govern himself and develop holiness, and thus rise by love into a higher sphere, and to have superadded a spiritual nature capable of a more intimate union and communion with his Creator, a development of perfect subjection to the will of his Creator was essential to man's safety and happiness, for to let him pass into a spiritual and immortal state without a voluntary subjection to the will of his Creator, might be to make him an immortal sinner, and eternally miserable. Hence to test this matter, the love of God appointed a trial for man, and if the development should prove inharmonious with his Creator, love appointed that he should return to the dust from whence he was taken, and when man developed himself out of harmony with the divine will, sin entered into the world, and death passed upon all.

God so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and gave his Son to die for us. And if God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall He not with him also freely give us all things. Then, my beloved brethren, let us explore the ocean of this love of God, and return love for love. O the depth of this love! No wonder the Apostle prayed that the Ephesian church might be rooted and grounded in love; that they might be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length, and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge.

"O love, thou bottomless abyss,
My sins are swallowed up in thee;
Covered is my unrighteousness,
Nor spot of guilt remains on me.
While Jesus' blood, through earth and skies,
Mercy, free, boundless mercy, cries."

O then, let me exhort you, in view of the amazing love of God, to reckon yourselves dead indeed to sin but alive to God. As when you reckon with your creditor, and as when you have paid all, you reckon yourselves free, so now reckon with God. Jesus Christ hath paid all, hath purchased you from sin and its consequences, viz., death and its dominion. Your pardon, holiness, and eternal life, therefore, are now God's command. "Reckon yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." O begin, begin to reckon now. Fear not, but believe, and continue to believe every moment. So shalt thou continue free, and, whoever thou art that perseveringly believest, it will be as a fire in thy bosom, and will constrain thee to confess with thy mouth thy Lord and King, and, in spreading the sacred flame of love, thou shalt still be saved to the uttermost.

WINONA, MIN., Dec., 1870.

FROM LUTHER SMITH.

BR. THORNE: Your five tracts, "A Bible View of Hell," I received all right, and they are doing their work. To-day a man asked for one of them, as he heard a little of it read, so I begged it back from the one that was reading it and gave it to the stranger, promising the reader one of the others as soon as I could get it.

The awful doctrine of hell as preached in these days shocks the conscience, distracts the reason and makes infidels. Why should it not? for if that was the Spirit of our God we would have no hope only in this life, then we would be of all men most miserable, but thanks be unto a loving God for the knowledge of the truth. We know in whom we believe and whom we worship, and we don't worship the beast (a beastly God), neither have his mark nor his name.

I hope the Lord will restore Br. STORRS to health, so that he may occupy his place again, for the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few, and how can we do without him? But the Judge of all the earth will do right. Amen.

ONTARIO, WIS., Jan., 1871.

FROM B. MATTHIAS.

BR. STORRS: Be assured of our hearty sympathies, as you have the benefit of our daily prayers. May the Bishop and Shepherd of souls care for you most tenderly, make your bed for you, and strengthen you upon the bed of languishing. May the Lord in mercy to us all, give you back to us, that as heretofore we may commune with you through our weekly visitor, the HERALD. Trust the Life-giver now. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die."

Yours in much solicitude for your well-being and recovery.

LANESFIELD, KAS., Dec., 1870.

MRS. E. S. WESTCOTT, of Providence, R. I., writes: I want to pay for the HERALD, and mean to, so long as I can get the money to do it with. I prize the paper above all others. The Life-believers here are having excellent meetings, and we are looking for our LIFE-GIVER soon.

APPOINTMENTS.

MERIDEN, Conn., Jan. 15.
SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 22.
CHAS. G. BARKER.

PHILADELPHIA, until Jan. 28.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Jan. 29.
MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 5.
MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 12.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Feb. 19.
WM. STUART.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—Thomas Jardine, I. M. Chaffee, Geo. Waterhouse, Mrs. Abbie I. Wilkins, Clarence Wolcott, G. Spencer, D. L. Osborn, F. L. Writenour.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—B. W. White, Philo Richardson, N. Richardson, Jesse Negus, Lucy A. Janes, Lorenzo Lord, Samuel Heaton, H. W. James, Mrs. Wm. Taintor, Zalmon Grovier, Luther Smith, David McBride, Mrs. J. W. Young, Wm. Wright, Wm. Pike, Benjamin F. McGan, Mrs. L. R. Morey, John B. Witham, J. D. Sheridan, R. S. Foster, J. L. Hall, H. H. Tyson, E. A. Brewster, R. W. Kendall, J. Hyatt Smith, W. H. Barnes.

VARIOUS SUMS—N. Putnam, $5; Mrs. D. Bush, 65 cents; Jacob Grim, $50 on pledge; John Watson, $1 10; T. A. Butler, $1 50; Peter Kemp, $5; Geo. C. Elliot, $5; H. A. Troeger, $10 40; S. Totten, $1 10; E. Lewis, $2 20.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Daniel Chase, Mrs. Daniel Bush, I. M. Chaffee, Mrs. E. H. Westcott, H. H. Leamy, Stewart Carlisle (two parcels), J. Billings (two parcels), D. L. Osborn.

"Himself Hath Done It."

Isiah xxxviii. 15.

"Himself hath done it" all; oh! how these words
Should hush to silence every murmuring thought!
"Himself hath done it:" He who loves me best,
He whom my soul with His own blood hath bought.

"Himself hath done it;" can it then be aught
Than full of wisdom, full of tenderest love?
Not one unneeded sorrow will He send
To teach this wandering heart no more to rove.

"Himself hath done it:" yes, although severe
May seem the stroke, and bitter be the cup,
'Tis His own hand that holds it, and I know
He'll give me grace to drink it meekly up.

"Himself hath done it:" oh! no arm but His
Could e'er sustain beneath earth's dreary lot:
But while I know He's doing all things well,
My heart His loving kindness questions not.

"Himself hath done it;" He would have me see
What broken cisterns human friends must prove,
That I may turn and quench my burning thirst
At his own fount of ever-living love.

"Himself hath done it:" He, who's searched me through,
Sees how I cleave to earth's ensnaring ties,
And so he breaks each reed on which my soul
Too much for joy and happiness relies.

"Himself hath done it:" then I fain would say,
"Thy will in all things evermore be done,"
Even though that will remove whom best I love:
While Jesus lives, I cannot be alone.

"Himself hath done it:" precious, precious words,
Himself my Father, Saviour, Brother, Friend,
Whose faithfulness no variation knows,
Who, having loved me, loves me to the end.

And when in His eternal presence blest,
I at His feet my crown immortal cast,
I'll gladly own, with all His ransomed saints,
"Himself hath done it" all, from first to last.

—Selected by the Editor's Daughter.

The Saint's Inheritance.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

Will this earth be the final abode of the Saints? If so, will it undergo a change prior to their inheriting it? In reference to the first inquiry we have abundant proof that "the meek shall inherit the earth." Paul, in explaining the promise made to Abraham and his seed, says: "For the promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."—Rom. iv. 13. Paul here shuts out both Jew and Gentile from that inheritance, except they exercise faith in God and his promises, or in other words, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." This promise made to Abraham and his seed has not yet been fulfilled, and therefore Abraham and his seed, which are dead must be made alive to inherit the earth.

In reference to the second question, there is a division among those who believe in the fulfilment of the Abrahamic promise in the future. One class believe that this earth will undergo a change by fire and be made new, while the other claim that if this world is burned, the promises made to Abraham will be burned up with the earth, for it is said that God promised to Abraham and his seed the land of Canaan, the very land that Abraham sojourned in as a stranger, the land that he beheld with his own eyes and walked through in the length and breadth of it, and in fact, all the land of Canaan, as was promised. And then it is said: "If this literal earth is burned up then certain of God's promises must evidently burn with it." If this reasoning be correct, then when Abraham died, or any of his seed is burned, God's promises made to them utterly fail; for the promise was made to Abraham at the time he could see and walk and sojourn in the land of promise.

I cannot see why the promises would not fail equally the same in Abraham's death as it would fail if this earth is burned up. Abraham is to be made new. He was in a state of mortality when the promise was made to him, but when he inherits the promise it will be when he is in an immortal state; yet, notwithstanding this great change made, he is the same Abraham, "literally" and identically the same. I would ask, if this earth should pass away by fire or otherwise, and God should make it new with the curse removed, the same as the curse of mortality has been removed from Abraham, would it not be the same "literal" earth as it was when the promise was made to Abraham? To deny this would make void the fact that Abraham will be Abraham after he is made new by a resurrection out from among the dead, for if God can collect the material of those Saints which have been burned, and their ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, and make them new again, he is equally able to create a new earth out of the old one.

Again: Will not the inheritance correspond with the inheritor? The curse is removed from the inheritor, and does not the necessity demand that "there shall be no more curse" (Rev. xxii. 3.) in the inheritance? Did not Abraham so understand it when God gave him the promise? "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country dwelling in tabernacles (or tents) with Isaac and Jacob the heirs with him of the same promise, for he looked for a city which hath foundation whose builder and maker is God." Mark the language; a city made by God; not made by hands of man, which would be the case if made in this old corrupt earth. Again: "They desired a better country, that is, an heavenly, wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city,"—Heb. xi. If we understand Paul, that city is already builded, for he saith "He hath prepared for them a city," already in the past, ready to come down from heaven, for it is certain there is no such city now on the earth as that which Abraham looked for.

I cannot but believe that when John saw a city come down from God out of Heaven on the new earth, that it was the same city Abraham expected to come. But says one: "The earth abideth forever." "He laid the foundation of the earth that it never should be moved." It is evident that the expression "The earth abideth forever" refers to the new earth, otherwise Jesus did not tell what is true, for he says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—Mat. xxiv. 35. As far as the foundation of this earth is concerned, the earth can be burned without moving it. A house is often burned and the foundations still remain, and a more elegant house erected on the same foundation. We have a positive testimony from Jesus that Heaven and earth shall pass away. He does not tell how or by what means it will pass away. The language is emphatic and I think we had better believe it and trust to him for a better one; a new earth whereon the righteous will dwell.

Notwithstanding this may occur, says one, will not this occur some time after the Lord comes, a thousand years or a shorter period? There is one thing clear; if the new earth is to be the inheritance of Abraham and his seed, Daniel "cannot stand in his LOT (or inheritance) at the end of the days," unless the inheritance is prepared for him. But you say that means a resurrection. It does not read so, yet it involves that, for Daniel must be raised before he can inherit the promise made to Abraham.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away;" when and by what means? There was a good old man who lived in the land of Uz, whose name was Job. Altho' he is not said to be a prophet, "yet he was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil," therefore he was a man of truth. We read in Job, xiv. "Man dieth and wasteth away, yea, man giveth up the Ghost (Gera, waste away—Pick) and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the Heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Here we have the testimony of a "perfect and upright" man who gives us to understand that man goes out of existence at death and does not awake until the heavens have passed away, as Jesus said they should. But, like Abraham, his eye of faith extended into the next world, for he says, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though, after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; tho' my reins be consumed within me."—Job xix. 25, 26, 27. There is no immortal Ghost about Job. He was a true "literalist." A Job with flesh, and a literal terrafirma to stand on with his Redeemer by his side. Praise his name evermore! We have the testimony of Job that the heavens have passed away before he rises, for he was a man that "wasted away," as he himself declares.

Peter, speaking on this subject, says "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up."—2 Pet. iii. 10. "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Pet. iii. 12, 13. Here are two or more witnesses who testify that the heavens and earth will pass away, but God's promises are sure, and, therefore, he will give us new heavens, and new earth. Objections will arise in the minds of some, how can the many promises made to the Jews, and even to the Gentiles be fulfilled if these things be so? I confess that I do not see any promises to be fulfilled in a future age, or world to come, for Jew or Gentile. The Jews have had their day so far, as they were made a distinct people; and God has said, of them by the mouth of his prophet, "ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name."—Isa. lxv. The connection shows conclusively this prophecy was fulfilled when the Gentiles were called, as the first verse of this chapter teaches; for it says: "I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not; I said, behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name." Paul quotes this verse and applies it to the calling of the Gentiles. Our Lord said the kingdom "shall be taken from you and given to a nation brtnging forth the fruits thereof." Again, Jesus says that in the end of this age He will send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend, and do iniquity, etc., "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father."

New York, Dec., 1870.

Note by the Editor.

We are agreed with Br. Green in the fact that the earth is to be the inheritance of the saints; but about the modus operandi by which that inheritance is to be presented to them, there may be a difference between us; but we do not design to speak of that now.

We wish to ask our Br. one question in relation to a remark of his near the close of his article, in which he states he does not know anything, in a future age, promised to Jew or Gentile.

We wish to ask him: Do you really believe that the promise of God to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" has been fulfilled? This promise was afterwards renewed to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 16, 18, confirmed by an oath, thus —"By myself I have sworn, saith the Lord . . . in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

There are "two immutable things in which it is impossible for God to lie."—Heb. vi.

Have the promise and oath been realized in any fulfilment of the past? You are too well skilled in history not to be able to answer this question; and we pray you weigh it well and give us an answer in your usual candid style.

This note is the first thing we have penned with our own hand since we began to recover from our long sickness. The question has occupied our mind on our sick bed much: we have weighed it by night and by day and looked at it, we think, on all sides.

"Every Eye Shall See Him."

BY W. H. HANFORD.

"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him."—Rev. i. 7. This means all who have ever lived on the earth shall see Him, does it? Yes; "And they also which pierced Him." First: you have all that ever lived, then an addition to the all, which proves too much, consequently nothing. "Every eye shall see him." Who is referred to here? I answer the kings and priests of verse 6 whom he loved and washed in his own blood. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. —Heb. xii. 14.

'And they also that pierced Him.' A Roman soldier pierced Jesus after he was dead. It was probably at the command of a superior officer. Jesus will never hold him accountable for that. 'I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they shall look upon me, whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him."—Zech. xii. 10. "What are these wounds in thine hand? Then he shall answer, those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends."—Zech. xiii. 6. It is evident that those who ought to have been his friends but who said, "His blood be on us and upon our children," are the ones that pierced Him.

"And all kindreds of the earth (or land) shall wail (mourn for Him."—Zech. xii. 10.) because of Him." In the translation of Matt. xxiv. 30, the Irish Bible gives—land—instead of earth. "Then shall all the tribes of the land" (Palestine) mourn." Jesus left Palestine to go into a far country. True, but what of that? He will return to Palestine again. No, says one, Palestine is to be burned up. Not so. His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem the East, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave," etc.—Zech. xiv. The cleaving will be by earthquake doubtless, as shown in Eze. xxxviii. 18, 19, 20. "And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come upon my face. Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel; so that the fishes of the sea, and the fowl of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth," (literally land) "shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground." Where is all this to take place? "In the land of Israel." When? When the Messiah's feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives. Do you wonder that the tribes of the land mourn or wail? The Mount of Olives riven by an earthquake; the land lifted up and leveled off; the ground oscillating so that no living creature can stand upon its feet; and every wall or house falling to the ground, is it a wonder that they wail?

Would not the inhabitants of New York wail under a similar visitation? Remember that this is to be an earthquake such as was not since man was upon the earth, so mighty and great.

Our Titles.

BY G. R. HILL.

There is a prevailing notion that the Christian's future home is somewhere outside of, or other than this globe. Hence the poet describes it as "mansions in the skies." At the renovation of all things there will be a place prepared for the abode of the justified. This our Lord describes as a mansion in His "Father's house." We believe that that mansion is this earth, purified by fire, and restored to its primitive condition for our abode. A mansion indeed in the skies, our Father's house, the universe. And hence our Lord, who hath received all power in Heaven and on earth, has gone to execute judgment preparatory to that great day, the final end of time and of mortality.

All transpiring events throughout the vast domain of Christ's kingdom are under the control of him whose right it is to rule. How great the consolation to know that our protector is on the throne. Happy are they who, seeing the goodness of our God, acknowledge his power with grateful hearts.

But while our Lord reigns supreme ruler in the universe, his Father's house, he having been as one of us in the flesh has conferred upon us, as younger brothers, the title of "friend," that we should aid in the work of preparing a suitable people to inherit and occupy that future world.

He that believeth on the Lord Jesus Christ hath obtained a title to an inheritance in reserve for him. And by the exercise of our faith we become co-laborers with Christ, and his agents in converting sinners. How great the joy to "catch men." "Let your light shine." Herald forth the words of life—immortality through Christ.

East Meredith, Conn., Jan., 1871.

Musings.

BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

What a different world this would be if everybody would attend to their own business. How much mischief is done by people neglecting their own and meddling with other folks' matters.

Now, meddlers are very dangerous and disagreeable persons. No matter how pretty they are, or how richly attired; no matter either what position they may occupy in society or in the church, they after a while become very unwelcome visitors among the good. What can professing Christians think, who will tattle and make mischief wherever they go? We allow, under some circumstances, it is right to inform a brother or sister of evil reports in circulation against them, or to caution them sometimes; but to run and tell on both sides, is the work of those who are practical tale-bearers.

Let no one who expects to be saved in God's kingdom think God will receive such impure, injurious souls. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

The future world will be peopled by a pure nation, the nation of the saved; saved from sin here and from death there. Our character must be formed here. If we naturally love to do any thing that God forbids, we must overcome the propensity. If we have become discouraged in our efforts to overcome our "early besetting sins," ask the Lord to help.

Much injury is also done by professing Christians who listen to the tale-bearer. They will make no further inquiries to learn the cause for what is repeated to them; O no, they promised "not to tell;" they heard it; so they sour and act unfriendly to those who can do no better than guess at the reason. Is it not possible outlive the slanderer's sting, or outwit the tale-bearer's motive? Can we not, as Christians always say, when they bring us what has been said about us, "What did you say that caused them to speak?" Ah! there is the secret. Poor tale-bearer; it was something you told them that made them say any thing about their neighbors, and then you ran back to them, like a dog with a bone, and misrepresented what was said. May the Lord show such their sins, and help them to overcome and know the grace that can save to the uttermost.

Wendell Depot, Mass., Dec., 1870.

Fragments of divine biography swept away the bloody power of the Cæsars, and books may set in action the most resistless natures, —overturn and obliterate empires. The elements, even, are weak to what a book may be. The most accessible, the most manageable, it may possess that which will change nations, and make empires disappear.

Piety at Home.—"Religion is majestic in the State; it may be grand in the church— in the church building a great institution, in the State swaying the destinies of millions of men. But piety looks lovelier and sweeter at home; not arrayed in her court dress, nor set off in her church regimentals, but dressed in her homely week-day, work-day clothes. It is a little striking that the word piety, which so often rings in the Christian Church, is mentioned only once in the English Bible, and then coupled with the admonition to show itself first at home."

"There is no controlling force, there is no permanent dominion in the universe, but that of love; and every age more and more clearly indicates the truth. The Spirit which is to sink into the hearts of men, and subdue the evil that is there—the Spirit before which the desert shall blossom as the rose, and the world be transfigured with the glory of the millenial day—is that which was manifested when God gave his only begotten Son. The greatest instrument of power and victory ever sent into the world is the cross."

At one of the stations on the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, recently, an anxious inquirer came up to the door of the baggage-car, and said: "Is there any thing for me?" After some search among boxes and trunks, the baggage-man rolled out a keg of whiskey. "Any thing more?" asked the wet grocer. "Yes," said the baggage-man; "there's a grave-stone that goes with that liquor."

Children's Department.

Story of an Acorn.

Near the top of a lofty oak tree there grew an acorn, rocked in its leafy cradle. The acorn was not alone, for upon the branches all around grew hundreds of its brothers; and all day they nodded to each other as the wind swayed the tree-top. For a long time the acorn was pleased with its quiet life; but as the summer grew to a close, it began to tire of doing nothing, but growing larger and swinging in its cup.

"Oh that I were the wind!" said the acorn to its parent, the oak-tree; "I would travel around the earth instead of being rooted here." But one day there came a tempest, which tore up trees and spread terror on every side; while the poor little acorn trembled, and vowed never to wish to be the wind again.

"Oh that I were the lightning!" the acorn exclaimed, as a thunder-storm came on; "I would speed over the sky, and all men should be abashed before me." But the lightning struck a neighboring tree and shattered it from crown to root, while all the forest moved its branches and whispered with fear.

"Oh that I were a squirrel!" cried the acorn, as a bright and happy-looking one seated himself on a branch, and began eating a walnut which he carried. But the hunter, passing along in quest of game, spied him on his lofty perch, and sent a bullet which tumbled the squirrel to the ground, bleeding and dead.

Then the old oak sighed; and rustling its leaves, said to the acorn, "Do not repine; what you consider hardships may often be only blessings in disguise. The violence of the wind, the cruel strength of the lightning, and the squirrel's death, have each and all shown that their nature is not desirable. A little over a hundred years ago, when I first peeped forth from the earth, a tiny green thing, I wondered of what use I should ever be in the world; and, though I have lived so many years, the question is still unanswered. Every year I have increased in size and strength, sending down my roots deeper, spreading out my branches wider, growing firm and lithe and sinewy, but what it is all for I know not. Yet I do not forget that my Maker must have had some good purpose in causing me to grow, and in His own time He will doubtless reveal it."

Just then two men, bearing axes, paused beneath the tree; and looking up, one said, "This is our tree, so tall and straight; it will make splendid timber for our ships;" and at once began to cut it down. Then the tree said to the acorn, "This then is my mission, come after so many years of waiting; to bear the sails of some noble ships all over the world; to wrestle with the ocean in its wrath; for this my strength increased, for this my branches grew. Farewell! and, whatever be your fate, do not forget that sooner or later your true work will find you out." Then with a loud crash, it fell; and the acorn parted from its cup, and lay on the ground.

"What a pretty acorn!" said the farmer's boy. "I will plant it beside the well at home, and perhaps it will shade it some day." And the acorn sighed, for it was ambitious.

Many years have passed since then. The ship, after several voyages, sank beneath the waters; the famer's boy became an old man, who tottered feebly around awhile among his grandchildren, and then slept beneath the daisies; but the acorn he planted became a stately oak, shading with its giant arms the wayside well, where the tired travelers might rest and drink while the song-birds sang within the tree. And once there was a great battle near, and they brought the wounded to rest In the pleasant shade of the oak; while hundreds of men blessed the tree, and said it saved their lives. And the oak is happy; for it sees that its mission is to cheer, to comfort and to bless the poor, and tired and thirsty, and it glories in its work.

Let us, like the tree, be ready for what good work it is given us to do; and though we cannot go to foreign lands to spread among heathen the knowledge of God; nor be one of his fiery messengers when he rides upon the whirlwind and directs the storm; yet we will do what our hands find to do, before the night cometh, when no man can work.—S. S. Gazette.

"Thou God Seest Me."

A little boy, as he walked home from school, saw a ripe pear lying on the ground in the front yard of a large, fine house. It was a nice, yellow pear. The little boy was hungry. "How I should like that pear," thought he. "I might reach it through the slats of the fence. No one sees me." Then these words came to his mind: "Thou God seest me."

He at once turned his head away from the pear, and walked bravely on. But he had not gone far when a little girl came running after him, and said, "My mother sent me with this pear to give you, little boy. Through the blind she saw you look at it, and sends it to you with her love."

"Try" is a great word, though it musters only three letters. It is the story of every achievement, from great to small. that the world has ever seen. The presence or absence of its spirit is the mark which distinguishes the difference in men. The lad or young man who says he will try, and means it, is the one who by and by will succeed. The head on his shoulders is the go-ahead, the kind which all good folks admire, and which is a credit to itself.

A Wise Mother.

When I was a girl my mother taught me many good things:

"Be industrious!"

"Never be idle!"

"Learn to be useful!"

"Never let any one induce you to touch intoxicating drink!"

"Love your Bible!"

"Serve God, and He will never forsake you!"

These were amongst her favorite sayings. Thank God for such a mother. Oh that all children had equal cause to bless the memory of their mothers as I have mine!—A Mother.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents; Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if it ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should allow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	"
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,655,
NEW YORK

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 15.
WHOLE NUMBER 349.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

(Continued from last week.)

WILL THE WICKED DEAD BE RAISED TO LIFE AGAIN?

BY THOMAS READ.

Some may think that there is an apparent exception to these conclusions in the 22d v. "For as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." So it is translated by those who seem not to have appreciated the argument of Paul. The Universalists say that the "all" in both cases, embraces all mankind, and that all will be raised heavenly, spiritual, incorruptible, immortal, glorious, and all the raised ones will shout the triumphant song; "Death is absorbed in victory! O death, where is thy sting? O Hell, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who gives us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ!" The believers in the doctrine of "no future life only for those that are in Christ;" which we have already shown that the Scriptures teach, and which of course involves the non-resurrection of the wicked, may freely concede to the Universalists and all others; that ALL that will be resurrected, will have everlasting life; will be incorruptible, immortal, glorious, etc.; and will be "equal unto the angels," and be the "children of God": but, while the objection falls with crushing and unanswerable weight on the "orthodox," so that those who preach the resurrection of the wicked, do indeed promote and preach Universalism; yet the truth of the doctrine of "Life only in Christ" remains scathless under the objections; for it will be shown that the 22d v. will not bear such a construction.

1. Throughout this celebrated sermon, Paul ignores the very existence of the wicked dead, excepting by the casual allusion to them in the 18 v. where he faintly glances at them, as having already perished, and also the righteous with them unless the righteous be raised again from the dead, and confines his observations throughout the chapter to those who sleep "in Christ," the righteous. 2. The "we" to whom he addresses his remarks, means only Paul and the saints of the church of God, in Corinth, and all that can claim to be "brethren." 3. The two phrases, "in Adam," "in Christ," are set in contrast, the one "all," belonging to the one phrase, the other "all," to the other phrase. The phrases "in Christ," "in the Lord," occur frequently in the writings of Paul, and always with a definite meaning, as a concordance will show. In this place Paul has pinned down the meaning expressly to those who sleep "in Christ." To be "in Adam," is to possess the animal nature of Adam; to be "in Christ," is to possess the nature and spirit of Christ; only such sleep "in Christ." We die because we possess the nature of Adam, and having sinned, we have no access to the Tree of Lives; we shall be resurrected because we possess the nature of Christ, as in Rom. viii. 11. The "all" twice used, refer respectively to the "all" "in Adam," and the "all" "in Christ." The 22 v. should be translated: "For as all in Adam die, so also shall all in Christ be made alive." That the making alive is limited to the "all in Christ" will be obvious by a slight paraphrase, in which we put the supplied words in brackets. "But now has Christ risen from the dead, the first fruits (or samples,) of those that sleep (in Christ.) For since through (the) man, (Adam) came death, (so) through (the) man, (Christ) came also the resurrection of the dead, (even of all that sleep in Christ.)—22 v. For as all in Adam die, so also, all in Christ shall be made alive; (even all those that sleep in him.) But each (class) in its own order; (in the first class) Christ (as) the first fruits; afterwards (in the second class,) "those that are Christ's at his coming." Again the second "all" is nailed down to "those that are Christ's at his coming." The obvious sense of the Greek of the last clause of the 22d v. is not only determined by the phrases "in Adam," "in Christ;" but also by the preceding and the succeeding verse, and the second "all" must refer to the all in Christ; to "those that are Christ's at his coming," to the utter exclusion of the wicked. Christ is not the first fruits, nor sample of the wicked. Neither do the wicked dead sleep, which implies a future awaking. The resurrection is confined to those who sleep in Christ, of whom Christ has already risen from the dead. 4. It may be objected that the translators have followed the order of the words in the Greek. But their duty was, not to follow the mere arrangements of the words, but the obvious sense of the Greek. By consulting a concordance, the sense of the phrases "in Christ," "in the Lord," will plainly appear. No scholar will make this objection. In the latter clause of the 7 v. the order of the words in Greek is, "Then to the Apostles all." Necessity compelled a transposition of the words, and the translators wrote, "Then to all the Apostles." The difference of grammar and idioms between Greek and English frequently requires a transposition of the words.

5. The careful reader must perceive that the second "all" in the 22d v. must be confined exclusively to those "in Christ;" and that Paul in a professed discourse on the resurrection, teaches nothing concerning the resurrection of the wicked, and the unavoidable conclusion is that he knew of no such doctrine.

6. This exposition is confirmed by its parallel.—1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. The Lord shall descend . . . . "and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we, the living, shall be caught up together with them in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air."

The Gospel means glad tidings. It condemns nobody. It is the law that condemns to death. The Gospel is the glad tidings of life, of the resurrection from the dead. Life and resurrection are synonymous expressions. Christ gives a beautiful epitome of the Gospel, John iii. 16, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Life is the great offer of the Gospel. The world without Christ are perishing one after the other as they successively drop into their graves; there is no life without organization, and the organization is dissolved. But Christ has come that believers in him may obtain life. Christ came not to prevent them from dying, but to restore them again to life. Hence to offer life to those who will assuredly die, is equivalent to offering a resurrection from the dead. Christ exhibited his power over death, by raising three persons to life again; but these were raised only to life and corruptibility, to animal life, and therefore died again. It was not till the resurrection of Christ, that death was virtually, though so far as the righteous are concerned, prospectively abolished; and life and incorruptibility exhibited in the risen person of Christ, the sample of those glorious bodies to which the bodies of our humiliation, or present bodies will be changed at his appearing. and kingdom. If there be no organization, there is no life, and if there be no resurrection, there is no future life, therefore the glad tidings of life, implying a resurrection, being made to a class only, the believing, these terms utterly preclude the idea of any resurrection to the wicked.

Another set of Gospel terms employed by Christ equally imply a resurrection to a peculiar class, the righteous, and to that class only. Abraham was promised the everlasting possession of the land of Canaan, in a heavenly and renovated state, through a descendant of his, the Messiah; and died "in faith, not having received the promises."—Heb. xi. 13. Abraham must be resurrected, therefore, or the promise of God will fail. David was promised the perpetuation of his throne and kingdom under his Lord, whose soul should not be left in sheol, the state of death, but should have an early resurrection. Of this kingdom, of this age to come there are several remarkable prophecies. Isa. ix. 6, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be on his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The Father of the age to come, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice from henceforth even for ages."—Luke. i. 30. Gabriel said unto her, "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God . . . . Thou shalt . . . . bring forth a son . . . . He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ages; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

This kingdom is set forth by various titles; such as the kingdom of God, the kingdom of Christ, the kingdom of heaven, the reign of heaven, the age of Christ, the age to come, etc., and as the disciples of Christ were dying one after another, and passing into a state where there is no "knowledge" and no consciousness, "where the dead praise not the Lord;" the inheritance of this kingdom necessarily implied, as in the case of Abraham, a resurrection from the dead, of that class, and of that class only, who are to possess the kingdom. There is therefore, no resurrection of the wicked dead. In strict accordance with this is Phil. iii. 11. Paul was willing to suffer the loss of all things, that he might know Christ, "and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, being conformed to his death; if by any means he might attain to the resurrection from the dead." Paul must have believed that the resurrection belonged exclusively to the righteous.

There is no way of explaining away this express declaration. The Greek is very emphatic, eis ton exanastasin ton nekron; unto the resurrection out from among the dead ones. Nekron, dead, is a plural adjective, requiring a plural noun. The rule is, that ek or ex before a vowel, followed by a plural noun, means out from among; as in the clause, "Every high priest taken (ex) from among men;" means that there are some men left behind. So in the case above, when Paul is raised, the wicked will be left behind, as in Prov. "They are left in the congregation of the dead." Who is to get them out? Christ won't, "they are none of his;" God won't, "for he is not the God of the dead." Let them be; they troubled us enough while they lived; why should they be permitted to disturb us any more?

(To be Continued.)

WHEN WILL THE THRONE OF DAVID BE OCCUPIED BY CHRIST?

BY JOEL D. SIMONDS.

Not before his Resurrection.

For there is no record of it. But there is a record, that he was raised from the dead to sit on David's throne.—Acts ii. 30.

Not before His ascension and after His resurrection; for there is no such record. But there is a record, that he must go into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and, having received it, to return.—Luke xix. 12.

Not while in heaven;

for there is nothing said about it. But it is said, sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool.—Acts ii. 39. And while he occupied that position, he was in expectation that his foes would be made his footstool.—Heb. x. 13.

But when he comes the second time, then will he sit upon his throne. For so it is written. "The Son of man shall come in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."—Math. xxiv. 30. "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—Dan. vii. 14. "The government shall be upon his shoulder . . . and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever."—Is. ix. 7. If Christ is to occupy the throne of David at all it must be at his second coming, for at his first coming he did not occupy that throne, or at least there is no record of any such occupancy.

At his second coming "his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof, toward the east and toward the west, and make a very great valley;" "and in that day the Lord shall be king over all the earth."—Zech. xiv. 4, 9. This did not take place at his first coming, so it must be reserved for his second coming, if it takes place at all. Peter said to Christ; We have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—Math. 19. 28. Paul, in speaking of his reward, affirms the same thing. He says, that when the Lord shall come in his kingdom, he shall give me a crown of righteousness, and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing.—2 Tim. iv. 1 8.

The twelve apostles, and all others who love the appearing of Christ, will receive their crowns, when Christ shall come in his kingdom; or when he shall sit upon the throne of his glory. When will the Lord sit upon the throne of his glory? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, THEN shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." The throne of his glory is the throne of his father David. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke i. 32, 33. Christ and all who are joint heirs with him will receive the kingdom at the same time.

After Jerusalem shall cease to be trodden down of the Gentiles, and when the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, then there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when ye see these things begin to come to pass, then look up, for your redemption draweth nigh. When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.—Luke xxi. 24, 31.

The Lord will come and then he will occupy the throne of the kingdom. He will then begin to reign. At that time the kingdom of the world will become the kingdom of the Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.

There are two distinct and separate comings of Christ mentioned in the Bible. Each coming has its particular object, and its appropriate work. The object of his first coming was to lay the foundation for the work of the second coming. He came first to make reconciliation; he will come the second time to secure the fruits of that reconciliation. He came first to suffer; he will come the second time to reign. He came first to make provision to bless the world; he will come the second time to bless the world. He came first to make provision for the restitution of the world; he will come the second time to effect that restitution.

Now if we apply the testimony I have introduced to the right coming it will be in harmony with the general tenor of the Bible on the subject; but if we apply it to the wrong coming, it will only make confusion.

Perhaps the force of the testimony can be more clearly seen by contrasting it with the circumstances of the first coming. The kingdom will be given to Christ when he comes in the clouds of heaven, but no mention was made of it when he was born of a woman and found in a manger. At his first coming, he was the child born, the son given; at his second coming the government will be upon his shoulder and he will sit upon the throne of David. When the Lord shall be king over all the earth, the Mount of Olives will cleave asunder, but no such thing happened at his first coming.

When he begins to reign, he will come in his glory and have power over all nations. This was not so when he came to his own, and his own received him not. It is when he comes, after the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, that the kingdoms of the world will become the kingdoms of the Lord; at the time when the dead shall be judged and the righteous rewarded, not at the time of the first coming.

The Lord will begin to reign when he returns from heaven, after having received the kingdom, not at his first coming, before he had started to go after it.

Christ, at his first coming, was only an heir to the kingdom which he was afterwards to receive. And all who become Christ's, are joint heirs with him to the same kingdom, which will be shared by them all when he comes in his glory, and all the angels with him. The first coming secures heirs to the kingdom; the second secures the inheritance to it.

In connection with the first coming is the promise of the kingdom; in connection with the second coming is the fulfilment of that promise.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Dec., 1870.

THE GIFT THAT IS IN THEE.

PAUL wrote to Timothy, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee." He has special reference to Timothy's call to preach the gospel. But this injunction is not without its application to every Christian; and it is an injunction that ought to be heeded. There is, of course, what may be called the ground-work, that must be the same in all. Every mechanic must have strength, and accuracy of eye, or he cannot do any good work. But one workman may differ from another in the kind of work he can do best. Every scholar must know how to study, but the gift of one will be language, another mathematics, another physics. So every Christian must have faith and love and z al. And yet each Christian will have some one thing in which is his special "gift." And Christ's injunction to each one is, "neglect not the gift that is in thee."

The point of the injunction is this: you have a gift, some capacity, some talent given you of God; it may not be as conspicuous a gift as has been conferred on some one else, it may not be as likely to accomplish as much as some other gift. But it is the talent that has been intrusted to you; therefore, "neglect not the gift that is in thee."

For example: Here is a man who is a good talker and can exhort well in the prayer-meeting; or one who can lead the devotions to edification. Here is another person who can sing, and thus make the service of song pleasant. And here is another who can neither pray nor sing, but can only seek a quiet corner, and lift the heart to God, craving his blessing upon the gathering. But the injunction to each one of them is the same, "neglect not the gift that is in thee." The same thing holds good through all the fields of Christian work. If you can help forward the material interests of the church, if you are social in your nature, and can interest yourself in strangers; if you can teach in the Sabbath-school; if you can distribute religious reading; if you can go to men and beseech them to be reconciled to God—whatever you can do, whatever you will to do, is your "gift," and ought not to be neglected.

And it must be borne in mind that we never know what we can do till we try. We may think we have no talent for this, or that, or the other thing; when the real trouble is, that we have never tried to do it. No one ever learned to swim on dry land. The apostle had reference to this state of mind when he wrote to the Corinthians, "Covet earnestly the best gifts." We are to use to the utmost the gifts we have; but we must also seek the best gifts. We are not doing our whole duty unless we are thus seeking the highest usefulness. Christ's kingdom, my brother, my sister, has need of you, with the peculiar talent, whatever it may be, that is conferred upon you. "NEGLECT NOT THE GIFT THAT IS IN THEE."—Selected.

EMPLOYMENT OF THE SAINTS IN GLORY.

BY WALTER PATTERSON.

PHILOSOPHY and revelation conjointly declare man to be made of dust, Theological philosophy may assume a different nature, but what signifies assumptions that are unsusceptible of demonstration? Man being thus constituted, by the wisdom and power of God, he is made capable of developing character through the volition of his own will; hence his individual responsibility. In this respect he has his own eternal destiny in his keeping. Not that man, unaided, can gain eternal life, but being constituted as he is, capable of knowing and obeying the will of his Creator, by his obedience or disobedience his character is developed. Eternal life, with all its accompanying blessings, through the grace of God is promised to them who develop a character worthy of it.

Such a glorious hope being presented to the human mind, no wonder it is the almost universal desire to obtain it. But who shall obtain it? Many boast of their assurance of salvation, and of going to heaven at death, and if they were their own judge, their case would be decided; but as some parts of their boasted hope is not only doubtful but fallacious, their whole assurance may be set down as "excess of boldness." While it is man's duty and privilege to develop character, God has reserved the right to judge through the person of Jesus Christ, who is "one" with the Father; and if such a Judge accounts them "worthy," the glorious destiny of eternal life, with all its attendant blessings are sure. But there is a great uncertainty in many minds with respect to this future life, and to the qualifications necessary to obtain it. The desire to live makes them hope that it may eventually be well with them, but to have a well grounded hope we must have the necessary qualifications; we must "live by the faith of the Son of God," knowing that he hath become "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Do we know that we obey Jesus? Just so much we may be assured of eternal salvation.

But again, there is a vagueness in the minds of many about the condition and employment of the finally redeemed. As to their condition and employment, we know nothing only as revealed in the word of God. With many imagination is fertile, but just so far as we leave the light of divine truth we may be left to revel in fancy, and suppose ourselves spiritual phantoms, reposing at ease, or revelling in every supposed delight, endowed with more than lightning speed in traversing creation o'er, visiting and examining neighboring planets, and distant suns and systems. But these vain imaginings may be fitting to them who leave the light of God's word to walk in the light of their own fire, and in the sparks that they have kindled. With respect to the condition of the redeemed; we have every reason to believe that as we now have organized material bodies, "they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead" will have material organized bodies; yea, the bodies we now possess, because it is that which dies that shall live again. But instead of living through means of a blood life, these bodies will be raised by the power of God, vitalized and energized by his Holy Spirit, thereby becoming "partakers of the divine nature;" "spiritual" bodies, that will need and have a locality. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."

With respect to the employment of the saints, there is very little definiteness in the minds of many professing Christians. It seems as if the ultimate of their hopes and thoughts were to be saved, to be happy, to repose at ease, to spend an eternity in a listless doing of nothing, to bathe in a sea of bliss.

"Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Kingdom. That suggests something. This kingdom has a purpose; there is a work to perform. How many in their limited ideas of the glories of heaven, think, if they are so happy as to get there, that their work will be all ended; that they in heaven will have nothing to do but to bask in the sunshine of heavenly bliss, float in clouds of ether, singing pæns of praise to the Creator, and Redeemer. When Jesus comes in his glory, when he takes to himself his great power to reign, the Prophet says, "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his WORK BEFORE HIM." When Jesus comes, he has the kings and their armies to fight and destroy; he has the nation to subdue; he has his kingdom to establish; he has to rule and reign, and to execute judgment and justice in the earth—"his work is before him." All the worlds or dispensations that have preceded, and all that has been done is only preparatory to this great work. Look at the covenant God made with Abraham. And the Lord said: Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do, seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? and again: "The angel of the Lord called unto Abraham, out of heaven, the second time, and said, 'By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Paul says to the Galatians, the Gospel was preached unto Abraham saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed;" and he agrees with them, showing that the natural descendants of Abraham were not that seed, seeing they were under a curse; but that the seed that should bless the earth was Christ and them that were in him by faith. This seed is not yet perfected. The perfection of it is now the subject of the preaching of the Gospel; it is to call out that seed. When that is fully accomplished, the work of blessing the nations is before them.

Now, in what respect have they to bless the nations? In the first place, the nations will be blessed by the destruction of their oppressive and tyrannical governments. How much distress of nations, how much of their discontent and want of prosperity is attributable to the mal-administration of their governments! The governments of earth are estimated in the Bible as wild beast governments, and the most of them claim no higher characteristic, for they generally choose some wild and ferocious animal as their emblematical representation.

The history of the world has been written in blood. It has generally been the few, through the lust of power and plunder that have trampled upon the rights and interests of the many until all nations have been convulsed with the spirit of revolution, vainly seeking rest but finding it not. When Christ comes he will join issue with these oppressors and destroyers of nations. He will "trample them in his fury," "dash them to pieces." He will "destroy them that destroy the earth." God will set his anointed upon the holy hill of Zion. He will give unto him the heathen for an inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. Their kings and rulers with their power, their armies, will be broken with a rod of iron; they shall be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. All opposing powers shall be swept away. "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust."

When Jesus comes in his glory, he will sit upon the throne of his glory. He will not only destroy wicked and oppressive governments, but he will establish good government. God "hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in RIGHTEOUSNESS by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Now that the liberated and subdued nations are blessed with a holy, good and righteous government under the auspices of Jesus and his glorified saints, truly he will be the "desire of all nations." "A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." Zechariah says, "The Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." John tells us in the apocalypse, that when the seventh angel sounded "there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." The time will come, and may God hasten the day, when the Lord shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously, and all nations shall hasten to do him homage. Jesus will not only "strike through kings in the day of his wrath" and "wound the heads over many countries;" he will not only establish a good government, ruling in righteousness and judgment; throwing the shield of protection around the poor and needy; but in his day "The righteous shall flourish and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."

How much the earth has suffered from war. I know that after times of peace, war and preparations for war may set the sluggish blood of the nation in motion, and there seem to be in localities prosperous times; but still war is destruction. It is a destruction of lives, a destruction of property, and engenders the worst of feelings. It is a destruction of peace. The seeming prosperity, as a consequent of war is at the best, but a locality fattening upon the miseries of their fellow men. The distress of nations are augmented by the support of armies, but how much more their miseries are increased when suffering the devastation of their active operations. But when Jesus and his saints, the seed of Abraham, take the reins of government into their hands the nations of the earth will be blessed with PEACE. There will be no more war; there will be no more learning the art of war; no more will the implements of husbandry be converted into engines of destruction. "He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plough shares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." By reason of sin, the world has no rest; but when Jesus reigns "the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." The nations, through the seed of Abraham shall be blessed with peace.

But again the nations will be blessed with prosperity. This is beautifully expressed in the 67th Psalm, "God be merciful unto us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health upon all nations. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Oh let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously; and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. THEN shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our God shall bless us; God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him." I do not mean to present all the passages to show that the fertility of the earth will be restored, but that this, in a great measure, may be effected by the blessing of the seed of Abraham, we may learn from Hosea. ii. 21, 22, "And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; and the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil; and they shall hear Jezreel." Jezreel, I believe, means "the seed of the Lord."

We might instance a great many conditions of the nations of the earth, in that period, accomplished through the instrumentality of the seed of Abraham. There will be a great increase of knowledge. And this may be one cause of the returning fertility of the earth. The wisest of our scientific men are but groping their way, experimenting here and there, sometimes with apparent success, and again with disappointment. The laws of nature and true science are part of the laws of God. During the time of Christ's and his people's reign on earth, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord," as the Prophet Isaiah says, "wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times." It may be part of the work of the "seed" to impart this knowledge.

Again, we are informed that the subjects of that kingdom shall be blessed with long life. "They shall long enjoy the work of their own hands." Jesus, when he was upon earth, went about continually doing good. While he taught the people those heavenly lessons that were able to make them wise unto salvation, he was not unmindful of their present wants, "healing all manner of sicknes, and all manner of disease among the people." May it not be part of the work of the seed of Abraham, in blessing the world, to heal the sick, and impart the true knowledge of the laws of life and health, seeing that at the then Metropolis of the earth, grows the tree of life the leaves of which are for the healing of the nations?

FERGUSONVILLE, N. Y., Dec., 1870.

LINCOLN'S INTEREST IN REFORMS.

MANY of our readers will remember Mr. Lincoln's trip through portions of the East in 1860, a few months previous to his nomination for the Presidency. During his stay in this city he manifested much interest in the various reformatory institutions, several of which he examined. Among others he visited the Sabbath school connected with the Five Points House of Industry. He went alone and unannounced, and his visit is described by the Superintendent of the school as follows:

"One Sunday morning I saw a tall, remarkable looking man enter the room and take a seat among us. He listened with fixed attention to our exercises, and his countenance expressed such genuine interest that I approached him and suggested that he might be willing to say something to the children. He accepted the invitation with evident pleasure; and coming forward began a simple address, which at once fascinated every little hearer and hushed the room into silence. His language was strikingly beautiful, and his tones musical with intense feeling. The little faces would drop into sad conviction as he uttered sentences of warning, and would brighten into sunshine as he spoke cheerful words of promise. Once or twice he attempted to close his remarks, but then the imperative shout of 'Go on! O, do go on!' would impel him to resume. As I looked upon the gaunt and sickly frame of the stranger, and marked his powerful head and determined features, now touched into softness by the impression of the moment, I felt an irresistible curiosity to learn something more about him, and while he was quietly leaving the room I begged to know his name. He courteously replied, 'It is Abraham Lincoln, from Illinois.'"

THE greatest pleasure in life is love; the greatest treasure, contentment; the greatest possession, health; the greatest ease, sound sleep; and the best medicine, a true friend.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 18, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM."

BY THE EDITOR.

THIS is a phrase often used by Christians of all denominations, not excepting Advent believers, but where any of them find authority for its use we cannot tell, except in Romish inventions and Protestant traditions: sure we are, it belongs not to this or any previous age of the world, nor is any such language employed in the Bible respecting God's dealings with the race of Adam hitherto. No greater misnomer could be applied to the dispensation of grace, as hitherto administered, than to call it a "Mediatorial Kingdom." Truly speaking, there is no such thing as a kingdom without the following things being included, viz., a king, a body of subordinate rulers, people for subjects, laws and territory.

What does the dispensation of grace, in this or any past age, know of any such kingdom in regard to mediation between God and men? Nothing at all, but strictly warns us against such a heresy, saying, "There is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. ii. 5. He that can manufacture a mediatorial kingdom out of one mediator must be a genius at invention. The Papal beast, or "Mother of harlots," is the author of the idea and of the thing itself: that power has manufactured mediators innumerable, both of the dead and the living, till it has become a "mediatorial kingdom" with a vengeance; and Protestants copy her phraseology as if it were the truth of God, while it is contradicting the testimony of Paul that there is one mediator; and we have no note intimating more than one, and hence there is no mediatorial kingdom except that of papal invention. The sooner that ends the better; and with it falls all the theories built upon the assumption that Christ's mediation ends at His second advent. This point, however, we shall treat of in another article on His priesthood.

CHRIST'S PROMISE TO THE THIEF.

A FRIEND writes us, saying, "I have been reading "Landis' IMMORTALITY." On page 205, speaking of Christ's answer to the thief, he says: 'The plain construction is, Verily I say unto thee that to-day,' etc. And in foot note he says, 'this accords with Syriac version.' I would like to know if these statements are true. If they are, how can we harmonize them with the views of THE HERALD OF LIFE?"

Passing by, for the moment, the question as to whether the "statements are true," we remark: they do not weigh a straw against the view (the fact) of the absolute mortality of the natural man, and consequent unconsciousness in death. Let it be remembered Jesus did not promise the thief a state of consciousness between death and the resurrection. Any claim that the promise involves that idea is based upon the assumption, wholly unauthorized by any thing found in the Word of God, that man possesses an entity capable of self-existence. Jesus never made a promise which encouraged any such assumption, nor did the thief understand him to do so in this instance, we think. He could not possibly have been with Christ in a conscious state after death, for Christ was himself dead, not alive somewhere.

"Of course," says one, "Christ died, but his soul did not; that lived on." Is it so? We shall see about it. We are well aware of the fact that there are thousands upon thousands of advocates of inherent immortality who would not believe but that, somehow, after all, Christ did not die, even though an angel from heaven should come and declare the contrary, so blindly wedded are they to a theory of human invention. We will, however, give testimony to the contrary from something more than an angel from heaven, viz., the Spirit of the living God. Hear: "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell" (hell here is from Sheol, which signifies a pit, the grave, the state of the dead) "neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."—Psa. xvi. 9, 10. David spake these words by the Spirit of God; and let none fall into the error of supposing he spoke of himself, for Peter, having quoted this very language, says that David, so far from speaking of himself, "is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and . . . seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell" (hades, as every Bible student knows, meaning grave) "neither his flesh did see corruption."

However determined men may be in their efforts to maintain the existence of undying entities termed souls, and to press the circumstance of Christ's promise to the malefactor into the support of those efforts, here stands the stubborn and insurmountable fact that the Spirit of God declares the Christ soul came out of the grave by a resurrection from the dead. Consciousness surely is not preserved in the grave. If, therefore, it be admitted that the fulfilment of the promise was to occur the day they hung on the cross, it nevertheless could not possibly have involved consciousness in death, for Jesus (the whole Being) was laid in the grave, and came out of it on the third day following.

In addition to this it is proper to observe that there is not now and was not when Jesus gave the promise in question, any paradise, as a place of heavenly blessedness, in existence. It may be easily shown to the satisfaction of any unbiased mind, that paradise ceased to exist after the fall of Adam, and will not be restored until Christ comes the second time. Hence the language of the text under consideration cannot reasonably be held to give any countenance whatever to the dogma of inherent immortality, or of consciousness between death and the resurrection. Lange's Commentary, a work by more than a score of eminent divines, so called, in connection with himself, says the thief "represents to himself the moment when the Messiah comes in His kingly glory to erect His kingdom upon earth, and desires that he then, awakened from the grave, may enter in with Him into the glory of his Lord." Consonant to this is the following from Archbishop Whately. He says: "Observe that 'into thy kingdom,' is a mistranslation; it should be 'in thy kingdom.' The meaning is, at thy second coming in triumphant glory."

Whately further says, the malefactor "appears to have understood, or at least suspected, what none of the other disciples at that time had any idea of, the spiritual nature of Christ's kingdom;—that . . . . the rewards and glories reserved for his followers were those of the world beyond the grave. We are not sure, indeed, that the dying malefactor was quite so far enlightened as fully to take in this view; but at any rate he did look for a kingdom of God which the death of Jesus was not to destroy, but to complete; he understood that, in some way or other, 'the Christ must suffer these things, and enter into his glory.'" Drs. Scott, Barnes and others, we believe, admit that the thief expected his prayer would be answered at some future time. Accepting the whole account just as it stands, we are compelled to the conclusion that, strange though it may seem, the malefactor was the first to perceive anything of the deep meaning of the superscription over the cross, and was the first to herald the Lord's royal dignity; and that, too, at the very moment when the Messianic hope of the apostles themselves, though they were directly instructed by Christ, was most terribly shaken.

There is another view which may reasonably be taken of this passage of Scripture. The term paradise was used among the ancients to express garden, pleasure-ground, grove, orchard, etc. It was also sometimes used in connection with burial. Agreeably to this, Judge Halsted, in his THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, remarks on the passage as follows, p. 492: "In Luke xxiii. 43, we have, Gr., And said to him Jesus; verily I say to thee this day with me thou wilt be in to paradiso, in garden (without our article): Lat, in paradiso, garden: Douay, in paradise: Ital. in paradiso; E. V., in paradise. The Ital., the Douay, and E. V., give their respective words, in paradiso, (in garden) in paradise, without the article. This is right; for garden is here used in an abstract sense; not of any particular garden; so that when Jesus saith, 'thou wilt be with me in garden,' it means, with me in burial. i. e., in a grave from which thou wilt be raised to life again; from which thou wilt be made a partaker of resurrection; equivalent to 'the bosom of Abraham,' in another place, meaning the same thing, a grave from which there will be a resurrection."

We feel justified in saying that "Verily I say unto thee that to-day," is not, as asserted, the plain construction of the text. If Mr. L. had said, "I wish it was the plain construction of the Greek text; and if it had been it would have accorded with the Syriac version," he would have stated truly in both cases, most likely, certainly in the latter, for the word "that" does occur in the Syriac. It is plainly seen, however, that the Syriac reading admitting it to be the true one, offers no real opposition to our view respecting man's nature.

We have seen that Drs. Lange, Scott, Barnes, Bishop Whately and others either hold or admit that the thief either expected his prayer would be answered when Christ should set up his kingdom, or at some time subsequent to the day they hung on the cross. This position could only be adopted by these men upon one of two principles. Either they must, in their own minds, place the comma after "to-day," the idea thus being that Jesus that day promised the thief should be with him at some future time; or else they must accept the term "to-day" in the strict sense of this day, a proper thing to do, as it may justly be thus translated; the meaning thus being just the same as in the other case.

We believe the term paradise, in the text, refers to the heavenly or spiritual paradise which is to be established on the earth at the coming of Christ; and that Jesus gave the thief the promise of being with him at that time. While the text admits of several reasonable interpretations, all in perfect harmony with our view, it cannot be used in support of inherent immortality without first assuming the very thing to be proved, thus doing gross violence to the most palpable principles of Scripture exposition. We feel to recommend all to cling to the divine word, and to not become bewildered by human fancies and inventions.

L. C. T.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

SINCE the Franco-Prussian war first startled the nations, and burst forth with such terrible fury, at once sweeping a Dynasty out of existence and making the very name of Napoleon a hated one with the French people, there has been no week of so much military activity as the past. Not since the fall of Gravelotte, Sedan, Strasbourg and Metz have crushing blows been so rapidly inflicted as have fallen upon France during the past few days. Although a mere summary of the news requires considerable space we cheerfully give it, knowing how general and great is the interest in the subject on the part of our readers.

In the valley of the Loire, the German forces have steadily advanced, though they have encountered obstinate resistance along the whole line. A Berlin dispatch dated 9th inst., says: Gen. Von Werder has been heavily reinforced. The Prussians in the department of Yonne are concentrating at Joigny, on the Paris and Lyons Railway, and reinforcements have arrived there from Germany. The fighting when Daujontin was carried by storm, is described as desperate on both sides, and the German loss was heavy. Later reports of this battle deprive the Prussians of much of the success at first credited to them, many of the captured positions having been retaken, and the Prussians repulsed.

A London dispatch, Jan, 11, says that "Gen. Von Werder advanced yesterday on Villersexel, and took the place by storm. The twentieth French Corps was engaged and lost a number of officers and about 600 men. The French attempted to retake the position, but failed." Later dispatches, say Werder has followed up these victories, securing others. In a dispatch to the Queen, at about the same time, King William says: "Pronne has capitulated with 3,000 prisoners. Werder defeated Bourbaki on the 9th, south of Vesoul. He took 800 prisoners." The special correspondent of the "Tribune" at Versailles telegraphs as follows: "Manteuffel is here, and starts immediately to take command of the new army of the east. This army will march, via Troyes, to the support of Gen. Werder, and will occupy the Lyons district. Gen. Manteuffel leaves Gen. Von Gœber to take care of Faidherbe."

But the heaviest blow of all has been inflicted upon the French army commanded by Gen. de Chanzy, in the vicinity of Le Mans, southwest of Paris. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg—Schwerin, commanding, in connection with Prince Frederick Charles that division of the German army, telegraphs to the Duchess as follows: "After crossing River Huisne, on Tuesday, we fought on the next day a hot but victorious battle at Lombrom and La Chapelle, taking nearly 10,000 prisoners. Our loss is inconsiderable. We are advancing on Le Mans." A dispatch from Bordeaux also reports a sanguinary battle on the 11th. It stated that "the Prussians attacked the French army of the Loire along the whole line. The French maintained most of their positions. The Prussian forces engaged are estimated at 180,000. The extent of the French loss is unknown but is serious."

A late dispatch from Versailles announces that "the army under Gen. de Chanzy was completely defeated near Le Mans by the Second German Army, commanded by Prince Frederick Charles, and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. The Germans have occupied Le Mans, capturing large quantities of supplies and material. The French army are hotly pursued by the victors."

The following was written at Le Mans and telegraphed from London, Saturday, Jan. 14: "The French Army of the Loire, the last hope of France, has been defeated to-day in a bloody battle fought within seven miles of this city (Le Mans). We heard the roar of cannon all day, and the population crowded to the housetops and suburbs and thoroughfares watching the progress of the fight. I have never before witnessed such intense excitement, although the French people have become accustomed to the roar of cannon." Speaking of the opening of the battle, the correspondent says: "A more perfect line of battle could not have been formed by the finest army in Europe. The artillery was well supplied with ammunition, and the infantry had 100 rounds to each man. In addition, the supply trains were well posted and easy of access.

"Real bloody work soon began. The field of battle was in a valley, and the two armies occupied heights opposite each other, the French line forming a semicircle extending twelve miles, overlooking the valley, which was covered by twelve inches of snow. On the opposite heights the Prussians held a somewhat similar position. Shortly after nine o'clock the Prussians began a furious cannonade from the wood near the extreme left. The artillery fire was continued on both sides for some time. At length the Prussian commanders gave the order for an advance, and the German infantry moved forward. The French, equally rapid, advanced along their whole line, and the opposing armies met in the valley in a hand to hand fight. The musketry fire was very severe and effective. The German troops were cool and collected, and the French impetuous and gallant. Indeed, both armies behaved with notable bravery until near noon, when the Gardes Mobiles began to waver, and, being unable to hold their position, a retreat commenced. Meantime the dead and wounded lay upon the battle-field by thousands, and the snow fields were red with human blood.

"The carnage was fearful on both sides. Before five o'clock in the evening 15,000 French soldiers had fallen, and at this hour the whole army started in full retreat. The French and German forces were about equally matched, about 60,000 each." Latest reports of this battle, which reached the city yesterday, Monday, P. M., make the French loss, in prisoners, 20,000.

IN AND ABOUT PARIS.

News from Paris of the 7th inst., conveys information to the effect that the city had then been bombarded for three days. A London telegram, dated Jan. 12, says: "Balloon advices from Paris, of the evening of the 10th, have been received. Many shells from the German guns fell during the night in the outskirts of Paris, creating havoc in all directions, killing some women and children, and striking ambulances, churches, museums, school-houses, etc." Later advices are to the effect that the bombardment is very effective, many fires occurring in consequence.

Such is the state of affairs in poor, unhappy France, and such the humiliating condition of that great city, Paris. The French have been confident that their armies outside of Paris would win such successes as would enable them to co-operate with the invested forces, and avert or break the siege. One by one, however, those armies have been defeated and crippled, until finally only one which inspired any hope remained. That one was the really fine army of Gen. de Chanzy, in the department of the Loire. He had met with successes, and his force and movements had been a source of real anxiety to the opposing army. Determined to bear the suspense no longer, Prince Frederick Charles was reinforced from the investing army at Paris. Thus strengthened, they fought the battles in the vicinity of Le Mans. The result is the crushing defeat of Gen. Chanzy, and the blotting out of the last hope of Paris. It would seem that the next news of great importance that will be flashed through the ocean from the old world must be the downfall of the city. The sooner that event transpires, the better it will be for the poor, suffering, humanity within her limits.

BLACK SEA QUESTION.

A telegram from Vienna says: "Semi-official organs here declare that the approaching conference must uphold the validity of treaties, and insist that modifications are possible only by general consent. When the amendment of the treaty of Paris is proposed by Russia, it is essential that it should be accompanied by concessions compensating the other powers." A London dispatch dated 14th inst., says: "The Conference of the great Powers on the Black Sea difficulty has been summoned to meet in this city on Tuesday."

Only one result of the conference, on this question, can, we think, be reasonably looked for. Russia has not rushed headlong into this matter. She enters the Conference with a fixed and avowed purpose, and she will not be likely to be easily driven from it, certainly not if Prussia is firm. However, we shall soon see.

L. C. T.

THE FIRESIDE.

THE fireside is a seminary of infinite importance. It is important, but it is universal, and because the education it bestows, being woven in with the woof of our childhood, gives form and color to the whole texture of life. There are few who can receive the honors of a college, but all are graduates of the hearth. The learning of the university may fade from the recollection; its classic lore may moulder in the halls of memory. But the simple lessons of home enamelled upon the heart of childhood, defy the rust of years, and outlive the more mature but less vivid pictures of after days. So deep, so lasting, indeed, are the impressions of early life, that you often see a man in the imbecility of age holding fresh in his recollection the events of childhood, while all the wide space between that and the present hour is a blasted and forgotten waste. You have perchance seen an old and half-obliterated portrait, and in the attempt to have it cleaned and restored, you may have seen it fade away, while a brighter and more perfect picture, painted beneath is revealed to view. This portrait, first drawn on the canvass, is no inapt illustration of youth; and though it may be concealed by some after design, still the original traits will shine through the outward picture, giving it tone while fresh, and surviving it in decay.

Such is the fireside—the great institution furnished by Providence for the education of man. Having ordained that man should receive his character from education, it was also ordained that early instruction should exert a decisive influence on character, and that during this important period of existence, children should be subject to the charge of their parents. The sagacity and benevolence displayed in this design afford a striking manifestation of that wisdom and goodness, which we behold in all the works of God. It appears, that in every stage of society, parental education adjusts itself to the wants of children. In the savage state, where there is no division of property, no complicated system of laws and relations, no religion, save the naked idea of a God, who rewards the good and punishes the wicked, education has a narrow scope; but such as is needed is supplied. As society advances into civilization, duties multiply, and responsibilities increase; there is then a demand for higher moral and intellectual culture. Providence has foreseen and provided for this necessity; for, with the advance of refinement and knowledge, the family circle is drawn closer together, and the solicitude of parents for their children, and their influence over them, are proportionably increased. Thus, while in a rude age, children are left, almost like the untutored animals, to make their own way, when knowledge is diffused, and the light of religion spread abroad, then it is that enlightened education becomes necessary, then it is that parental education becomes vigilant, then it is that children are most completely subjected to the influence of parents.—Selected.

IN a letter written by a German soldier occurs the following highly romantic account of his camp and quarters:

"I am sitting in a French tent, erected in the Prince Imperial's play-ground, behind the burned palace of St. Cloud. Imperial mattresses serve for a bed, and silk sofa and chair cushions for pillows. For blankets we use Turkey carpets and other articles from the palace. We also use the splendid tea and coffee service of Sevres or Alferide porcelain, the imperial plate, glasses, and bottles, on all which the inevitable 'N.,' with the crown above it, is inscribed. The Prince's playground is a large grass-plot, with a miniature railway in the middle, with tunnel, bridges, and a station. Of course these artificial contrivances are now ruined, only a few fragments remaining. There are likewise some remains of a gymnastic apparatus, which the soldiers burn up in making their soup or coffee."

Strange scenes these; but stranger ones may yet transpire among the ruins of the Napoleonic dynasty.

L. C. T.

NECESSITY FOR PRAYER.

BY D. K. ALLEN.

"Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified."—2 Thess. iii. 1.

WE are dependent creatures. We cannot be religious without a proper recognition of that dependence. Prayer is the only appropriate discipline of that dependence. It is begging; and there is no other way by which we can obtain any favor from the Author of every good and perfect gift but by begging. He has instituted no other way. If he had appointed us to labor for those blessings, we would not feel our dependence. We would feel that we had earned them. But when we find they can be obtained only by asking, we feel our dependence, and can with the poet say:

> "Then to begging I will go.
> The richest man I ever knew
> Was one that begged the most;
> His soul was filled with Jesus,
> And with the Holy Ghost."

It concentrates the mind and heart on the subject of Christianity, being led to pray earnestly and perseveringly in order to place the mind and heart fully on the subject.

It is necessary in order to the recognition of the hand of God in the work. Suppose on the day of Pentecost the minds of the disciples had been scattered, and not united in prayer, and the power had fallen; they would not have known whether it was mesmerism, or a false fire, or what not. But when the mind was concentrated, asking for it, as they did on the day of Pentecost, and the answer came, they recognized the hand of God, and gave Him the glory.

The religious wants of man involve the necessity of prayer. God has commanded it. He has suspended the success of the gospel upon that condition. The performance of that condition leads to inevitable success.

WINONA, MINN., Jan. 5, 1871.

THE DRAGON.—REV. XX.

BY CALEB THOMPSON.

IN Rev. xvi we have an account of the three unclean spirits gathering the nations to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. While they are doing this work Christ is coming upon them as a thief. The "dragon" and "Satan" are one and the same in Rev. xx. 2, and through the book of Rev. The dragon was to be bound in the bottomless pit for one thousand years: he then comes out and slays the two witnesses.—Rev. xi. 7.

Now, have the two witnesses been slain? If so, then the thousand years are surely in the past. In the French revolution, about 1792, the two witnesses (the old and new testament) were leveled in the dust, and all religion destroyed, and atheism was established by law. A host of testimony might be given on this point, but we think it unnecessary. There is but one bottomless pit brought to view in this book. The dragon is the beast which is to go into it, and of course is the only one that can come out of it. The beast that thou sawest was, is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition.—Rev. xvii. 8. As the French government is this dragonic power, as before stated, that government is going to destruction. In Dan. vii. 11, we have this language: "I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake, I beheld till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame."

There is some connection between the speaking of these "great words," and the slaying of the beast. The "great words" are the establishing of the dogma of infallibility. Now it seems to me that the beast is slain, and its body is struggling but will soon be destroyed and given to the burning flame. Then Gentile governments will come to an end, and the kingdom of God be established on the earth. The Lord grant that we may be prepared for this glorious event which is so soon to take place, is my prayer. The Lord tells us, in Mark xiii, that we would not know whether he would come at even, at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. We have watched at even, 1844, at midnight, '54, and at cock-crowing, '67. Now having watched through three watches, and he did not come, we know that he will come in the morning watch. In Luke xii, we have a parable, the ground of a certain rich man, that brought forth plentifully; and it is said in this parable that his soul shall be required in this night, which proves that this night of watches will never end until the Lord comes.

O bless the Lord that we are in the fourth watch. Our disappointments are all in the past. A little while and we will have the privilege of changing our position. We have been saying the Lord is coming, but soon we will have it to say the Lord has come. Glory be to God and the Lamb for such a prospect.

PROVIDENCE, Jan., 1871.

THE FUTURE OF PALESTINE.

RABBI SNEERSOHN's lecture, on Oct. 5, after referring to such questions as to why, when and how the Israelites will return to Jerusalem, concludes as follows:

And now, my friends, if we look around, we shall find that the signs of the times are such as to allow the hope of a fulfilment of the prophecies. Everything is in favor of it, nothing is against it. In France, there is already a society in existence, called the Jewish Alliance, whose aim is to ameliorate the state of Jews all over the world. The central seat of this society is at Paris, but its benevolent tendencies spread over all parts where Jews live. Never before was there any thing like it. In Palestine, fields have been purchased and buildings have been erected, which are all sure signs that their salvation is not far distant, that it is approaching nearer and nearer. And so we see already fulfilled the words of Jeremiah: "For again they will buy fields and vineyards in this country."

The example of Abraham teaches us what we have to do. God had said to Abraham, that He would give him and his seed the land of Palestine, for all time to come. But, nevertheless, Abraham purchased the burial ground in Hebron; he paid for it 400 shekels of silver, current money with the merchant, and did not murmur against God. Therefrom we may learn, that he who believes in God, is to wait for Him to fulfil His promise, and so we may wait for the goodness of God, as well as for the benevolence which the rulers and princes will show to Israel.

It is an undeniable fact that, from this country of America, the first light went out to shine upon the other countries, and it will be this light again which will shine benevolently upon the Lily of Jacob, that it may blossom again; the rose of Jericho, by the help of this light, may again assume new life and strength. The crescent, which nowadays reigns over Palestine, will be no more a half moon. We can already notice how its light is fading away, while the stars and stripes are ever increasing. They are to outshine the half-moon; they will call the sons of Israel to ascend the holy mountain, and the flag of freedom will wave over the holy ground.

The time of which Isaiah said, "Zion will be redeemed with justice and her converts with righteousness," (Isaiah i. 37,) this time is coming. The documents which testify to the rights of Israel in regard to the Holy Land, are well known all over the world; the Holy Bible is our testimony, and the prophets are our witnesses.

Therefore it is the sacred duty of every one to make all effort to awaken the hearts of those who are rulers of justice and kings of mercy, that they come to our help, to bring us to our ancient home.

In standing here, in the free country of America, amidst so many wise and intelligent men, who believe in God, and whose eyes are open to his doings, I cherish the hope that the words and wishes which I have expressed will be accepted benevently. I hope, that those whose hearts may have been moved by my words, that they, in their turn, better speakers than I am, will speak to others in behalf of the holy object, that they, to whom God has given the power of eloquence, will be the advocates of His land and people.

I know that there are many wise men among the Christians who agree with me in regard to the restoration of Israel and her political welfare. They differ from me only in what regards the universal salvation, and through whom it is to come.

But they all believe, that the day is not far off, when all hearts will be united in one unity, and they, too, expect the great light to come. I, for my part, do not wish to enter into controversies about things hidden from us, and only in order to awaken the idea of good and right. I shall repeat the words of the prophet Malachi, (ii. 10.) "Have you not all one Father?" Has not one God created us? Should we deal treacherously every man against his brother? The Lord will do what pleases Him; . . . . and they who will accelerate the time by assisting the Israelites to take possession of their holy land, will be rewarded, as every good is rewarded by God, besides the internal reward—which the human heart finds in itself, in having done some good.—Jewish Messenger.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM DR. JOHN BILLINGS.

DEAR EDITORS: I write to say a few words through the HERALD, for the benefit of those that are just beginning to get light on the glorious theme of life to those only who are in Christ. First: There are many of us who have long since become established in these truths, and whose faith has been widening and deepening in the great plan of God. Now, what I want to suggest is, that more space be given in the paper for the benefit of those that have just begun to learn. Would it not be a good plan to have in each number of the paper one article on some of those texts that seem to be objectionable to the idea of the non-living of those who are out of Christ?

I have heard complaints from that class of brethren on this point. I know many that are satisfied in relation to our argument, but, say they, these texts plague me; I can't get along with them. Now, if they had something every week on some of those seemingly objectionable texts, it would help them very much. It is for this class of brethren we labor; yea, for the weak we will deprive ourselves of some things we would like. I know much is published on the subject, yet there seems to be a lack, I think, on this particular point.

We want that tract from Br. Grim on John v. 28, 29. I have promised it to many in this part of the country. It is just what we want. I think the view that Br. Grim takes of it will give general satisfaction, or the most so of any thing I have seen.

My health is some better. I have so far improved that I can preach a little. Have preached two or three discourses this winter. The prospect is good, I think, that quite a number will be led to see the truth, if the Lord gives me health so I can speak more to the people. It was two years last Sept. since I lost my health. Have not been able to labor, consequently I am deprived of the means I used to have to help the paper with, but shall do all I can for it by getting subscribers.

Yours, in hope of life when He who is our life shall appear.

NEW RUTLAND, ILL., Jan., 1871.

TO BR. STORRS: Myself and all the brethren in this part send greeting. We sympathize with you in your affliction, always making mention of you in our prayers, that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, by his divine Spirit, may so fill you with that holy unction that your whole body, soul and spirit may be preserved in complete sanctification unto the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. This I say and am persuaded of that Christ will be magnified in your body whether it be by life or by death. We are persuaded that for you to live is Christ, to die would be gain. We are persuaded that your work is nearly done, and having this confidence, that you have kept the faith, and are ready to be offered. Having fought a good fight, there is henceforth laid up for you a crown, which the Lord our righteous Judge will give you at that day; and not only to you but to all that love his appearing.

NEW RUTLAND, ILL., Jan., 1870.

FROM W. H. BARNES.

BR. THORNE: After delaying some time, in the renewal of my subscription for the dear HERALD, I am happy now that I can do so. I would be glad, if I could, to do more. My pen cannot express my anxiety with regard to our dear Br. STORRS in his illness. I trust, however, that I can submit to the will of our Father in heaven, without murmuring. Br. STORRS has labored hard and long, has kept the prize in view, and I doubt not, is ready (if it be the Master's will) to lay his armor by; to sleep in Jesus and rest in hope; yet if it be our Lord's will, O how my soul would leap for joy, to hear of his restoration to health.

O brethren and sisters, who are looking for our coming Lord, let us keep our lamps trimmed and burning, that we may be ready to enter into the marriage supper with Him. Let us be sure that we have on the wedding garment.

I try to pray for all, and especially for those who expect a "Future life through Christ" the LIFE-GIVER alone. Pray for unworthy me, that I may be "kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."

ALBANY, MO., Dec., 1870.

FROM L. H. ROWE.

TO THOSE OF "LIKE PRECIOUS FAITH:" Greeting: Grace, mercy and peace be multiplied unto you. Again, after a lapse of several weeks, I take the liberty of informing the dear children, who are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth," that I am still journeying to that heavenly country which faithful Abraham "looked for," and which we expect soon to obtain for an everlasting inheritance. This hope has sustained me thus far in the service of the Nobleman, who has gone away to "a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return again;" and when he returns I really believe "the kingdom and dominion . . . shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," and they, the saints, will "possess the kingdom forever and ever." Thus saith the Lord: "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." How glorious will it be to get safely out of this wicked and adulterous age, and "sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God," there to reign forever. O, I long to be there to enjoy the rest that remains "for the people of God," and pluck the savory fruit from the "tree of life that is in the midst of the paradise of God."

When cast into the furnace of affliction, and surrounded by many of the cares, ills, perplexities and disappointments of this mortal life, I sigh for the Master's return, for this event, and this only, will bring lasting joys and peace to those who are waiting for "God's Son from heaven." I rejoice that the day of the Lord is nigh at hand, and hasteth greatly. The humble few who are looking for the appearing of the LIFE-GIVER, will soon see the consummation of their hope; and while the eastern sky is illuminated with the rays of coming morning, let us labor earnestly for the salvation of those who are perishing all around us; bring in the gleanings of the harvest while it is an appointed time to work, and then when Jesus comes we shall have stars in the crown of our rejoicing, which will shine with undimmed lustre through the endless cycles of eternity. Amen.

Yours, in the blessed hope.

LEWISTON, ME., Dec. 27, 1870.

FROM HENRY A. TROEGER.

BR. STORRS: Having promised the Lord the first fruits of my business, I herewith send the same, which please make use of in spreading the glorious truth of Life only in Christ, as you see fit. I have found no one as yet of like faith out here, still I am, with the Lord's help, scattering seeds here and there wherever I have an opportunity.

I have set several of the preachers of the M. E. church to thinking, and when they have investigated the matter, they intend to utterly annihilate my doctrine with their proofs which they expect to find.

I feel greater confidence in my Saviour than ever before. I see more and more of that unchanging love which prayed, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." Oh how it must grieve the pure and holy Spirit of our heavenly Father, to hear himself proclaimed through the ignorance of some of his children, as the eternal tormentor of the wicked. Glory to God for the light shed abroad in our hearts.

Awaiting with you and all the Lord's children His glorious coming, I am your brother in Christ.

OSCEOLA, IOWA, Jan. 2, 1871.

FROM BLOOMFIELD D. WOLCOTT.

DEAR EDITORS: I take this opportunity to inform the many friends of beloved Br. Eseck Wolcott concerning his health. He is still very feeble. At times he feels quite encouraged that the Lord will yet restore him to usefulness. To this end he earnestly craves the prayers of God's children. He feels the spirit of God abundantly with him.

EATONTOWN, N. J.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: By your weekly visits I have been enabled to look with interest for the first tokens of the recovery of our beloved and faithful editor, Br. STORRS; and I thank God from the bottom of my heart that you have brought such good news this week. May you long live to give light to those that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.

Permit me, then, to say, I wish Br. STORRS a "Happy New Year." May he through the blessings of God fully recover his health, and soon again be in the Gospel battle-field; and may his last days in the great conflict for truth, be his best days. Amen.

"A happy New Year" to Doctor Miller, and all others interested in the recovery of Br. STORRS.

A "Happy New Year" to Br. THORNE who has so ably and faithfully conducted you during the past two months.

A "Happy New Year" to all those who met eight years ago, under the big chestnut tree, at Wilbraham, and started you into existence. At that time I had not much interest in you, my dear HERALD, but in the course of time I have observed your straight forward course, and am happy to say I love you much, and can recommend you, and the message you bring to the world, viz.: "Life from the dead" to believers only. Although I have had to suffer some reproach, I am as firm as ever that none will ever be "redeemed from death" except those who have partaken of the "divine nature." As Christ has brought "life and immortality to light," he brought no other kind of life to light but that which is connected with immortality, i. e., eternal life.

It was not the prerogative of the Christ to give immortal life, for we get that by being connected with the "first Adam;" but the "life which is to come" is on the condition of being justified by faith, whereby we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ; and on this condition God has promised to raise us up at the last day, and not one thousand years after the last day.

And now, dear HERALD, I bid you God speed. May you go forth as a lamp that burneth; and may the rays of your light cause many to rejoice in the great plan of redemption. May we all be kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

A few more months, or years will land us safe on Canaan's coast. There we will commence a "Happy New Year," even the YEAR OF JUBILEE.

EAST BOSTON, MASS., Jan., 1871.

FROM STEWART CARLISLE.

DEAR EDITORS: Please send me a few copies of Br. STORRS' Review of Dr. Post's Essay; also "Letter to a Clergyman." Thank God the truth is spreading here, and like the gentle dew, is giving life to thirsty souls; and in consequence of this the "son of the bond woman" has commenced his persecution, A work in opposition to our views has been put in circulation here, but grace conquers, and the freedom of the truth makes men talk with other tongues, as the Spirit gives them utterance.

May the Spirit help us to be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. O how we love to see those who, like Lydia, have their hearts opened to receive the glorious truth of "No Life out of Christ." Yes, we love it. Praise the Lord, he can make the wrath of man praise him, and though man may try to thunder and lighten and create a tempest, yet we can hear the still small voice, "It is I, be not afraid," and calmly, and trustingly, and lovingly wait, for the gentle movings of that blessed Spirit which shall lead us into all truth. Thank the good Lord for ears to hear, eyes to see, and hearts to understand.

Oh, how my heart rejoices, that ever the vail was removed and the glory of God was revealed "in the face of Jesus Christ." My heart yearns with strong sympathy for my brethren in the former faith, shut up as they are in the mysticisms of traditionary teachers, and, like the owl, hating to come to the light, they prefer to seek seclusion amid the shadows, nooks, niches, and caves of the old decaying ruins of the Mystic Babylon. Would that they might hear the loving, moving voice of Him who says, "Come out of her, Oh, my people, that ye be not partakers of her plagues." Yours waiting in hope.

WILMINGTON, DEL., Jan., 1871.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

BR. THORNE: I hope and pray that our dear Br. STORRS is still living, and recovering strength. The long lapse of time since the last issue, Dec. 21, makes us feel very anxious to hear from you all, especially our dear Br. STORRS. O what sorrowful news it would be to learn that he has fallen asleep. But then, when we look at the bright side of the matter, having the assurance that all things work together for good to them that love God, we rejoice and in everything give thanks, knowing that death will soon be deprived of his power. Soon the all conquering King will come to make up his special treasures; and then we will all meet to part no more. We are doing all we can in the way of circulating tracts, in our weak capacity, and limited means, and, on the whole, truth is gaining ground.

We had thought long before this to have been out in the field of labor, but our lack of the means necessary to travel, old age, and the inclemency of the weather are keeping us mostly at home. Some good friends, we are informed, talk of sending us some money to help us on our way. I pray they may, for I long to be out blowing the Gospel trumpet. May the Lord direct.

GRAFTON, ILL.

FROM J. HAMILTON.

BR. THORNE: As I cannot now address Br. STORRS, on account of his feeble health, I am very thankful that I can you, in his place. It has been a long time since I have spoken to the brethren and sisters through the paper. I have been satisfied to let its columns be filled by able pens; but I would not be silent to the neglect of duty. I want to say to my dear brethren and sisters that I still love the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour, as set forth in the main, through the columns of our excellent paper, with, I trust, unabating love. I value it and receive it as the able teacher of the word, far above all the D.D.'s in the land, and it grows better and better, which is evidence that God, as at the first, directs it, and enlightens the minds of those that strive to know the Lord.

I feel that the sickness of our beloved Br. STORRS will produce a good effect upon the church, for in past years many, perhaps, like myself, have thought that if he was taken from the paper its light would be very much diminished, but God does not see as man sees; he called the one before the other failed. So let us trust in God, and may the prayers of His children be effectual before God, and Br. STORRS be spared yet to labor in the vineyard.

FREDONIA, Jan. 1st, 1871.

P. S.—I would return many thanks to the one who sent me a package of Br. Wolcot's tract, the BIBLE VIEW OF HELL, they are all out. Room for more.

FROM J. D. SHERIDAN.

I HAVE not words to express the esteem in which I hold your excellent paper. I have been sorely afflicted for a long time, on account of poverty and sickness. For nearly two years past I have been unable to perform any labor, and have a wife and two children who are looking to me for bread. But the Lord in whom we trust will open his hand "and satisfy the desire of every living thing." Bless his holy name!

I have tried to be faithful and earnest to do my duty, as regards increasing the circulation of the HERALD, for I have felt an earnest desire to do all in my power to let the light shine in this part of God's vineyard, where moral darkness and superstition reign triumphant. I cannot preach, but I have scattered the silent messengers, as much as I was able, and they have gone forth to proclaim the truth to many. May the Lord bless the seed sown!

I have been able to walk about but little for two months past. Should my life be spared until warm weather, I hope to be about again. This is the first I have been able to write for two weeks.

Brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead.

OSAGE, IOWA, Jan., 1871.

JOHN WITHAM, of West Epping, N. H., writes: I am a constant reader of the HERALD OF LIFE, and find it founded on the true principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I think it the best paper of the present age, because its columns are filled with the doctrine of the holy apostles, showing that Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life. I cannot find in the Scriptures that man has an immortal nature. The first man was of the earth, earthy; but the second man is the Lord from heaven, and through him, I hope to find eternal life. No life out of Christ is my belief, and that to be given at the resurrection, when Christ comes. All the signs proclaim his advent near. I hold meetings occasionally and talk "Life" to the people, but very few believe the doctrine. Brethren, pray for me, that I may meet God's loved ones, in that land that was promised to Abraham, and his seed after him.

EDWIN LYMAN, of Northfield, Mass., writes: I want the HERALD continued; could not well get along without it. I love too well the blessed truths it advocates—the soon coming of JESUS and Life only in and through him.

How is dear Br. Storrs? I was made sad to hear of his sickness; it seems so long since I have heard from him, as there was no paper last week. I pray God, if it be in harmony with his will, to raise him up again to health, and may God give Br. THORNE strength and health to perform the duties devolving upon you as Assistant Editor during our beloved Editor's illness is my prayer.

Yours, in hope of Life when Christ shall come.

NORTHFIELD, MASS., Jan. 7, 1871.

OBITUARY.

DIED, at Northwood Narrows, Nov, 17, Mary Abbie, only daughter of Br. and Sr. J S. Swain, aged one year.

Although young, little Mary was entwined in the affections of fond parents, and brothers, who look forward with fond anticipations to the time when he who brought again our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead shall heal this breach made in their family. D. S. HOLT.

DIED.—At Northwood Narrows, 29th ult., Br. WILLIAM WATSON, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. Br. WATSON's thoughts were called to the subject of salvation in early life, and he became a devout follower of Christ. In 1842 he was interested in the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and drank deeply of the cup of blessings that has been held to the lips of that people, being identified in their prominent movements. In 1863 he learned the glorious Gospel of Life only in Christ, which he appreciated as only a man of his peculiar strength of mind could, and in which he rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

His logical mind was supported by a robust physical system, which hardly knew fatigue until disease which was scrofula made heavy inroads upon it. About a year has been consumed in wearing him out, since he gave up his work. The process has been slow but not very painful until the last four weeks.

In addition to an extensive circle of friends, and more distant relatives, he leaves, to mourn his loss, the beloved companion of his youth, and eight children, all of whom were present at his funeral, save one son who lives in Kansas. They will long remember the counsels of their father, and await with patience the morn when he who is sown in weakness will be raised in power; for they mourn not as those that have no hope. D. S. HOLT.

DIED, in Groton Junction, Mass., on the morning of Nov. 23, 1870, SYBIL P., wife of AARON MASON, aged 71 years and 16 days.

On the night of Nov. 22 a telegram from my only sister summoned me to my dying mother. I started immediately, taking the midnight train for New York. All the next day I rode, surrounded by the happy multitude, who were speeding from every quarter to spend Thanksgiving day in their New England homes. But my heart seemed dead within me. I dared not hope—I could not think of what I had to fear. Night brought me to the end of my sad journey, at my father's house; but the glad welcome, the joyous, fond caress that had ever awaited me there was paralyzed in death, and sobs and tears were in their stead.

The tireless ministrations of a mother's love had ceased. After a severe illness of five days and a half she slept. Yes, she who had loved us so fondly, borne with us so patiently, prayed for us so earnestly and lived before us so holily, slept and we were motherless.

It was but a few hours before her death that the fatal nature of her sickness became apparent. The drowsiness and stupor which characterized it from the first, prevented her from saying much, but she evidently realized that death was near; and her words, "All is peace; I have no fear," were but the utterances of that confidence in God which had sustained her through her long Christian pilgrimage.

But we needed not the words of that hour of suffering to assure us of her victorious faith. Her life was a constant exemplification of its divine power. In long, weary months of suffering, caused at one time by a fractured hip, again, from a broken arm; and, usually, in feeble health, her patience had been thoroughly proved; and of it was born the calmness which she so constantly manifested in the most trying circumstances.

Those who knew her best loved her most. The many, who, for thirty-five years past have occasionally shared her truly Christian hospitality, know how sadly we have cause to mourn.

With acute perceptions, naturally, she examined carefully what ever doctrine was presented to her, comparing it with the word of God; and if she proved it worthy to be received, she was ever after its firm and stedfast adherent. Thus she heard and embraced the Advent views, at first under the ministration of Br. Miller; then the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, and the sleep of the saints; and later, the whole glorious plan of divine love by which only the righteous live again from the dead.

Henceforth, to us the resurrection hath an increased interest because until then the grave hath locked in its keeping the most precious jewel of our family circle. Her warfare is accomplished; her work is done. To her has come "blessed, peaceful rest;" but for us remain labor, and conflicts, and tears. Our beloved father, bereft of her companionship, needs the sympathy and prayers of the saints. Thank God! he "sorrows not as those who have no hope."

Though an enemy hath laid her low, his time of triumph is short. Long ere her two remaining daughters shall reach three score years and ten, we trust the "mortal shall put on immortality," and death shall be swallowed up in victory." E. C. M. BOYD.

Will the "CRISIS" please copy?

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 28, 1870.

"IT is stated that about one thousand persons have lost their lives in connection with the working of the Mont Cenis tunnel since it was first begun in 1857."

APPOINTMENTS.

MERIDEN, Conn., Jan. 15.
SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 22.
CHAS. G. BARKER.

PHILADELPHIA, until Jan. 28.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Jan. 29.
MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 5.
MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 12.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Feb. 19.
WM. STUART.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—H. Bundy, Wm. Dinsmore, Sarah Nelson, Albert White, Nathaniel Chase, M. Chandler, L. Clough, M. Green, W. Carpenter.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Samuel Foster, E. W. Smith, Anna E. Sturgess, J. Pearsall, C. Smith, S. S. Call, H. Adams, C. Chase, F. Gladding.

VARIOUS SUMS—Wm. Roworth, $25 on pledge; Frances Roworth, $25 on pledge; Mrs. S. Lewis, 50 cents; W. Smith, $5; L. F. Norris, $1 50; J. Clement, $1 10.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

J. Porter, E. B. Taft, E. W. Smith, (we are out of No. 17, shall have some soon, when they will be sent) E. L. Williams, P. D. Salter.

A Sterling Old Poem.

Who shall judge man from his manners?
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vest can do no more.

There are streams of crystal nectar
Ever flowing out of stone;
There are purple beds and golden,
Hidden, crushed, and overthrown.
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters—rulers—lords, remember
That your meanest hinds are men!
Men of labor, men of feeling,
Men of thoughts and men of fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little wood-clad rills;
There are feeble inch-high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills.
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For to him all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame,
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same:
By the sweat of others' foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right.
God, whose world-wide voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Links oppression with its titles
But as pebbles in the sea.

—Selected.

The End of this Age.

BY W. H. HANFORD.

"So shall it be in the end of this age."—Matt. xiii. 40. The Jewish age was to end with the close of the seventy weeks, Dan. ix. 24, and destruction of "thy holy city," which took place A. D. 70. It is manifest that our Lord was under the Jewish economy, or age, up to the day of his death, and when he said "the end of this age," he did not mean the end of the succeeding, or Gentile age. "The Son of man shall send for his angels," (the Roman legions were his angels, or messengers of destruction), "and they shall gather out of his kingdom all who occasion sin, or are stumbling blocks, and those who commit iniquity" (Whiting), "and shall cast them iuto a furnace of fire." There was wailing and gnashing of teeth in the city of Jerusalem. Thousands upon thousands died of pestilence, starvation, etc. Six hundred thousand dead bodies were cast into the valley of Hinnon, or hell. Jesus refers to the same event when He says, "Ye serpents, ye generations of vipers, how can ye escape the condemnation of" (gehennah) "hell" Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

The disciples went forth everywhere dispensing the sunlight of God's eternal truth. As darkness is dissipated, and the earth illuminated by the orb of day, so should the idolatrous mind of the heathen world be illuminated by the light of God, as manifested in the lives and teachings of the righteous. They warned the Jews of these very judgments, remembering the words of Jesus: "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the destruction thereof is nigh," they were enabled to flee out, while others hastened into the city of destruction. Thus were "the wicked separated from among the just."

"In the kingdom of their Father." "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be as a peculiar treasure unto me ABOVE ALL PEOPLE; . . . and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."—Ex. xix. 5, 6. It appears to have been the design of God to organize a kingdom of priests, through whom he could enlighten and rule the world. "O that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways! I should have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. The haters of the Lord should have submitted themselves unto him; but their time should have endured forever."—Psa. lxxxi. They failed, and God hath made choice of another people. "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you," (Jews) "and given to a nation" (seed of Abraham through Christ) "bringing forth the fruits thereof."—Matt. xxi. 43. The fruits which this "royal priesthood," this "holy nation," 1 Pet. ii. 9, were to bring forth would ultimately cause the enemies of the Lord to submit themselves unto him. This is the seed which is to bless all nations.—Gen. xxii. 18. These will be the sons of God, immortal, to whose liberty, Rom. viii. 21, the creature man will gladly come, who will be ready to take up the language of the disciple on the mount, "it is good for us to be here." There is, therefore, a sense (though limited) in which the righteous are spoken of as the kingdom of God. It was necessary to take the types and shadows, away after their fulfilment. God was no longer honored, but dishonored, and the infant church hampered by the continued sacrifices in the temple at Jerusalem. The Jews, however, did not see it in that light. It was, therefore, necessary that the temple and city, where it was lawful to offer sacrifice, should be destroyed, and the nation dispersed. The king sent forth his (Roman) army and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.—Matt. xxii. 7. Jesus did not refer to the Christian dispensation when He said, "Now is the judgment of this world," or age, but to the Mosaic. "He beheld the city," near the close of his mission, and wept over it, saying, "if thou hadst known, even thou at least in this thy" (Jewish) "day, the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes . . . thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, . . . and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children with thee." Here is the Judge, and here is the judgment of that people pronounced. The heathen are neither wheat nor tares. The tares are a kind of false or blasted wheat: both being developed by the light of God.

NEW YORK, Dec., 1870.

Trust in God.

In a village nor far from the capital there lived a poor musician, with wife and child, or rather children, for he had six of them. His income was very small. On Sundays he played the organ in the church, and although the parish was wonderfully edified by the glorious sounds he enticed from the instrument with skillful hand, it never occurred to it to reward the modest artist. He received for his profession of organist twenty dollars a year, and with this sum the worthy peasants thought he ought to be satisfied.

But the twenty dollars, although Walther owned a small house, did not suffice to feed and clothe his large family. In summer-time the little boys and girls ran about barefooted, and in winter they had to content themselves with wooden shoes, which, if they were a little heavy, at least kept them warm, and did not need re-soling, as leather ones would do. But the children must have clothes. Frau Walther made their garments of gray linen, woven and spun by herself, in order that they might not cost so much; but even this simple clothing cost money, and many times a year friend Walther scratched behind his ear when his wife came and represented that Hans or Christian or Lottie must really have a new garment, because the old one was so torn that it could be patched and pieced no longer. Then they would take counsel together, and somehow or other, when their poverty reached its height, help would come from the most unexpected quarter.

In the long run, however, things went hardly enough with him, and many a time a year he and his wife and children had to go to bed hungry, and many a noonday came when there was nothing to eat but a bit of dry bread or a couple of potatoes sprinkled with salt; as for drink, they never had any thing but the clear, fresh water that flowed in a fountain near the house.

With all their poverty and all their need, however, Walther's family were always cheerful, and they never lost, even in the worst time, their faith in God, and their hope for a better future. The six children bloomed like red poppies, and their simple mode of living kept them well, so that not one of them was ever sick. Father Walther sat all day hard at work making jackets and coats for the peasantry, and never complained that the time seemed long to him.

But he loved his art above all other things. Often when he had been sitting at work till far into the night, busy with needle and shears, he would softly slip into the church, lock himself in, and play whatever his mood inspired. The pastor had often said, "The organist in the capital, who plays every Sunday to our gracious prince and noblemen, cannot possibly play so well as our Walther, and it is a sin and shame that such a man should be so miserably off in our village." He had often tried to persuade Walther to go to the capital, and ask leave to play in the court church; but the modest man had always refused.

"If God only lets me keep what I have, I shall be well content," he would answer. "Here my music gives pleasure, but I should only be laughed at at court."

At last, one wintry night, a great noise was heard in the village. The night watchman blew powerfully on his horn, and the cry of "Fire! fire!" sounded fearfully through the streets. Everybody sprang out of bed in terror; the men rushed into the streets, and asked hastily, "Where? where?" "Walther's house!" was the answer, and everybody crowded together, and rolled like a stream toward the abode of the poor man. All were ready to help and to save; but, alas! help came too late.

Walther stood not far from his burning house, and looked sadly and with folded hands at the destruction the fire was making of his property. His wife and children stood about him, crying as if their hearts would break. The father, though sorely troubled, spoke to them some words of comfort. "Do not be afraid, children, and do not despair! Our dear Lord still lives, and whatever he sends upon us we must consider as providence, intended for our good."

"Bravely spoken, my man!" said the Herr Pastor, who stood near, and had heard Walther's words. "He who puts his confidence in God is not lost, and has a staff on which he can lean in every trouble." The neighbors and the rich farmers of the village came now, and offered the afflicted family a refuge in their houses. This touched him deeply, and he said with tears in his eyes, "See, children, how God himself makes the blossom of joy spring out of misfortune."

The family took refuge in the large house of the village magistrate, and fell asleep amid tears and prayers.

The next morning it was seen that of Walther's property not the smallest thing had been saved, except what little parents and children had upon their backs. And that was little enough. And as he sat brooding over his misfortune, thinking and thinking what would become of him, he remembered what the Herr Pastor had urged him to do.

"Yes," said he, "I will go to the capital, to our gracious prince. Perhaps our dear Lord will touch his heart, and perhaps he will have compassion on me, and give me some little salary on which, with economy, we can live." He went to the Herr Pastor, told him what he proposed to do, and begged him to give him a note to the prince, in which as much might be said in his favor as was consistent with truth. The pastor wrote to the prince, and gave the letter to poor Walther, with his best blessing.

In a few days Walther reached the palace. He ascended the wide, stone-stairs, with a trembling step, and saw the doorkeeper before him, who looked at him scornfully from head to foot, and then asked in a harsh tone, "What do you want?"

Walther was alarmed at this rough salutation, and replied timidly, "I wish to see our gracious prince, and to hand him a letter from my pastor."

"A begging letter, no doubt!" cried the man. "Be off with yourself! The prince cannot listen to every straggler that comes along!"

These cruel words went like sharp swords through Walther's heart. He stood sadly before the door of the palace, his lips trembling and with hot tears in his eyes.

"Well, what are you standing gaping there for?" cried the doorkeeper. "Must I show you the way down the steps?"

Walther sighed, and turned his back upon the palace, in order to go away. He had scarcely taken a couple of steps, when he felt a hand on his arm, and a kind, friendly voice said:

"Wait a little longer, my good man."

Walther looked round, and saw an old man, with bright, intelligent little eyes, which regarded him with sympathy and compassion.

"You wish to see our gracious prince?" he asked.

"Yes; but I am forbidden," replied Walther, in a choking voice.

"Softly, softly! Perhaps we can bring it about," said the old man, smiling. "This rude fellow cannot prevent it, at any rate. I am the chamberlain of our gracious master, and if you will step into my little room, we can consider the matter. I feel your misfortunes very sensibly, for I see that you are a God-fearing, Christian man. Intrust your pastor's letter to me. I will give it to the prince to-day, and then we must wait to see what he will decide. Keep up your courage, Herr Walther. God will never forsake one who trusts him as you do." Walther gave up the letter without hesitation. "And now," said his new friend, "pass away the time as you best can. If you have a fancy to try the organ in the palace chapel, go to the sexton, and tell him that I would like him to unlock the door and admit you to the gallery. He will do it with pleasure."

"Will he really?" asked Walther joyfully. "May I really venture to play upon that splendid organ? Ah, I shall do it only too gladly!"

"Well, go then, go then," said the chamberlain, smiling. "In an hour or so I will come to the chapel for you."

He was delighted, too, that he could play on this large, beautiful organ, and with a powerful hand he ran over the keys, and played the air to the sweet hymn—

"Commit thy every way,
And all that grieves and pains,
To that true Father-care
Which the whole world sustains."

The notes of the powerful organ resounded gloriously beneath the vaulted roof of the church. Walther, overcome by his own holy emotions, forgot everything about him, fancied himself in his own little village church, unmindful how the minutes were flying away, until an hour and a half had slipped by.

Suddenly he stopped playing, for a strange hand tapped him lightly on the shoulder, and a strange voice said:

"Well done, my new organist! Stop now, and speak with my chamberlain, who will have more to tell you."

Walther looked up, saw a tall, handsome man standing behind him, who nodded to him n a friendly way, but, without waiting for a word in reply, hastened away with rapid footsteps.

"Tell me, I beseech you, who was that gentleman?" he asked the chamberlain.

"Don't you know, you lucky man? It was the prince, our most gracious master, who has appointed you organist to the court?"

"It is too much, O my God!" cried Walther, nearly fainting with joy and surprise.

"Come with me, my good fellow," said his friend cheerfully; "in my little room at home I will find something to refresh you, and then I will tell you all that has happened."

He drew the bewildered Walther away, and when he had a little recovered himself, said to him:

"Listen, my good friend and court organist." Walther smiled at this new title. "When you told me the story of your misfortunes, it occurred to me that our court organist wished to retire, owing to old age, and I thought I might kill two birds with one stone—help the one to repose, end the other to a good position. I sent you to the church to play, for I had resolved to propose you to the prince as successor to our organist, and knew he would go to the church to hear you when I had told him all concerning you it was important he should know. Everything turned out as I thought it would. Our good, gracious prince accompanied me to the church, heard you play like an angel from heaven, and now you are a made man. Six hundred dollars salary, a house, all the wood you want; what would you have more?"

"O my God!" cried Walther, while tears of joy ran down his cheeks, "O my God! what have I done to deserve this happiness?" "Control yourself," said the chamberlain, seriously. "God has sent you this good fortune because you were patient in trouble and joyful in hope. All things are for the best to those who love God. This is what you said when your house was burning; and so now he has fulfilled these words."

"And blessed be his name!" cried Walther, looking upward. "Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever!"

One can imagine the joy that was felt by Walther's wife, his children, the Herr Pastor, and other friends, when he made known his good fortune to them.

Desiring to Depart and be with Christ.

One, who feels as if in a "new world to what he occupied twelve months ago, before reading 'The Rainbow,' Mr. Constable's Pamphlet, Pauline Theology," etc., has requested, by letter that I would, through "The Rainbow," show how Phil. i. 23, which "the majority of Christians" regard as evidence "that heaven is entered by them at death," can be understood in agreement with the doctrine set forth in the article, "The Resurrection unto Life, the Christian's Entrance unto Glory," in "The Rainbow" for September.

With the Editor's permission I would submit the following observations as illustrative of the apostle's meaning, when he said that he had a desire "to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better," a meaning which I doubt not would be clear enough to all, if they only understood the language in the light of Paul's hope. The apostle's language is commonly read as if he expressed the idea of departing to be with Christ, by dying. He does not say so; and it is only the foregone conclusion that "the souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory," which leads any one so to misunderstand his meaning. So far from Paul wishing for death, we know that he desired "not to be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."—2 Cor. v. 4. What the apostle asserts is, that he was in a strait betwixt two things, namely, living and dying; he did rot know which of these to choose, but he had a desire for something else—"To depart and to be with Christ, which is far better," than either living or dying, so far as his own sensations were concerned. When he wrote of desiring "to depart and be with Christ," he was (in my belief) thinking of those who are alive at the coming of the Lord, and who shall not descend to the grave, but "be caught away to meet the Lord in the air, and so be ever with the Lord."—1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. Surely that would be far better.

We have seen a disciple suffering from a disease which he knew would soon end in death; he had a sure hope of rising incorruptible at the coming of the Lord; we have heard that disciple express his earnest desire to depart and be with Christ, without dying. His words were, "Oh, I wish the Lord would come before I die, that I might escape that loathsome grave!" He knew that his Redeemer liveth, and that he would stand at the latter day upon the earth; and that although worms destroyed his body, yet in his flesh he would see God; but he desired to have that vision without being destroyed by worms; he desired to be among those who are alive at the coming of the Lord as something "far better." The reader surely can appreciate that desire, and perceive the force of the apostle's words when he says that he had a difficulty in choosing betwixt life and death; and that he had a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better.

When the apostle says, "To die is gain," he may not mean gain to himself, but to his Lord; for you will observe that he had just expressed his determination that Christ should be magnified in his body, whether by life or by death. He believed that even by his death he could magnify Christ. It is therefore probable that when he wrote these words he was thinking of the Lord, and not of himself, as being the gainer. He does not say, "gain to me;" although, in the midst of so much labor and persecution, we could not wonder at him thinking of the repose of those who are asleep in Jesus. For my part I prefer the former thought.

The passage has been well paraphrased thus: "For if I live in the flesh, or continue alive, as I am, this is the fruit of my labor, Christ shall be magnified as I have already said (verse 20), and what I shall choose in my toilsome and persecuted condition I do not well know, for I am in a strait betwixt the two; that is, between living and dying, since I am not anxious for either, and yet one of them I must choose. I am not anxious for either of them, for I have a wish in my mind, if I could only get it granted, and it is this—to be caught away alive by the coming of the Lord. This is better than being in these toils and sufferings; it is also better than to die, for in that case I shall not behold Jesus till the resurrection morning."

These thoughts will, I trust, assist to understand more accurately the language of the apostle in this instance. We know, assuredly, that he and all the early disciples looked to the coming of the Lord as their only hope of being with him. "If I go," he said, "I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am ye may be also."—John xix. 3.—W. LAING.—The Rainbow.

Children's Department.

Black Knot.

As I walked in a gentleman's garden last summer, I was struck with the strange look of a fine plum-tree.

"What is the matter with that plum-tree?" I stopped and asked, for it was covered with ugly looking black knots.

"We do not know what it is," said the lady, "but it is killing the tree. Some say," she added, "that it is made by flies punching the bark and laying their eggs inside; but I hardly think it is that."

No, it is not that, as I have since seen. It is a plant, a black plant of the fungus family, preying on the tree and sucking the life out of it. What is smut on our corn, rust in our wheat field, is black knot on our plum-trees. And it kills great numbers. The seeds of it float in the air. When a good chance offers they lodge on the limbs of some favorite fruit-tree, stick to it, take root, spread and grow, and grow and spread, until they come to the unsightly thing called "black knot." I dare say you have seen some on the trees of your garden.

People try to cut it off with a sharp knife, but it is of no use. It will kill the tree, and nothing can stop its work of ruin.

I looked at the poor plum-tree with real sorrow.

"It is a gone case, then," I said. The leaves still looked green and pretty, waving in the beautiful sunshine; but oh, those black knots all over it! It was an ugly sight. And never to lose them—sticking there till it died!

It made me think of the uglier seeds of evil which are everywhere floating in the air, and everywhere seeking some fine character to fasten on and blacken. I know boys and girls who, I am afraid, have the "black knot" fastened on them; they have, at least, ugly, black spots, which look very alarming.

What a "black knot" lying is. What a "black knot" pilfering is. What a "black knot" bad words are. What a "black knot" ugliness is. What a "black knot" self-will is. What a "black knot" pride is. The "black knot" disease is as bad for people as for trees. You see it sticks. You see it deforms and defaces. You see it blackens. You see it ruins at last.

Is there no cure at all for "black knot?" No cure. But there is prevention; and an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, the proverb says. Potash in the soil will help make a glassy coating on the straw of wheat and the stems of the trees, which hardens them against the attacks of the fungi. It as much as says to the bad seeds floating round and trying to find a place to stop, "No you don't; no you don't, We don't allow any soft spots or weak spots for you to get hold of."

That is precisely the way you should act toward the seeds of evil hovering in the air. Harden yourself against them. On no account let them get a lodging in you. Be well fortified.—Child's Paper.

Sawdust Saved.

Mahogany tables are not made of solid mahogany: nor are rosewood bureaus made of solid rosewood. They are veneered; that is, thin slices of rosewood or mahogany are glued on common wood. A few years ago they sawed a stick of rosewood or mahogany into strips for veneering. Of course, a good deal of the valuable wood was lost in sawdust; as much as half of it was wasted. But a machine has been invented which does away witb the saw in this work. It shaves instead of saws; and by shaving off the slices nothing is lost, and the saving on a log of rosewood is said to amount to not less, in some cases, than six hundred dollars.

I dare say you would have said, "What is the need of caring about a little sawdust? the waste is not much." Waste counts up. Here was six hundred dollars' worth wasted or saved. Yes, children, waste counts up—waste minutes, waste opportunities, waste words, waste pennies, they count up. A person is a great loser by them; and it makes all the difference in the world as to what his character is worth, whether he has wasted or saved the sawdust of his life—frittered away or used in little advantages and smaller means.—Selected.

How to be Nobody.—It is easy to be nobody, and we will tell you how to do it. Go to the drinking saloon to spend your leisure time. You need not drink much now; just a little beer or some other drink. In the meantime play dominoes, chequers, or something else to kill the time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful book. If you read let it be the dime novels of the day. Thus go on keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you'll be nobody, unless, (as is quite likely) you should turn out a drunkard or a professional gambler, either of which is worse than nobody. There are any number of young men hanging about saloons, billiard rooms and other rum shops just ready to graduate and be nobodies.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

WM. H. SPENCER, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it, and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	"
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 16.
WHOLE NUMBER 350.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,) NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York. | WM. HOWORTH, New York.
RICHARD MARTIN, New York. | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or 52 numbers; One Dollar for six months or 26 numbers, invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sending, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

AN EXPOSITION OF REV. XX. 12.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Rev. xx. 12.

This passage of Scripture, though occurring in the most symbolic portion of the Apocalypse, is eminently deserving of attention by Bible students at the present time, because it is so constantly and so prominently used as material to sustain the theory that, though "the wages of sin is death," yet the wicked will be delivered from death, and after passing through a limited state of misery and indescribable wretchedness, be again returned to the same state of unconsciousness from which they were awakened. We will not stop now to show the irreconcilable conflict of this theory with the Scriptures.

The principal point at issue in the investigation of this passage is in regard to the first expression, "the dead," in our text. Does it embrace both classes of the dead,—the wicked as well as the righteous? This is the question to be decided. Those who believe that the penalty of sin is eternal misery in a future state, as well as those who hold the theory of limited torment which shall terminate in a second death, maintain that this passage includes all the dead,—both the just and the unjust. On the contrary, we believe that any legitimate rule of interpretation of this passage does not afford the least support for this conclusion, and it is not sustained by the general tenor of the Scriptures.

In the absence of positive proof,—such as the importance of the assumption demands,—it will not do to assume that the expression, "the dead," includes both classes, for the same expression is often used in the Scriptures with reference solely to the righteous, of which there is no dispute. Paul wrote more on the subject of the resurrection than any one of the other apostles, and we have yet to find one instance where he includes the wicked dead in the expression. Hence, we might be justified in stopping in our investigation and demanding proof that this expression in Rev. xx. 12 embraces the ungodly dead; but, as such proof cannot be furnished it remains for us to show, by a careful examination of the passage in the light of God's immutable word, that this expression has no reference to the reliving of the wicked dead.

I. As a fact, worthy of careful consideration, we affirm that this passage of necessity either proves a simultaneous resurrection of both classes of the dead, or refers only to one class.

This passage cannot possibly, by any consistent rule of interpretation, be made to favor the doctrine of two resurrections, which has obtained much prominence among the advocates of a future life for the ungodly. Outside of the 20th chapter of Revelation it is very doubtful if the idea of two resurrections would have ever been advanced or believed as a Bible doctrine; and its advocates have ever found difficulty to harmonize it with the teachings of Christ and the apostles.

1. Job declares that "man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more."—(Job xiv. 12.) Job understood that the dead should not be raised out of their sleep until the second coming of Christ; for the Revelator was shown that at his coming "the heavens" should "depart as a scroll when it is rolled together." Paul, in speaking of scoffers that should appear "in the last days," who should question the Lord's coming, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?"—declares that "the heavens and the earth which are now . . . are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise," and "the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."—(2 Pet. iii. 7, 10, 12. Therefore, from the Word of God we are shut up to the conclusion: First, That man will not rise from the dead until the passing away of the heavens (doubtless meaning the atmosphere surrounding the earth,) which is the same "time" that Job expected to be "remembered." Second. That the heavens are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men (who are then alive on the earth.) Third. That the heavens will pass away at Christ's coming, "at the last day." Therefore, if it be true that the wicked dead shall be raised to life, it cannot take place a thousand years after Christ's coming; for their destruction takes place at the passing away of the heavens, which is at the coming of Christ. The advocates of two resurrections, with a thousand years intervening, will find an insurmountable difficulty in attempting to harmonize the construction of Rev. xx with the foregoing.

2. Another very important fact should be borne in mind, viz. whether the "sea," "death," or "hades" are twice represented as delivering up the dead. John, who beheld this whole matter in vision, says: "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades—the same) delivered up the dead which were in them." In the whole account there is not the slightest intimation that he twice beheld this scene, nor the least hint that he understood that it would occur twice. Therefore, this great chapter of symbols, to which our opponents are prone to flee, furnishes no evidence of the resurrection of the wicked, much less a thousand years after the coming of Christ, who is the "first fruits" of those whom he will then raise from the dead.

3. Suppose, (for the sake of argument,) that we grant our opponent's claim that verses 12 and 13 of this chapter embrace both classes of the dead,—which assumption on their part shuts them up virtually to the doctrine of a simultaneous resurrection—how will they harmonize with their position the 5th verse, which declares that "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished?" If they contend for a literal construction of the 12th and 13th verses, they can never be harmonized with a literal construction of the 5th verse. If they apply a figurative interpretation of the 5th verse, how will they prove that the same principle of interpretation does not as legitimately apply to the 12th and 13th verses? Thus, those who attempt to force proof from Rev. xx in favor of the re-living of the wicked dead in whatever direction they may turn, meet with insurmountable difficulty at every step.

To our mind there is no difficulty in regard to Rev. xx. 5. After much consideration of the chapter we have been led to believe that it is an interpolation in our version. Such a result was anticipated by its heavenly author when he declared that "if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this Book." This 5th verse "is not found in the best Moscow, nor in the best Vatican editions, or versions, of the book of Revelation; nor is it in the Syriac, as translated by Prof. Murdock; and the Syriac, says Prof. M., is the oldest manuscript of the New Testament to be found in any language" (Life from the Dead, p. 70.)

[To be continued in next number.]

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan., 1871.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.—This exposition of a favorite proof text of the believers in temporal torment as the penalty for sin, is the substance of a discourse delivered in Cooper Institute, New York, Aug. 21, 1870, and has been prepared for publication by request of a number who thought it might be of gain to the cause of truth.

W. H. S.

(Continued from last week.)

WILL THE WICKED DEAD BE RAISED TO LIFE AGAIN?

BY THOMAS READ.

Luke xx. 27–38. In the celebrated dispute of Christ with the Sadducees, "touching the resurrection from the dead," there is the same marked peculiarity. The righteous only are to be raised. The Sadducees received only the books of Moses; and, like many of the present day, they did not believe that even these taught any future life or resurrection. They put a case to Christ hoping to foil him. A woman had successively seven husbands and died. "In the resurrection, when they shall rise from the dead, whose wife shall she be?" Jesus answered: "The sons of this age marry and are given in marriage. But those who are accounted worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; for neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the sons of God, being sons of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calls the Lord, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live to him."

Observe these points. 1. It is a resurrection out from among the dead ones, tes anistaseos tes ek nekron. That it is confined to those only "who are accounted worthy." That the resurrected ones "can die no more." That they will "be equal to the angels," and that they will "be the sons of God." How could Christ express in stronger terms that only the righteous will be raised?

To appreciate the full force of the argument of Christ, let it be remembered that God gave to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob the land of Canaan, to be renewed in its Edenic loveliness, for an everlasting possession, by the gospel covenant, through one of his descendants, the Messiah. That he gave the same land in its unrenewed state to the posterity of Jacob for a heritage conditioned on their good behavior, by the covenant of circumcision; which covenant was given as a token that God would fulfil his covenant of ages, or gospel covenant. Examine the whole record. Ex. vi. 3: "I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by name Yaveh, [the fulfiller of the promises,] was I not known to them. And I have also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers." They had then been asleep 400 years. Heb. xi. 13: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims in their own land. For they who say such things, show that they are seeking their own land." To possess this land, they must be raised again from the dead, and God still calls himself their God, thereby implying that he would fulfil all his promises. Paul identifies the gospel as preached to Abraham, Tit. i. 2; 2 Tim. i. 9; not only as containing the promise of the Saviour and everlasting life, but also of life and incorruptibility, or resurrection life, by the making of death ineffectual. "In hope of everlasting life, which God, who cannot lie, promised pro chronon nionion, before the times of the ages." That is, 400 years before the establishment of the Jewish jubilees and the law, God preached the gospel to Abraham, containing the promise of the everlasting possession of the land of Canaan; and there was necessarily included in that gospel the promise of everlasting life; and as Abraham was to die, though "in a good old age," it included likewise a resurrection from the dead. "The grace which was given us in Christ Jesus pro chronon aionion, before the times of the ages, but now made manifest by the appearing of our LIFE-GIVER Jesus Christ; who made death ineffectual, and exhibited life and incorruptibility through the Gospel." Attend now to the argument.

God is the God of the Patriarchs, and they live in respect to him "who maketh alive the dead, and calls the things that are not as though they already existed," because he has determined they shall be.—Rom. 4. 17. Therefore the Patriarchs, and all of like precious faith, must be raised to life again. Until which time they live in respect to God, not to men, not to themselves, but their lives being hid with Christ in God, when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, they shall be made like him, for they shall see him as he is. But God is not the God of the dead, of those that have not made a covenant with him through the sacrifice of Christ; they therefore will not be raised again. And without a resurrection there is no future life. This argument established the resurrection of the righteous, confirmed the non-resurrection of the wicked, confuted the Sadducees, astonished the scribes; and after that none of them dared to ask him any more questions.

Luke xiv. 13, "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind. And happy shalt thou be, because they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the righteous." Here the resurrection of the righteous is a peculiarity.

The crowning argument for the resurrection of the righteous only, and consequently the non-resurrection of the wicked, is founded upon the death and resurrection of Christ. According to the very best M.S.S., Christ was slain by a Roman soldier. Here are recorded the circumstances that seem to have led to his death. Christ was suspended on the cross to endure a cruel, lingering, and ignominious death before witnesses from many nations. There were assembled at Jerusalem, in consequence of the passover, Jews from all the countries round about. And though many might understand the Hebrew and the Greek, but few of these foreigners understood the vernacular of Judea, probably the Chaldee-Syriac. Jesus had confessed that he was king of the Jews, but stated that his kingdom was not of that aion, age, (not world as is improperly translated.) That his kingdom was not from thenceforward, that is, that it would not commence immediately: consequently there was no conflict with the claims of Cæsar. His accusation was written to accommodate this mixed multitude, in Hebrew, Greek and Latin. Now commenced a scene of insult and revilings that proved that the Jews were fast filling up the measure of their indignities. The chief priests and scribes, mixing with the multitude, taunted him with words like these: "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross." "He saved others, himself he cannot save." "If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him." The unnatural darkness, the revilings of the Jews, and their allusions to the rank and power of Jesus, and their challenge to him to exert his power and come down from the cross, would all tend to make the Roman soldiers fearful and vigilant. If Christ should escape their lives were surely forfeited. They must have heard of Christ's miracles and power, and there may well have been a lingering fear that Christ might escape and they suffer the consequences. "Then Jesus cried aloud; Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani. Some of those that stood by, when they heard that," (not understanding the language Christ used) "said, 'This man calleth for Elias.' The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him." We may well imagine that the fears of the soldiers were now considerably excited. What if Elias came and rescued Christ? Then their death was certain. But to the record. "One offered him vinegar; (but another taking a spear, pierced his pleura; and there came forth water and blood,) and Jesus crying out again with a loud voice, expired." The words in brackets are the words that have been so shamefully misplaced. Undoubtedly the spear was directed by some anatomical skill, and pierced first, the pericardium, the sac in which the heart is placed, thence flowed the water, and as Christ, being securely fastened, could not flinch, a further thrust with the spear pierced the heart, and from thence came the life's blood of our blessed Saviour, and Christ died. And thus Christ our passover was sacrificed for us.

The record that Christ was pierced prior to his death, and which caused his death, was condemned by Pope Clement, and his successor John, in the 14th century. But all the older M.S.S. excepting the Alexandrian, and all the old versions have escaped this sacrilege. A fuller account of this stupendous fraud may be found in the "Bible versus Tradition," by Ellis and Read.

Christ died a sacrifice for our transgressions, in the same manner as the typical lamb died. Both were inanimate, unconscious, utterly deprived of every vestige of life. Their lives were in the blood and the blood was extracted. Both, but for extraneous interference, tended to the dissolution into their original elements. Christ sacrificed himself, his life, his soul and the sacrifice was complete. But the sacrifice would not have been complete if any living entity, or part of him escaped. God gave his Son, and between his death and resurrection, God had no living son in existence. But God interposed, for his once begotten, but now dead Son. "He would not leave his soul in hades," the state of death, "nor would he suffer his Holy One to see corruption," and so he raised him again from the dead, and thus begat him again and claimed him as his Son. But not now with a nature liable to death and corruption, but with a nature whose life principle is spirit, animating his celestial organization without the intervention of blood. Before his death, Christ exhibited in his person, life connected with corruptibility, animal life, or soulical life; but now having made death ineffectual, he exhibits in his person life connected with incorruptibility, a spiritual life, the glorious pattern of all who will be resurrected; for he will change the bodies of our humiliation, and fashion them like to his own body of glory.

(To be Continued.)

"THE SEAL OF THE LIVING GOD."

BY A. BOYNTON.

"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."—Eph. i. 13, 14.

Here we have the progress made in Christian experience. They first heard the word, the gospel of salvation, not something as a substitute; for however much error is or may be preached, remember it is truth, God's holy truth which sanctifies; all else but hinders the blessed work. This gospel produces faith, hope, trust. Now although the apostle does not stop here, we fear vast numbers of both preachers and people do; and many thus forever shut themselves out of the kingdom of God. One reason for our fears is that in most reports of revivals we read thus: "We had a blessed good time. Souls believed, and we had the privilege of baptizing so many happy ones," etc. Of course water baptism is alluded to. Here they are left, standing just on the threshold of God's holy temple, while the priest goes after more. Thus are added to the church (not God's, but man's,) many who are stumbling blocks in Zion.

But let us turn from this repulsive scene to the Scriptural investigation of our subject. "In whom (Christ) also after (here, then, is something in addition) that ye believed ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise (or which was promised by Christ before his ascension) which is the earnest (pledge or surety) of our inheritance (how long? While the apostles lived only?) until the redemption (bringing back, restoring) of the purchased possession (the earth). And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Eph. iv. 30. Paul thought this subject of such importance as to repeat it in his exhortation to his brethren. "Now he which establisheth us with you is God, who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts."—2 Cor. i. 21, 22.

Let us now turn to the "promise" spoken of. Jesus, in his last words to his disciples alludes to it thus: "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be indued with power from on high."—Luke xxiv. 49. This promise of the Father we find in Isa. xliv. 3. "For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh," etc. So we see it is not restricted to time, place, or people.

Again, Christ's words: "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter (when I am removed from you) that he may abide with you forever, even the spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: (here is one class, no matter how high their profession or pretension in the things of God. "If ye have not the Spirit of Christ ye are none of his."—Rom. viii. 9.) "But ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."—John xiv. 17. "He that believeth on me, as the Scriptures hath said, (please see the references, Prov. xviii. 4. etc.) out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters. (But this he spake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified)."—John vii. 38, 39. This Holy Ghost was something new and strange to that people, and it seems as strange to many in our time. "And it came to pass, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And when Paul had laid his hand upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them" etc. See Acts xix. 1, 7. That this gift was abiding see Acts ix. 31, "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." No wonder they were multiplied while this state of things existed. They grew in numbers and in grace: why? "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." By what means? "By one Spirit are ye all baptized into one body." —1 Cor. xii. 13. This is the antitypical anointing oil which is to perfume the royal kings and priests of Christ and of God. See Ps. xlv. 7, 17. "God hath anointed us."—2 Cor. i. 21. But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things." (or, perhaps, more properly, all men. See the preceding verse.)—1 John i. 20. This is the eye salve of Rev. iii. 18. "Anoint thine eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see." It is the oil which the wise virgins had in their vessels with their lamps when they went forth to meet the Bridegroom. Matt. xxv. It is the power which is to "quicken" the dead saints; for saith Paul, "by his spirit which dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11.

The New Testament is explicit on this most important subject, but we will close with a few words of exhortation.

Our paper is called HERALD OF LIFE, an immortal life through Christ. But a pledge is requisite to all who shall obtain it. This, we think, has been clearly shown above. Now the question is, have you this pledge? Have you this seal? All the acquirements you may have attained, all you have done or may do for the truth, all your good works and fair speeches will only cause you the greater consternation in the day of Christ's appearing, should you then find your light gone out, and no oil in your vessel! O grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, but now "go sell all thou hast," throw all at the Master's feet; turn from all that is perishing and doomed to speedy destruction to that immortal gem, that star of glory and beauty, that prize gift above all price, "which no man knoweth but he that receiveth it."

Awake! O slumberer, arise! The Master calleth thee. He is coming! put off thy defiled garments. Wash thee, and be clean. Go forth adorned of God, clothed in the beauty of His holiness, and welcome the king's return. "Then shalt thou obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

WEST BATAVIA, Jan., 1871.

PREPARATION FOR DEATH.

I PROCEED to make some observations on the parable of the wise and the foolish virgins, which is particularly well suited, and I think must have been designed, to prevent such mistakes as commonly prevail, respecting a Christian's preparation for death.

I will set before you our Lord's parable, together with the passage immediately before it, which unluckily is placed in another chapter (Matthew xxiv.), though it is not only a part of the same discourse, but is particularly connected with this parable. The divisions into chapters and verses often obscure the sense of Scripture to those who do not know, or do not recollect, that these divisions were not made or thought of by the Sacred Writers, but were added long after their time.

Matthew xxiv. 42, "Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But be assured of this, that if the master of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken open. Therefore be ye also ready; for in an hour when ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. Who then is the faithful and wise servant, whom his Master hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Master, when he cometh, shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all his goods. But if that evil servant say in his heart, My Master delayeth his coming; and begin to beat his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Master of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and will cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Chap. xxv. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are going out. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in to him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Master, master, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh."

Now in order to take in the full force of this most awfully-important parable, you should recollect that the marriage-feasts among the Jews were among their richest and most splendid festivals; in which they delighted to display the utmost magnificence, and the most imposing solemnity. And the same custom is said by travellers to prevail in those regions of the East, even to this day. The savings of many years, it is said, are often reserved expressly to be laid out on such an occasion, on which they spare no expense that comes within the compass of their means, and vie with each other in the multitude of guests invited, and in the pomp and costliness of the entertainment. It was at a wedding, accordingly, in Cana of Galilee, that our Lord thought fit (on account of the concourse of people whom such a festival was sure to draw together) to make the first display of his miraculous power, and thus, publicly, to open his ministry. And as these splendid solemnities were, of course, very striking, and likely to make a strong impression on all who witnessed them, He, for that reason, more than once illustrates some circumstance relating to his religion, by some allusion to the well-known ceremonies of a marriage-feast.

On the occasion now before us He alludes to that part of the accustomed solemnity which consisted in receiving the bridegroom, on his triumphant arrival at his own house, with music, and a great assemblage of attendants, bearing torches and lamps (their marriages being always celebrated at night), to lead the way to the feast prepared.

The virgins, of whom our Lord speaks, are to be understood as the attendants appointed to wait for, and to receive the bridal party, and to conduct them to the wedding-feast. Of these virgins, He tells us, five were wise, and five foolish; and the foolish ones, neglecting to bring oil with them, found themselves at a loss when their master's coming was announced; and while they were gone to buy oil, the door was shut against them.

The same precept as that which is inculcated in this parable, He has enforced, in the passage immediately preceding it (which I have just set before you), by the illustration of a master of a house which was broken open, because he did not watch; which, of course, he would have done, if he had known at what hour the thief would come.

The application of the parable is sufficiently plain, and is distinctly made by our Lord Himself, who, in both instances, repeats the precept, "Watch, therefore—be ye also ready—for ye know not in what hour your Lord doth come;" to explain and to impress on the minds of the hearers, that He has in view the case of his disciples, that is, of all Christians, who are exhorted to hold themselves prepared for their Lord's coming, that whenever that may take place, He may find them occupied in doing his will, and discharging the duties of faithful and diligent servants. "Blessed," says he, "is that servant whom his lord when he cometh, shall find so doing." And on the other hand he denounces a most fearful judgment on those who shall be taken unawares,—who shall be found to have neglected his duty, and not prepared for his coming. And that He is addressing his precepts not to his disciples then present only, but "even unto all," we have his own express assurance, "What I say unto you, I say unto all; Watch."

Now to any one of you who believes what Jesus Christ has said, and expects that He will do as He has promised, it is a most interesting inquiry whether you yourself are likely to inherit the blessing or the curse here held out; whether you are to consider yourself as represented by the wise or by the foolish virgins. It is your business, not indeed to pronounce on the acceptance or condemnation of your neighbor, but carefully to look at your own ways, and strive to secure your own salvation.

In order then to make this inquiry the easier, I will endeavor to explain to you, first, what is meant by our Lord's "coming," for which we are to prepare; secondly, how are we to prepare for it; thirdly, when we are to prepare.

By our Lord's "coming," is plainly meant (as far, that is, as the parable applies to Christians generally) his coming to judge the world at the Last Day. But you are to observe that though there is no precise time fixed (so as for us to know it) for the general judgment of all men, both of those who shall then be living, or long before, in all Ages of the world; yet, practically, to each particular person, the time of his own death is the time of his Lord's coming.

A Few Thoughts.

BY ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

Although it would seem that enough has already been said on the, to me, deeply interesting subject of "no future life out of Christ," to satisfy the minds of men of sober thought and close and prayerful investigation, we are nevertheless constantly annoyed by some who preach that the wages of sin is death, simply because we believe that when a man is dead he is in the same condition that he would be could he be raised to life and destroyed.

This question is repeatedly introduced: "Will not Christ fulfil the work to accomplish which he came into the world?" And then Paul's declaration is added: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." After quoting this language of Paul, they, strange as it may appear, claim that when a man dies, whatever may have been his relation to Christ in life, being dead he must be in Christ in order to be raised to judgment, and punished. Such notions of judgment and justice are like the other proposition, both taken from the filthy dregs of heathen philosophy of an immortal soul. From all such nonsense, the good Lord deliver us, is our prayer.

To the text: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." We ask, what is the true import of this plain question? The words, "even so," present the question in its proper relation to the answer; plainly showing relationship to the first Adam, who was of the earth, earthy, and to the second Adam, who was "the Lord from heaven," a "quickening Spirit." "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." How are all men in the first Adam? By descending from him by natural generation. So they can have nought but his nature and likeness. Well might one of old exclaim, "I was shapen in sin," etc. All the race of Adam, then, have a sinful, mortal, dying nature. What woe; what sorrow; what bloodshed, anguish and death result from this relationship! And never will this flow of blood, these rivers of tears, these deep-drawn wails of sad lament come to an end until Jesus comes to gather to himself his weeping bride, and reign gloriously on the throne of David forever. Hasten, Lord, the glad morn of deliverance.

How, then, do men come into Christ? By being made partakers of the divine nature, through the renovating power of the Holy Spirit. By obedience to the truth, thus receiving the spirit of adoption. Ah! here it stands out in bold relief. He that is in Christ, old things are done away; behold all things are become new. Glory be to God. O the transforming, renovating power of God's love to fallen man. Please read the third chapter of John, verses 14 to 18, inclusive, and be not faithless, but believing. I am willing to battle for truth, even though my name be cast out as evil. Very soon I expect a new name, a new home, a never-ending glory. Praise God!

Essex, Conn.

La Fayette Norris, Campton, Iowa, writes: I am rejoiced to learn that Br. Storrs is recovering his health, even though it be but slowly. When I heard of his severe illness my thoughts were, if indeed his departure is at hand, his work is done, and well done. Still we are always loth to part with our friends, for death is an enemy, and has no charms for us to admire.

I am inclined to think that the more we loathe death, the more we shall prize the glorious resurrection: and the stronger our faith is in the resurrection, the less we shall fear death, for, comfortingly, we are in its embrace only for a moment.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 25, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Office Removed.

Our friends will please notice that our office is now No. 4 of 208 Broadway: main entrance same as before, but you rise only one flight of stairs to find us.

The Editor.

As to ourself, whatever we may write, our correspondents must not suppose it relates to what they may have written for the Herald during our sickness; for we were neither able to read, nor to hear read, any of their communications from Nov. 2, when we took our bed, till the January issue, and only partially since; and it is not probable, now, that we ever shall read them, as our time is so completely occupied with what is before us; laboring, as much as our strength will permit, to relieve Br. Thorne from the burden which he has so nobly and patiently borne during our long sickness. 'Tis almost as wonderful that he has been enabled to bear that burden, amid his own business affairs and bodily infirmities, as that we have been raised up from the gates of death to resume in any measure the work before us. At present we can do but little. Our strength is not sufficiently restored to venture on much brain labor; and the doctor cautions us to beware of an over tax in that direction just now. We may seem to have disregarded his caution this week, but most of our thoughts were born on our sick bed, besides many others yet to appear, if life and health are granted us. The blasphemy of the doctrine of inherent immortality is one of the subjects which occupied our mind in the days and nights when we were thought to be in the very jaws of death. Its wicked and abominable character never impressed our mind so deeply as then; and we shall never forget the abhorrence with which our mind was filled at the clear view we had of the nature and origin of that doctrine; some of our thoughts will be made known ere long. We feel that we have a new commission against that most hateful of all heresies, which has so dishonored God and His government, and blinded men's minds to the grand display God has made of his love to the world. Let that blasphemy perish; and perish it will, if not before, at the return of our absent Lord from heaven.

Our recovery from sickness the past three weeks, when we first attempted to walk, has been rapid and without a drawback: it has astonished all our friends. Last week we visited our office in New York twice, walking the greater part of the distance; and Saturday our brother Thos. R. Crocker took us out in his carriage and gave us a ride of about twelve miles, for which we felt all the better. Our strength and flesh are returning. Soon we hope to be at our post again in the office; for all which, we would give praise to God and the Lamb, our Life-giver.

The Hygienic Institute of New York.

OR, THE EDITOR'S SICKNESS AND RECOVERY.

The general features of our sickness have been reported in the Herald of Life. It is sufficient for us now to say, that a hard, dry cough was its commencement. This was some time in October. For two weeks we continued our work in the office of the Herald, taking such medicine as was prescribed by an eminent physician; which however gave us no relief—night and day our cough continued unabated, till we became so exhausted and our appetite for food had so failed that we were obliged to take our bed about the first of November: from that time we were visited daily and sometimes twice a day by a Brooklyn physician in whom we had great confidence. He did all that human skill could do with homeopathic remedies. He gave us relief from the violence of our cough, but the disease continued unabated. At the end of three weeks we found ourself in "the valley of the shadow of death;" and our physician informed us distinctly enough that our end was near.

At this point an allopathic physician visited us. He pronounced us incurable. The same day, at evening, Dr. Miller, the hygienic physician, of New York city, came to our house, being urged thereto by Sister Helen Robertson, who was passing the winter at his Institute; himself also feeling a deep interest in our case from Helen's representation, though he had never seen us, but had read some of our writings on immortality twenty years ago.

The condition in which he found us is described by himself in the following note which he has since sent us by our special request:

"Mr. Storrs: Your disease was Acute Bronchitis. This is an inflammation of the lining membrane of the Bronchial tubes. In your case, both the large and small tubes were involved, and the accompanying fever assumed a Typhoid form. When I first saw you, your pulse was about 130 to the minute, and would intermit once in seven or eight beats. Your respiration was 46 to the minute:* there was great difficulty in breathing, frequent cough, and a profuse expectoration of a thick, light colored stringy matter, about half of which would sink in water. The tongue was livid and red; no appetite, bowels constipated, countenance pale and haggard, no strength, spirits depressed, great restlessness, yet indisposed to move, with but little sleep night or day.

* Our natural pulse is 75 or 80 per minute, and our respiration about 20, to which they are now reduced. —Editor.

The result of Dr. Miller's first visit was an interview with our attendant physician, who cheerfully gave our case into his hands. From that time Dr. Miller visited us daily, though living some five miles from us and crowded with business at his Institute. From the first treatment he gave us, we felt a sort of removal from "the valley of the shadow of death" where we had so long lain. He usually spent one hour with us, and applied his remedies with an energy that astonished us. We often said to him, "Doctor, you cannot be laboring thus barely for money." He was truly in earnest, and knew well our case was most critical. For four weeks he continued his daily visits and earnest efforts which proved successful, and after visiting us occasionally for two weeks more left us, saying, "You must come and see me now."

We have made the foregoing statement unknown to Dr. Miller and out of gratitude to him as God's instrument in our recovery from the gates of the grave. The hand of God is visible to us in all this. If Sister Robertson had not providentially been spending the winter at his Institute we should not have known anything of him or his practice. If he had not been providentially brought to my house, weeks since my friends, we have no doubt, would have laid me in the silent grave.

First of all, then, we thank and praise God and the Lamb for our prolonged life. Next, as God's instrument, we thank Dr. Miller for his faithful and kind services, which have resulted in our restoration, thus far; and as a token of our gratitude we give the following notice of his Institute, from "The Methodist," a gratuitous and unsolicited insertion in the Herald of Life, a paper that publishes no paid advertisements, for it is not an advertising sheet. We wish Dr. Miller success, and he cannot well fail of it. If you are sick, try him; we doubt not, if your case is a curable one, he will give you back health. Let him examine you. If he cannot help you, he will tell you so; he will not deceive you about it.

The following is the notice found in "The Methodist," of this city, two weeks ago; and we most cordially unite in the commendation at its close:

TURKISH BATHS.

Dr. E. P. Miller, the founder of the first Turkish bath in this city, has just opened a new and elegant establishment at 41 West Twenty-sixth street, New York. He has a house with fifty rooms, for transient and permanent boarders and patients, with excellent facilities for applying the Turkish baths, Electric baths, Water Cure, Movement Cure, and Lifting Cure.

His house is kept on strictly temperance principles, free from tobacco smoke, and affords a quiet home for those visiting the city for a longer or shorter time.

The Turkish baths are almost a specific for colds, catarrh, sore throat, bronchitis, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, and many other forms of acute and chronic diseases.

We commend this establishment to all our readers who wish to regain lost health, prevent disease, or secure a quiet, pleasant home in the city.

Response by M. E. Green.

Or, an Answer to the Question in the Editor's note two weeks since.

Ques. "Do you really believe that the promise of God to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, 'In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed' has been fulfilled?"

Peter says, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and reverence."

The promise made to Abraham, I have no doubt refers to the Gospel age, or the age in which we live. Paul says, "And the Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed; so then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."—Gal. iii. 8, 9. Paul here applies Gen. xii. 3, and xxii. 18, to the gospel age, and says, the same gospel was preached to Abraham. He would seem to make it doubly sure, for he says in the 14th verse, "That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." Peter, on the day of Pentecost while he was discoursing in reference to Christ says, to the Jews, "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you, first, God having raised up his Son Jesus sent him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities."—Act. iii. 25, 26. If Peter did not make a right application of the promise made to Abrahan, that "In thy seed shall all the kindred of the earth be blessed," then I know no authority to which we may appeal for the truth on this point. This promise to Abraham was never intended as I understand, to be received and believed by all the nations or families, individually; but the faith is offered to all men for to accept and be blessed. The command was to the disciples "Go ye therefore and teach or disciple all nations. Paul says, (Rom. xvi. 26.) "But now is made manifest by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

Simon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name.—Acts xv. 14. That this gospel has had a wide circulation is evident from what Paul says in speaking to the Colossians (i. 23), "If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven, whereof I Paul am made a minister." Jesus says, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—Mat. xxiv. 14. If the families of the earth are not blessed it is their own fault. There is no nation under heaven but have the gospel in their own tongue; and when the new song is sung (Rev. v. 9) it will be, "For thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation." Much more might be said, but this is sufficient in my estimation, to establish the fact that the promise made to Abraham, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed, has been fulfilled."

New York, Jan., 1871.

Reply by the Editor.

Br. Green's response to our question, "Do you really believe that the promise made to Abraham, 'In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed,' has been fulfilled?" is before our readers. In his "estimation" he has "established the fact that the promise has been fulfilled." We do not question either his honesty nor sincerity. Two men sitting on a jury, of equal intelligence, may see testimony in a very different light, possibly from some prejudice unknown to themselves. But testimony is testimony after all. If God did testify to Abraham, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," that testimony cannot be set aside by any speculations, nor by confining it to a part of the families of the earth, and our brother has confined that promise to "the age in which we live," and says, "I have no doubt" of it.

But, for the sake of the argument, suppose we admit it refers to this age, or "the gospel age," as our brother calls it, does he "really believe" that "all the families of the earth" have been blessed in Abraham and his seed during the term of eighteen hundred years past? What of the millions on millions of the heathen, which, all this time, have been "without God and without hope?" Letting them pass, does he really believe that the millions of ignorant people, trained under the "Mother of Harlots," and denied the Bible, forbidden to read it in their own tongue under the penalty of death—have all these families of the earth been blessed in Abraham and his seed? Have they not been continually cursed with the foulest lies concerning God, his character and government; being only represented to these ignorant souls as a God of wrath, of vengeance, having made them with immortal souls, which He intended to torment eternally if they did not submit to the dictation of pope and priests? Have such been blessed in Abraham and his seed in this "gospel age?" Our brother can hardly assent to such an idea; at least, it seems impossible to us that he can, and yet he seems to, by the position he has taken.

The fact, supposing it to be a fact, that the gospel was preached in all the world to every living creature, as Paul is represented as saying it was, in his day, does not meet the broad promise of God to Abraham. No, it would be but as a drop to the ocean. "All the families of the earth" cannot be confined to so small a period. It did not say, For a short period, some two thousand years hence, all the families of the earth shall be blessed in thee and thy seed. It was a broad and unqualified promise; to qualify it, is to ignore it—to make it void and unworthy of trust; and if this promise is thus treated who can tell what promise of God is reliable? But what has God said? "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."—Isa. lv. 8–11.

No, my brother, God's word will not fail of a full and perfect accomplishment: "all the families of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham and his seed:" it will have no partial fulfilment, but a perfect and complete one, whoever may affirm the contrary. God does not do His work at the halves. He will make His word good to the letter.

One word more about Paul's statement in Colossians i. 23. Did it never occur to our brother's mind that Paul is prolific in what is called ellipsis? that is, the omission of words which must be supplied; for example—"Ye are come to Mount Sion" . . . "to the spirits of just men made perfect," etc.—Heb. xii. 22, 23. Now our brother sees at once something is to be supplied. What is it? Evidently, "Ye are (to) come," etc. The future, and not the present, is spoken of. So Colossians i. 23. Paul is not speaking of what has been done, but of what is to be done. Read it then thus, "Which (gospel) was (to be) preached to every creature which is under heaven, whereof I Paul am made a minister." This agrees with the commission given to the apostles, and harmonizes with other statements of Paul, that the heathen, in his day, were "without God and without hope in the world," and that he himself preached the gospel where "Christ had not been named."

But admitting our brother's supposed proof that Paul did actually teach that the gospel had been preached in all the world to every creature in his day; what follows? "Then shall the end come," said Jesus. Did the end of the world come in Paul's day? "O, no." Very well, then the gospel had not been preached to "every creature" in his day, or we must discredit Jesus' testimony. The text, however, so much relied upon—"then shall the end come"—has no such sense or meaning as our brother and others attach to it. Let us examine the text with the context.

As Jesus went out of the temple his disciples called his attention to the "buildings of the temple." "Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily, I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." The subject then was the destruction of Jerusalem and her temple. The disciples inquired of him, "privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of aionos—age," not of the "world," as our translation has it: for the end of the world, proper, had no connection with the Saviour's language in relation to the destruction of the temple. This destruction of the buildings of the temple, involving, as it necessarily would, the end of services there, the disciples construed into an end of that age, as it truly was.

In his reply, Jesus tells them, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the (oikoumenee) world for a witness unto all (ethnesi, heathen) nations; and then shall the end come." The end of what? The end of the age spoken of, when the temple should be thrown down. This, to our mind, is clearly the sense.

Now as to the oikoumenee, translated world, Matt. xxiv. 14. It is the same word found Luke ii. 1, "There went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the (oikoumenee) world should be taxed." All the world, here, was the Roman empire, and no more. Jesus uses the same word in his statement of how extensive the gospel should be preached before the temple at Jerusalem would be destroyed, and the Jewish age would come to an end.

Our brother says, "There is not a nation under heaven but have the gospel preached in their own tongue." Suppose this statement is true now, has it been true for the last seventeen centuries previous to this? Certainly not: nor is it true now that "all the families of the earth," or any very considerable portion of them "have the gospel" at all, much less "in their own tongue."

We agree with our brother that those families of the earth are blessed who have the gospel, whether they improve it or not: but what of those "families of the earth" that have never heard of Jesus Christ or his mission to the world? Such families may be numbered by millions on millions, even in this "age in which we live."

Let us not run too fast, brother. We may try to hurry up God's work, and like Abraham take a Hagar and beget an Ishmaelite, instead of waiting patiently for Sarah to bring forth Isaac. God's word will not fail, though it may puzzle us to see how it is to be accomplished. "Is anything too hard for God?" Has he said to Abraham, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed?" Depend on it, it will not fail, but will be accomplished to the letter. Let us therefore not "err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God." "All the families of the earth" will surely be blessed "in Abraham and his seed."

Who are Abraham's seed? say you. "Christ." Very well; but who else are his seed? "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise." —Gal. iii. 29. You see then, brother, that all in Christ are the seed of Abraham, and heirs of the promise. What promise? "That he should be heir of the world"—kosmos.—Rom. iv. 13. Now Abraham and his seed, which includes the whole family of believers in Christ, cannot bless "all the families of the earth" till the "heirs of the world" are put in possession of that to which they are heirs. Can that be before their resurrection from the dead? Observe, the promise is to Abraham, personally, as well as to his seed; and as he did not personally do that work in his natural lifetime, must he not be raised from the dead to work with his seed in the accomplishment in the work of blessing "all the families of the earth?"

Our brother argues truly when he insists that Abraham must be raised from the dead in order to inherit the land which God promised him, and his seed after him, for an everlasting inheritance. That promise, he would say, never had its fulfilment; therefore to make it good, Abraham must live again. But suppose a quibbler should quote him Joshua xxi. 43, 45, as follows, "And the Lord gave unto Israel all the land which He sware to give unto their fathers: and they possessed it, and dwelt therein. . . . There failed not aught of any good thing which the Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel." Would our brother think that text excluded Abraham, personally, from a share in the land? So do none of the transactions of "this age," or any previous ones, exclude him from a personal, active part in blessing "all the families of the earth;" therefore, he and all his seed, by faith, must be raised from the dead before God's promise and oath to Abraham can be fulfilled.

We conclude our present remarks in the words of our brother, with a slight amendment: "Much more might be said, but this is sufficient, in my estimation, to establish the fact, that the promise made to Abraham, 'In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed,' has" (not) "been fulfilled," and never will be unless it is done after Abraham is raised from the dead.

Notice, and Explanation.

Through the blessing of our kind, loving and covenant-keeping God, the Editor has so far improved in health as to be able partially to resume editorial duties. As, during his long and severe illness many correspondents have been in the habit of addressing communications to us, we hereby suggest that it will now be desirable to direct to the Editor as usual.

Of course he has not yet regained his wonted strength, for that can only be done very gradually, and hence it will be indispensable to perfect restoration that he resume duties no faster than returning strength will justify, but the addressing of all communications to him may expedite matters and avoid some confusion.

And here we deem it proper to remark that we are informed that some persons feel aggrieved by the following, occurring in an article entitled "Rightly Divide the Word," in Herald, Dec. 21: "Opposers of the view sometimes indulge in thrusts and offer arguments of a character such as they would never consent to make any other subject the object of, and mostly because incited by undue prejudice, or aimed at visionary objections." It is intimated that the brethren referred to feel that the language contains an imputation of dishonesty on their part.

We certainly do not think that such an inference is unavoidable, or even a fair one; but if it were fair, and even just barely avoidable, the character of our writings during the few years that we have been a contributor to these columns ought to have secured for the objectionable language as favorable a construction as it would bear, rather than the most unfavorable. The expression may not be a happy one, indeed it is not a happy one, but nothing could be farther removed from our purpose than that of impugning the motives of any brother.

In all our humble efforts we are, if we know ourself, actuated by at least these two desires: first, to spread the blessed truth as it is in Jesus; second, to promote harmony and brotherly love. Sorry indeed beyond measure are we if we have at any time failed in the first, very little less so are we if we have failed in the latter. If we have at any time so far failed that what we have said or written has not unreasonably been thought to have been actuated by another spirit, let this expression of the fact of total unconsciousness of it on our part be accepted as sufficient apology. May we all seek at all times and above every other consideration to establish the truth and extend the cause of righteousness. L. C. T.

Work by Faith.

In the discharge of no duty is the earnest Christian more discouraged, at times, than in endeavours to spread Gospel truth and lead his fellow beings to Christ. It is not unfrequently his experience to labor and sacrifice, and sacrifice and labor, all the while praying that his work may be blessed with success, and yet no visible effects result from his efforts.

The husbandman sows his seed and then watches to see it spring up, and when no refreshing showers come to moisten the parched ground and call forth the living germ from its tiny shell, and the seed lays there as if dead, he feels that it has been sown in vain. But at last the long and anxiously looked-for rain descends; the thirsty earth is satisfied; all nature puts on again its garment of freshness, and through smiles of sweet delight speaks forth its glad thanksgiving; the sprouting seed springs up and strengthens, and a plentiful harvest is insured. So is it with him who sows the blessed seed which quickens that whereon it falls, and enables it to spring up and grow unto eternal life. The hearts wherein he seeks to sow the seed of divine truth are sometimes hard and afford no promise that it will ever find lodgement there. They come and go, those little heart-fields, now seen then lost to vision until, perhaps, the great and final harvest, perhaps forever. Seeing not the fruit of his labors, he feels he has striven for nought.

He sees not when those fields are watered by the Spirit's gentle refreshings, causing the precious seed to take root and burst forth into a life which only eternity can measure, and so he knows not that any is saved from the parching, scorching power of evil.

Could the faithful child of God know but a tithe of the glorious results of his labors, with what strength of will, with what perseverance and determination would he press forward. However much the heart may have been hardened by sin, the truth once planted there, its tender impressions may, even under the most adverse circumstances, seemingly, result in winning it to Christ. A single word of warning, or encouragement spoken in season, spoken in kindness, spoken in love, who can measure its influence? As a pebble thrown into the lake produces a circle of ripples which roll on, sweeping the whole surface to the shore on every side, so with the devoted Christian's labors of love. Instant results may be so small and slight as to pass unnoticed by all but a Father's watchful eye, but, multiplying and gathering strength as they go, they roll on and on in power too mighty to be checked or limited by the bounds of time, and, leaping the deep dark gulph of death, they enter upon the everlasting, the boundless.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." Take courage, then, Christian friend, and withold not thy hand from sowing. Thy journey may have been long, thy burden heavy, thyself weary and footsore; the tempest may rage, the storms beat, and the winds of opposition howl about thee; friends may forsake, and the voice of evil be lifted against thee, but heed thou nothing save present duty and the glorious inheritance so near at hand. If thou goest forth weeping, bearing precious seed, thou shalt come again with rejoicing, bringing thy sheaves with thee. L. C. T.

Affairs in Europe.

Our readers will remember that our last week's summary left Gen. Chanzy's army, the last reasonable hope of France, in flight before the victorious army of Prince Frederick Charles. Being hard pressed, and consequently unable to rally for some days he has suffered much. His total loss cannot be less than 30,000 to 35,000 men. A force of 50,000 left Cherbourg to reinforce the army of the Loire but, the Germans having broken railroad communication, they failed to reach it. The Prussian loss in these battles is reported to be 177 officers, and about 3,000 men.

In the east, Bourbaki has labored hard to turn the tide of reverse which has been setting so strong against him, but all his attempts have been frustrated. King William, in a dispatch to Queen Augusta, congratulates her on the repulse of Gen. Bourbaki, and says that he is retreating. Later advices say, the Prussian forces opposed to Gen. B. are in close pursuit. Aside from the departments of the East, and the Loire all have been comparatively quiet during the past week outside of Paris and vicinity.

Paris.

Advices throughout the past week uniformly represent that the bombardment is steadily progressing. A dispatch says: "The batteries on the south and west of Paris have advanced to within 800 yards of Fort Montrouge, which replied yesterday with one gun —on the west front only. D'Issey resumed firing with only two guns at long intervals." The same d spatch states that all the members of the diplomatic corps remaining in Paris, with the exception of the American Minister, have applied to the Prussian military authorities for permission to withdraw from the city, but their request has been refused. It also says: "A rumor is in circulation here" (London) "that a terrible revolt has broken out in Paris, assuming the form of a revolution, and that Trochu has been deposed as Governor of the city, and imprisoned. The Parisians claim that they have provisions sufficient to last until the middle of March." The report that Trochu is imprisoned is, we judge, incorrect.

A London telegram of the 20th inst. says: "The Versailles correspondent of the 'Telegraph' reports that the Germans have twenty-two batteries available for use against Paris .... A Balloon has landed in Belgium with advices from Paris to the 18th inst. The bombardment was causing considerable damage; but the fires occasioned by it were easily extinguished." Certain information received during the past week renders it reasonable to believe that overtures of some nature have been made by the French, but were rejected by the Germans.

King William declared Emperor.

The king of Prussia was proclaimed Emperor of Germany, in the Hall of Mirrors, at Versailles, in the presence of all the German Princes and representatives of the army. He has issued the following proclamation:

"In consequence of the appeal of the German Princes and of the free towns for us to restore the German Empire, after a lapse of sixty years, we announce that we consider it our duty to the Fatherland to accept the Imperial dignity. Henceforth we and our successors will bring to the title of Emperor of Germany the hope that God will vouchsafe a blissful future to the Fatherland, and that, under our auspices, its ancient splendor may be restored. We partake of the dignity, conscious of our duty to preserve with German fidelity the rights of the Empire, and of its members to maintain peace and support and strengthen the independence of Germany, in the hope that the German people will reap, in lasting peace, within our boundaries, the fruits of their bloody battles, and be safe against a renewal of French attacks. God grant that we and our successors may protect the Empire, not by warlike conquests, but by works of peace, freedom, and civilization."

After William was declared Emperor, Versailles witnessed a strange scene, that of a grand military pageant, in honor of the restoration of the German Empire. After sixty years of division, and not a little humiliation the Germans are again a united people, and their chosen monarch is declared such on the soil of once strong and imperious, but now humbled and crushed France.

Count Bismarck has been quite ill, and was at one time reported to be sinking rapidly. Latest telegrams however state that he is rapidly recovering.

The Conference.

The European National Conference met in London on Tuesday, 17th inst. A dispatch from that city says:

The meeting was strictly formal. Earl Granville was called upon to preside. An adjournment will take place on the 24th inst., one week from to-day. A communication relative to a French Representative was read, but no action was taken in the matter.

It is stated that Russia formally declared, in advance, that the action of the Conference must be without prejudice to the abrogation of the neutrality of the Black Sea, which has already been accomplished by the act of the Russian Government.

In regard to the rumors of peace propositions being made at the Conference, Count Bernstoff is under strict orders from the Prussian Government to oppose any introduction of the subject, and to withdraw from the Convention unless overtures proceed directly from France."

Jules Favre, notwithstanding his avowed intention not to attend the Conference, has asked for a safe conduct through the German lines, in order to attend it. It is confidently stated in cable reports that this request of Favre's has been refused. Not a little uneasiness has been occasioned of late by the report that Prussia has designs upon Luxemburg. The King, however, has recently written a letter to Prince Henry of Luxemburg, in which he asserts that Prussia has never intended to attack the independence of that Duchy. L. C. T.

Since our last issue we have received the cheering news that the health of Br. Eseck Wolcott is very much improved. We trust the improvement may continue and be permanent.

The Atonement.—A Review.

BY J. C. DAY.

A few words more upon Eld. Waggoner's position as set forth in his work on the atonement. On page 113 he says: "When the sinner is reconciled to God he is no longer regarded as a sinner; justice, being satisfied by the substitute, is turned away from him." He thus teaches that the justification of the sinner is one of justice, and hence not of mercy or grace. That I do not misrepresent him, hear him further. "For as condemnation is by the law, so must justification be according to law, or else justice will be disregarded." "So there can be no determination of character either good or bad without the law .... God's law of Ten Commandments is a rule of holiness, of justification, condition of life, perfect, the whole duty of man." etc. Atonement, page 62, 63.

If Br. W.'s position could be sustained, that Christ, by his death, paid the penalty of the law in our stead, then we could claim a legal discharge from law and justice, and it must be a universal justification, for it would be hard to vindicate the justice of God in detaining that for which full payment had been made.

But I have been accustomed to look at this subject in a different light from this. I do not understand that Christ was a sinner, even by imputation, nor that law and justice were satisfied in his death, even in regard to believers. Then law and justice do not begrudge to believers a discharge. Law and justice eternally demand the death of the persons who have once sinned; and the security of believers is that they are not under law, but under grace. They really deserve death as a finalty as much as if Christ had not died. It would, indeed, be unjust to Christ to deprive him of his stipulated reward; but it would not be unjust to them for they personally deserve it. They do not merit what he merits. They cannot claim from justice what he claims from justice. They have the use of his righteousness, or a gracious title to justification on his account, but his righteousness is not literally their righteousness, but only comes in its room; otherwise there is neither grace nor pardon in their acquittal. If you say that to them it is grace and pardon, though to Christ it is an act of justice, this is precisely what I mean: and then we ought to hear no more of their claim on justice. All that a substitute could do for them was to reconcile their pardon with the honor of the law; he could not lay an obligation on the law to justify them as if they had a literal righteousness. By his obedience unto death Christ could create an obligation on the part of the Father to fulfil his covenant, but he could not bind the law to repeal its sentence. ("The soul that sinneth, it shall die.") and to declare transgressors justified; for that, after all, would have been a justification by law.

But you say that the justification of believers is an act of both mercy and justice, or mercy and justice meet. If you mean by this that it is mercy to them and justice to Christ, I agree with you; but if you mean it is both mercy and justice to them, it is like saying that a man delivered his neighbor a sum of money as a gratuitous gift. and at the same time imposing a necessity to pay with it a debt of the same amount. No proposition can be more contradictory than that the justification of a transgressor is a legal transaction, or that a sinner is literally righteous, or that a man is justly entitled to pardon. But you say "justice, being satisfied by the substitute, is turned away from the sinner." This is equal to saying, the Redeemer has made over his claim to the sinner, and has given him a right to plead it at the bar of justice, just as a man makes over a pecuniary claim against a third person.

This notion of a commercial transfer has occasioned all the error. The creditor only demands his money, and if the debt is paid by a third person justice can ask no more. This would be a fair illustration if Christ had actually paid our debt, but he only prepared the way for the debt to be freely forgiven. In an affair of debt the creditor has no just claim for anything but his money. He has no right to prevent a third person from making a present to the debtor. When the third person comes forward and pays the debt, he really makes a present to the debtor of the whole amount. He actually increases the debtor's property; and the creditor's claim is as really cancelled as though the money had passed through the debtor's own hands. It is easy thus to transfer property by gift, but not so easy to transfer personal merit, with which justice is concerned. A man may make over his property to the enrichment of a pauper but a holy person cannot make over his moral character and render a sinner personally righteous, nor transfer the benefit of his suffering so as to render a transgressor undeserving of punishment. By suffering for him, he may render it unnecessary to the public good for him to suffer, and the ruler, finding the necessities of the law answered, though not one of its demands, may graciously forgive. Yea he may have promised to forgive, and may be bound to pardon by truth and wisdom, and even by justice to the substitute, but not by justice to the sinner himself so long as it remains true that he personally deserves punishment.

(To be continued.)

South Ashburnham, Mass.,

What one Pamphlet Accomplished.

BY W. H. FORD.

I deem it not out of place to lay before the friends of truth the glorious work of one pamphlet, and hope, by so doing, to induce others to renew their efforts to promulgate the crowning truth of life only in Christ.

I was taught from infancy to believe in eternal torment and all its kindred God-dishonoring doctrines, and at an early age I connected myself with what is known as the Christian Church. Time passed on, and in the year 1866 a pamphlet fell into my hands, and, although firmly bound with the traditionary fetters of orthodoxy yet I possessed a disposition to prove all things, and, to hold fast that which is good. By careful investigation I was led to believe that sky kingdomism, immortalsoulism, and, what is still worse, eternal torment is only to be found in the traditions of men—heathen philosophy and the wild speculations of the theologians of the present day.

Rejoicing in these precious truths, I at once felt a great desire to communicate the same to others, who were still being duped by false theology. Although poor in this world's goods, I was not discouraged. By continued efforts I obtained the visit of an able minister, from Nebraska, and darkness was turned into light. The truth prevailed, and twelve persons confessed and connected themselves with the faith. Many others were made believers, and will, we trust, yield obedience at no distant day. The doctrine of eternal torment has been shaken to its very foundation in this vicinity. Several members of the Christian church have renounced their belief in it, and many more will soon follow in the same way.

Although I give all the glory to the most high God, to whom it rightfully belongs, yet this must show what great results could be accomplished by a little self-denial and activity on the part of those who have been blessed with a knowledge of the truth. Men are generally selfish and reluctant to contribute to the consummation of any object but that which will result beneficially to their own pecuniary interests, but this ought not to be. If our blessed Saviour could suffer the persecution of a cold and apostate world, and even death itself, for a fallen race, we certainly ought to use some self denial, if it is necessary, to spread the glorious gospel. It is not every one that can write, or preach, but we all can sow the good seed of truth. No one can claim the benefits of the gospel and refuse to give all possible aid to its promulgation. The world is drifting into universalism, and infidelity, and if we remove the cause (which is eternal torment) the effect will cease. If all who have embraced the life views would distribute one dollar's worth of the right kind of tracts it would exert a great and salutary influence in that direction. Strong opposition is arising in nearly every quarter against that infamous doctrine. God has summoned it to judgment. One by one the great minds of this age are dropping it, and it will not be long before it will be consigned to eternal oblivon. I have already furnished four subscribers to the Herald, and now go up with four more, two of them at my private expense. I have enlisted in my master's cause for life, if not relieved by his appearing and kingdom. Our life is short and fleeting, and we should work while we can, remembering that he that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins.—James v. 20.

Dec. 12, 1870.

Life by the Spirit.

BY M. M. YOUNG.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."—John iii. 6.

In the first statement of the text we have the law of generation. Through this law we are introduced into the present life; and as there are only two lives spoken of in the Holy Scriptures, it is easy to understand what is meant by the statement, "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." To our mind the law of regeneration is introduced; that by which we are to have a future life. As we cannot exist in this mortal, corruptible life but by the law of generation, so we cannot obtain eternal life but by the law of regeneration. To us it would be as impossible to be born in the resurrection without first being begotten by the Holy Spirit, as to be born into this mortal life without first being begotten of the flesh.

The Holy Scriptures bear me out, I think, in the foregoing statements. Let us turn to Matt. xix. 28: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Again: Rom. viii. 2, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Again: Rom. vi. 14 and 22, 24: "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.... But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life ... For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law." —1 Cor. ix. 20, 21. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." —Gal. iv. 4. But I have quoted enough to sustain my position.

The doctrine of "No Future Life out of Christ" is gaining ground slowly, but surely. It is said by some that those who believe it backslide. I can say that those whom I have become acquainted with manifest a more tender and kind spirit than those that oppose it, as a general thing. I was in a certain place not long since, and was speaking of the success the Herald is meeting with, and a brother remarked, "the devil is always ready to help a bad cause." Well, thought I, he must have changed his tactics wonderfully, for at the beginning he planted his battery on this wise: "thou shalt not surely die." And after that battery is blown up he wheels into line, and begins to blaze away at the doctrine that grinds out the last vestige of immortal-soulism that is left. Strange logic that!

Chelsea, Mass., Jan., 1871.

"The Time of the End."

BY W. F. GARDNER.

There are five prophecies that brought time down to and ended in 43. Rev. xiv. gives the incidents and events of that day and time. As Gen. ii. 17, Hosea vi. 2, and 2 Pet. iii. 8 corrects time by the thousand-year-day in gross, in whole, so it is counted in fractions also. The hour, of Rev. xvii. 12, the 24th of a thousand-year-day, 41 years, measures time at the rise of papacy; as it is given there to measure time at the rise of papacy; and Rev. xiv. 7, is given to measure time at the close of papacy, and if there was nothing to qualify that hour we would be bound to look to 84 for the end.

But as Rev. xiv. gives the incidents and events of 43, so Micah iv. does, commencing with verse 6. The subject of Christ's coming is continued through the book. Chap. vii. 15 says: "It will be as it was in the coming out of Egypt." That defines the hour of Rev. xiv. 7 to be 40 years instead of 41, and 40, commencing 43, reaches to 83. Hence we say there are 13 years to come.

I understand the 40 years to be the "time of the end," of Dan. xii. 4. This has been my faith and teaching all the way since soon after 43 passed. It is so plain and simple the friends overlook it, it seems to me, but they will, I think, see and come into it before the end.

Washington, D. C., Dec., 1870.

Letters and Extracts.

From Joseph Laciar.

Br. Thorne: I have just read the Herald of last week. And your article on the opening of the New Year gives great encouragement. It is not altogether improbable that our Saviour will appear during the present year. Was also pleased with the article of Br. Hanford.

I have thought it more than probable, judging from the complicated state of affairs existing between Russia, Turkey and other powers, that the fulfilment of the last scenes in Ezekiel xxxviii were about opening before us. The great Prince of Russia, should he make war on Turkey, might, in a very short time, fulfil the words of this prophecy. Egypt desires to be cut loose from Turkey and Russia, having conquered the Northern and central parts of Africa, Romaina and other divisions of European Turkey desiring to free themselves from the rule of the Sultan, it may well fulfil the prophecy, Ethiopia, Lybia, etc., being with that Prince who rules at Moscow and Tobolsck. And if one of the objects of the Czar is to wrest the land of Palestine from the Gentile power who now possesses it, it well fulfills the words of the prophet, "He shall conceive an evil purpose." (Verse 10.) Palestine, the land of Israel, has been brought back from the sword these many years, and has been sitting simply as the spoil and the prey of the Turkish power. Dwelling in safety, without fears, she least of all expects a war on her own soil, but the conquering Prince will "spoil the spoil, and prey the prey."

But when this takes place it will be seen that the times of the Gentiles, treading down Jerusalem, will terminate, and that the Lord God of Israel has a Prince of His choice to whom belongeth the kingdom, and about whose dominion the kings of the earth have waged wars, crusades and slaughter. He it is whom God will set upon His holy hill of Zion just at a time when the kings of the earth are angry. He shall suddenly make his appearance on Mount Olivet, at which time a great earthquake will take place, "a great shaking in the land of Israel," etc. Such is the ushering in of the king unto whom the kingdom belongeth.

During the past year we have witnessed the downfall of the harlot power, and her last supporter; but is the judgment of the Lord upon the anti-christian nations of earth to terminate here? We do not think it will. Are not the Mahommedan powers the next to be visited by the wrath of God, and destroyed? And finally, "God in His fury" will destroy the head of the Greek church with his armies, and this, too, just preceding or at the ushering in of the "anointed king." It is possible, and, indeed, it looks as if important prophetic events would continue to unfold during the present year as they did during the one which has just ceased. But we must endeavor to abide with patience the time, knowing that the Lord will triumph over his enemies, descend in glory, and bring salvation unto those who look for and desire his appearing and kingdom. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

Mauch Chunk, Pa., 1871.

From A. Mason.

Br. Thorne, and all the little Flock: I almost feared to look into the Herald of Life this morning, lest it might contain the sad news of declining health of our beloved Br. Storrs. I tore off the wrapper and turned to the editorial columns, and my heart was made glad by the lines which he had addressed to the brethren. But in that moment a sadness came over me, because I could not convey the glad news to the companion of my youth.

Since Br. Storrs has been sick my beloved wife has been cut down by the relentless enemy, and I have conveyed her to the silent mansions of the dead, to rest till our Lord shall come to gather up his loved ones who are now sleeping in the dust.

Children have fallen one after another. They, too, were lovely in life. We all, father and mother and children, bowed together around the altar of prayer, and sang together God's praise for a number of years, since '42, and now, while I write, a sadness comes over me in view of the buffetings of a wicked world. But I shall overcome through Christ strengthening me.

Yes, brethren, I am permitted to watch and wait a little longer for our Lord to come. Through the mercy of our God we walked together, my companion and I, forty-seven years. Like Abraham, I have been a sojourner in this wicked world, looking for a kingdom to be given to the saints, which is under the whole heavens, and it will not be given to another people.

There I shall meet my beloved wife and children, and range those fair fields where parting shall not be known, and where no tears shall fall. Then shall we all be made glorious by our dear Redeemer. O happy day. Brethren, let us gird on the armor anew, for in the strength of Jesus we are able to go up and take the land. And while we are "baptized for the dead," let us all remember that death is a vanquished foe, and our Lord will destroy it. Amen.

Groton Junction, Jan., 1871.

From Geo. T. Collins.

Br. Storrs: I am pleased beyond expression to read of the improvement in your health. I was afraid your labor and pilgrimage were to close before the Lord returned; and that time so near. May you be spared to see that all-glorious event. In the prospect that you were to be gathered to your fathers, we all felt how much we owed to your labors and teachings, and what an irreparable loss we should sustain. Thankful shall we be if the shadow passes.

The time and the rule will soon come when death shall claim no more victims, and tears, and sorrow, and sickness and pain shall be felt and feared no more.

I wish to inquire through the Herald of Life, if any of our friends or their acquaintance own a copy of "Elhanan Winchester's Lectures on Prophecy." It was published about the year 1800, in two volumes. If any one owns it and will dispose of it, I should be glad to have them write direct to me.

Chateaguay, Franklin Co., N. Y., Jan., 1871.

Charles M. Burt, of New Britain, Conn., writes: I should be very unwilling to do without the Herald. It comes to us, from week to week, like a very dear friend, and grows better and better. I pray that as it goes forth bearing precious seed, many more may see the blessed truth and believe. I know that our dear Br. Storrs cannot read this, and I pray that he may be restored to his family and loved ones in different parts of the land, who have been praying for him. The Lord is good and will do all things well, blessed be his dear name forever.

Appointments.

Philadelphia, until Jan. 28.
New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Jan. 29.
Meriden, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 5.
Middletown, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 12.
New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Feb. 19.

Wm. Stuart.

Elder Geo. W. Brown, of Orrington, Me., will hold a series of meetings in the Advent Church, in Eatontown, N. J., commencing Wednesday evening, Feb. 8, and holding over the following Sunday.

S. W. Bishop.

Providence, R. I., Sunday, Jan. 29.
New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Feb. 5.
Springfield, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 19.

Geo. W. Brown.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Geo. T. Collins, Jesse Frost, Lewis L. Brown, Mrs. M. L. Gilbert, Maria C. Pray, Joseph Chapin, R. C. Bartle.

Two dollars each from—W. A. Silbaugh, Plymon Muncil, D. Sage, Mrs. D. Andrews, Royal Boston, Mrs. E. G. Farmer, E. C. Swain, R. P. Stinson, David Stanway, Abel Larkin, Mrs. A. S. Libby.

Various sums—Mrs. G. W. Howe, 50 cents; E. H. Jillson, $2 50; T. J. Harris, $10; M. M. Young, $5; John Robinson, $1 10; L. Clement, $1 10.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

W. A. Silbaugh, W. Smith, H. A. Arnold, two books; W. H. Patterson.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are, at present, out of Tract No. 17—as soon as they are received from the printer they will be forwarded.

"So as by Fire."

A wondrous tale the Moslem Bible tells,
Of wicked Nimrod, Babylonish king,
Who, helped by Satan's self with fiendish spell,
Bound Abraham the Faithful, and did fling
Him helpless into fires, whose blazing ring
Was twenty cubits broad, and thirty high,
Piled up, and fed by fagots fresh and dry.

Then called the angel of the rushing seas,
Also the angel of the swift-armed wind,
"Oh, Allah, shall we help? He perishes."
But Allah said: "Yea, help him, if ye find
Him calling on your names; but if his mind
Be stayed on me, I am the Lord. I will Remember, and sustain, and save him still."

The crackling flames grew fiercer, hotter, higher;
But Abraham called out, in steadfast tone,
Nor shrank, while all his robes consumed in fire:
"Oh, Allah, thou art God, and thou alone.
There is no other God, and unto thee
Shall everlasting praise and glory be."

Then came swift Gabriel, heaven-sent, and stood
Close by him in the flames, and smiling said:
"Oh, Chalil Allah,* brave of heart and good,
I may assist thee, if thou feelest dread."
"But," said the saint, "I fear not. Fear is bred
Of doubt. I doubt not that great Allah lives;
I gladly take whatever Allah gives."

"Oh, Chalil Allah, wilt thou then not pray,"
Said Gabriel, "that his mighty hand may reach
And help thee, ere thy body melt away
In this hot fire?" "Oh, Gabriel, shall I teach
To Allah?" said the saint; "Vex him with speech
Of my distress? Praised be his holy name!
He knows that I am burning in this flame."

Then mighty Allah, from high Heaven, leant
And smiled on Abraham. That instant sprang
Fresh fountains in the fire; gay flowers bent
And nodded in the blaze; birds flew and sang;
And, like a tent, whose silken curtains hang
And coolly float, in gardens of delight
For kings, the rounded flames stood red and bright.

Then came an angel with a human face,
Who brought a flowing robe, all silk and gold,
His blackened shreds of garments to replace;
And sitting by his side, such sweet tales told
Of Paradise as angels can unfold,
Until the saint in joy was fain to pray
The walls of fire might never pass away.

The seventh day, went Radha, young and fair—
Fair Radha, daughter of the heathen king—
And stood, with curious eyes, o'erlooking where
The plain was thickly strewn with smouldering
And glowing coals. Close to the inner ring
Of towering flame with stifled breath she drew,
And clasping both her hands in fear, looked through
To see, she thought, a dead mans crumbling bones.

Lo! there in blooming garden sat two men,
And drank fresh water, while they talked in tones
More full of joy than earthly voices. Then Called Radha to the saint: "Oh, hast thou been
Not burnt in all the burning of the pyre?
And who is talking with thee in the fire?"

From out the blooming garden came a voice:
"All praise to mighty Allah! Know, oh maid,
That never until now did I rejoice
In full delight. To him whose heart is stayed
On Allah, and whose ceaseless prayers are made
To Allah, the All Merciful, no breath
Of fiercest fire has power of hurt or death."

Then Radha said: "Oh, saint, command that I Come through the flame to thee." If thou confess
That Allah is true God thou may'st pass by
These raging fires in virgin nakedness."
The saint replied; "But fear to come with less
Than utter faith—one thought of doubt or grief,
And thou art burnt and shriveled as a leaf."

"Thine Allah is true God," the maiden called;
"And thou his messenger." That instant turned
The flames to right, to left, and safely walled
A path of light beneath her feet, which burned
Not. Treading fire, until, with eyes that yearned
For blessing, and in yearning grew more sweet,
She knelt, half falling, at the angel's feet.

This is a tale the Moslem Bible tells.
But, reading it, I thought, with sudden tears,
How many souls have borne themselves as well
In fires that slacked not, day nor night, for years;
How, seeing such, the feeble ones lose fears,
And with unshrinking feet tread burning way
To gardens where the saints and angels stay.

—Selected.

December 27th, 1869.

* Friend of God. A name given to Abraham by the Moslems.

A Contrast.

BY JOEL SIMONDS.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE FIRST AND THE SECOND ADAM.

The first Adam was the head of his race, or represents them, and they will be like him. As was the earthy, such are they also that are earthy.

The second Adam is the head of his race, or represents them, and they will be like him. As is the heavenly, such will they also be that are heavenly.

The first man was made a living soul. The Lord formed him out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul.

The second Adam was made a quickening Spirit. The Son quickeneth whom he will.

The first man was a natural, earthy body.

The second man is a spiritual, heavenly body.

The earthy race is increased by being begotten and born of the flesh. That which is born of the flesh is flesh.

The heavenly race is increased by being begotten of the gospel, and born from the dead. Christ was born from the dead; and in this way became a spiritual body, and the heavenly. The heavenly are made such by a resurrection from the dead.

The first Adam has become the head of a numerous posterity by natural generation, who are like him.

The second Adam will secure a numerous family by the resurrection from the dead. They will be like him.

The earthy man was to have dominion over all the animals below him, and over all the earth.

The heavenly will have dominion over the earthly man and over all the earth. He shall have dominion over all people, nations and languages, that they may serve him.

The earthy, while exercising his dominion, was to marry and be given in marriage, and multiply and replenish the earth.

The heavenly, while exercising his dominion, will not marry, nor be given in marriage, but will be like the angels of God; and can die no more, for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

The probation of the first man was to retain the position prepared for him, and which was given to him before he was tried.

The probation of the second man was to secure a position that was promised to him on condition of worthiness.

The first man was a subject in the kingdom of God, and amenable to its law. The second man will be a king in the kingdom of God, and will execute justice and judgment in the earth, according to its law.

The first man sinned, and the curse of the law under which he lived was passed upon him. He now lives and groans and dies under the curse. He now needs to be restored to his former uncursed condition, and its attendant blessings. The second man has become the heavenly, to be the Restorer of the earthy to their former uncursed condition.

The earthy are to be restored: the heavenly will accomplish their restitution. The former condition of the earthy, which is to be restored by the heavenly, will be restored to be permanently used and enjoyed. The earthy will serve the heavenly as long as the sun and moon endure.

The heavenly will occupy the throne of David, and rule over the earthy, and bless them as long as the sun and moon endure.

After the restitution is completed, and the curse is wholly removed, so that there is no more curse, then from that time onward the heavenly shall reign over the earthy, who have been healed by the leaves of the tree of life forever and ever. This dominion shall never pass away; and of this kingdom there shall be no end.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov., 1870.

The Spirit Indispensable.

BY I. M. CHAFFEE.

"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit."—1 Cor. ii. 14.

I see that a tendency exists in our ranks, as well as in others, to quote certain passages of Scripture, and claim that positions are established or proved, which, indeed, may be the case, but when rightly understood, I apprehend that they would as often overthrow as sustain them. A very prominent peculiarity of the Book is that it demonstrates what it teaches. It demonstrates the existence of a God by miracles, and a future life by the resurrection of Christ from the dead. In this feature lays that sovereign claim that it has on the belief of all above all other kinds of religion.

I refer to the above peculiarity to convey the idea that it is not through language that the revelation is made. Language is too imperfect to convey the same idea to different individuals, unless the subject is so far understood that each is able to apply the language, which is not the case in reference to the subjects the Bible treats of. So far from it, the expression future life conveys no proper idea to any one unless his eye is on the resurrection. To me, at least, the immortal soul theory, as well as the Spiritualists, if they can be called theories, are meaningless. Their language does not convey an idea to me, nor do I believe that the intellect sufficiently profound, comprehensive, or subtle exists that can form the most remote conception of what either of the two theories wish to convey.

The resurrection of the Son of God was the only means by which a future life could be shown. The writers of the New Testament had what may be called a religious experience of which they wrote, and used the most perfect language to convey it to others, but no man can fully understand it unless he has had similar experience, and, having that, he is able to judge of the sincerity, at least, of those who wrote, I think I may say of the truth of what they wrote. I would not be understood as saying that any revelation can invalidate what they wrote, for theirs was a perfect Christian experience, and in order to be Christians ours must be in harmony with theirs. No person, not having the Spirit, can understand what is written, and no amount of Scripture testimony is sufficient to establish any person in a doctrine unless he is first taught by the Spirit of God. Surely the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned.

Zumbrota, Minn., Dec., 1870.

Popular Creed.—No. 1.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

"THE GOOD GO TO HEAVEN AT DEATH."

This is a mere assumption without proof, either from revelation or science.

It is contrary to the teaching of Christ and his apostles. "Whither I go ye cannot come." "No man hath ascended into heaven."

It makes the doctrine of the resurrection of no value: the Bible makes it all important.

It antedates the reward of the righteous. "Ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," not before.

It denies the sleep of the dead, which the Scriptures affirm.

It indorses the serpent's lie, "ye shall not surely die."

It encourages saint-worship and necromancy.

It is a palpable absurdity. There are no dead people in heaven.

It makes the word of God of no effect, by human tradition.

It is another gospel, a false hope exposed to apostolic curse.—Gal. i. 8, 9.

It denies that the renewed earth is the inheritance of the saint. "Ye shall be recompensed on the earth."

It makes the judgment at the last day an unmeaning ceremony, reversing the order of things.

It is no better than baptised heathenism—Tarbarus and Eusiam restored.

It gives death the victory instead of Christ. It indorses the immortality of the soul, the fruitful source and foundation of the endless fables and false doctrines of these last days of delusion.

Good for Evil.

A College professor once related the following fact to his class, in order to show the power of kindness in effecting a change in disposition and conduct of our enemies toward us:

There were two farmers who lived near neighbors, and whose farms laid side by side. One of these farmers was a pious, good man, of gentle, inoffensive character. The character of the other was just the reverse. His temper was like a tinder, taking fire at every spark that came in his way. He hated his pious neighbor; but more, probably, on account of his piety than any thing else. He was always vexing and tormenting the good man, quarreling about mere trifles, as much as one can quarrel who has no one to quarrel with him.

One summer he had mowed down a good deal of grass; and he had gone away from home, leaving it out in the field to dry. But while he was absent there came up a storm of rain. While the clouds were gathering the pious man saw the condition of his neighbor's hay, and it struck him that there was now a fine chance to show a good man's revenge—that is, to return good for evil. So he took with him his men, and got his neighbor's hay all safely into the barn. What was the result?

When the quarrelsome neighbor came home, expecting to see his hay all soaked by the rain, and found it had been taken care of by the man he had so much injured, his heart was touched. From that hour the evil spirit was cast out of him. No more abuse did he give that good man after that; but he became as obliging and kind to his pious neighbor as the latter had been to him."—Selected.

The Sins of the Tongue.—The tongue may be employed about and made to serve all purposes of vice, in tempting and deceiving, in perjury, and in justice. But the thing here referred to is talkativeness; a disposition to be talking, abstracted from the consideration of what is said; with very little or no regard to, or thought of doing, either good or harm. And let not any imagine this to be a slight matter, and that it deserves not to have so great weight laid upon it, till he has considered what evil is implied in it, and the bad effects which follow from it. It is perhaps true, that they who are addicted to this folly would choose to confine themselves to trifles and indifferent subjects, and so intend only to be guilty of being impertinent, but as they go on forever talking of nothing, as common matters will not afford sufficient fund for perpetual continued discourse when subjects of this kind are exhausted, they will go on to defamation, scandal, divulging of secrets, their own secrets as well as those of others, any thing rather than be silent.—Bishop Butler.

A Contented Farmer.

Once upon a time, Frederick, King of Prussia, surnamed "Old Fritz," took a ride and espied an old farmer, ploughing his acre by the wayside, cheerily singing his melody.

"You must be well off, old man," said the king. "Does this acre belong to you, on which you so industriously labor?"

"No, sir," replied the farmer, who knew not that it was the king. "I am not so rich as that; I plough for wages."

"How much do you get a day?" asked the king.

"Eight groschen" (about twenty cents), said the farmer.

"This is not much," replied the king; "can you get along with this?"

"Get along, and have something left."

"How is that?"

The farmer smiled, and said,

"Well, if I must tell you: Two groschen are for myself and wife; two I pay my old debts; two I lend away; and two I give away for the Lord's sake."

"This is a mystery which I cannot solve," replied the king.

"Then I will solve it for you," said the farmer.

"I have two old parents at home, who kept me when I was weak and needed help; and now that they are weak and need help, I keep them. This is my debt toward which I pay two groschen a day. The third pair of groschen, which I lend away, I spend for my children, that they may receive Christian instruction. This will come handy to me and my wife when we get old. With the last two groschen I maintain two sick sisters, whom I could not be compelled to keep: this I give for the Lord's sake."

The king, well pleased with his answer, said,

"Bravely spoken, old man. Now I will also give you something to guess. Have you ever seen me before?"

"Never," said the farmer.

"In less than five minutes you shall see me fifty times, and carry in your pocket fifty of my likenesses."

"This is a riddle which I cannot unravel," said the farmer.

"Then I will do it for you," replied the king. Thrusting his hand into his pocket, and counting him fifty bran new gold pieces into his hand, stamped with his royal likeness, he said to the astonished farmer, who knew not what was coming,

"The coin is genuine, for it also comes from our Lord God, and I am his paymaster. I bid you adieu."—German Reformed Messenger.

Clay and Chalk in South Carolina.—The deposits of China clay in this State are enormous. There are banks of it forty feet thick on the bluffs near the Wateree River. Great quantities of this clay are now being shipped North and to Europe. Its use in the arts is very extensive. It has superseded plaster of Paris in the manufacture of cheap candies. Some of this clay is absolutely free from grit. Such is the case at the mine in this State, near Augusta, Georgia. It is finer than flour.

The deposits of red and white chalks are also very large in South Carolina. But the most extraordinary formations are what are known as paint stones. These are found on the surface of the ground. The outside is formed of sand-stone, and is very hard, but the inside is filled with a fine soft powder, and of the most brilliant hues. Each stone has its own peculiar color—red, crimson, and a gray color predominating. These stones vary in size, from two inches in diameter to that of twenty inches, and about one-fourth of the bulk is the powder. They are said to be formed by an insect of the ant species.—Selected.

"As a day of rest, I view the Sabbath as a day of compensation for the inadequate restorative power of the body under continued labor and excitement. One day in seven, by the bounty of Providence, is thrown in as a day of compensation to perfect by its repose the animal system."—John Richard Farre, M. D., of London.

Children's Department.

"Ye also Ought to Wash One Another's Feet."

It was Sunday morning, and wanted about an hour of church time, and Helen's cousin, Carrie, had come in to look over the Sunday-school lesson with her. They had just been reading about Jesus washing the disciples' feet, and Helen had explained to Carrie that the Jews wore sandals instead of boots or shoes, and so their feet got very hot and dusty, and nothing was more refreshing than to bathe them often in cool water. Thus it had become the custom, when a man went to a friend's house, to have a servant the first thing, bring "a towel, and water in a basin," and wash his feet. Carrie was very much interested in this explanation, and said she had not been able to make any thing out of the lesson before. "But what does this mean?" she said, reading this verse: "If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet?" "People don't wear sandals now, and what would they think if we should ask them to take off their boots and then wash their feet?" Poor Carrie looked very much puzzled.

Helen could not help her, and the two girls thought and talked it over for some time, until they were interrupted by some one calling, "Helen, won't you come and comb Johnnie's hair? I am afraid I shall not be ready for church if I stop to do it." Now Helen was a pretty good little girl, but she did not like to comb Johnnie's hair, and I am sorry to say she seldom did it without complaining at being asked.

After all, if you had seen her little brother's very curly head, where each hair insisted on going its own way, and that seemed to be tied around a neighboring hair, you would not have blamed her so much. But some one must comb it, so she jumped up with a wry face, and went off, telling Carrie she would be back soon.

"Come, Johnnie," she said, going into the room where he was waiting his daily martyrdom, "let us have it over with as soon as possible," and began combing with no gentle hand.

Suddenly the comb moved much more carefully, so that Johnnie looked up in surprise. "Did I hurt you?" said Helen, smiling. "I did not mean to. There, that will do; now just one kiss, for you have stood as still as a mouse."

"How good you are to-day," said Johnnie, raising his rosy lips: "I would always stand still, if you would always be so good."

"Helen, Helen! won't you button Susie's boots?" called her mother, and off she ran, without saying any thing more to Johnnie. Now buttoning boots she disliked almost as much as combing hair; but this time she did it quietly and pleasantly, and then hurried back to Carrie.

"Carrie," she exclaimed, "I guess I know what that verse means. It came to me all of a sudden while I was jerking poor Johnnie's hair, and thinking how I hated to touch it. I don't believe Jesus liked to wash his disciples' feet; how could he? but he felt it ought to be done, and so, never stopped to ask whether it was pleasant or not, but just went straight and did it. And He says, we ought to do the same, whenever we can help any one. No matter whether we like the work or not, we should do it: and do it without waiting to be asked, too; that takes off half the good of a thing, I know."

"I guess you are right," said Carrie after a minute; "and I'll run right home, for I know grandmother would like me to help her get ready for church; and it must be something like washing feet, too, for I hate it bad enough, she is so fussy you know." So away went Carrie to put what she had learned into practice.

The two girls did not meet again until they came into Sunday-school, and then they seemed to have forgotten all about the morning; but when Miss Merton, their teacher, was trying to explain the verse which had puzzled them, their eyes met with a pleasant recognition which did not escape her. She felt that in some way two of her scholars had learned their lesson practically.

"But, Helen," whispered Carrie as they were going out, "grandmother wasn't half as fussy as usual, and I shall help her again because I like to, so I shall have to hunt up something else for washing feet."—Selected.

The Mosque of Omar.

If you were to visit Jerusalem now, would you find the Temple? No, that was burnt long, long ago. On the spot where it stood, there is a fine, large, curious-looking building, called "the Mosque of Omar." A mosque, you know, is a Mohammedan church, and this one is named after a Mohammedan saint.

It is built of marble, on a raised marble platform. The outside is covered with bright-colored tiles, which in the sun reflect all the colors of the rainbow. It has eight sides, instead of four like our churches, and each side is sixty-seven feet long. The roof is supported by three rows of marble columns, one inside the other. On the top of the dome is a golden crescent—the figure of a new moon—which is the badge of the Turkish power. We always see it on their national flag.

If you enter the mosque, directly under the dome you will be surprised to see a dark, rough stone rising up through the marble floor, five or six feet high. It looks very odd, and you will ask, "What does this mean?" You will be still more surprised to find that it is this rock which makes the spot so sacred. The Jews think it is the holiest place on earth. On this very spot, they say, Abraham offered up Isaac, or rather offered up the lamb caught in the bushes, instead of Isaac. This too was the threshing-floor of Ornan, where the angel from heaven talked with David, and which David bought to build an altar on, and on which his son Solomon afterwards built the temple.

The story of this you will find in the twenty-first chapter of the first Book of Chronicles.

Every Friday night a curious scene takes place near the mosque. Down in a valley there are some large old stones, which the Jews say were a part of the foundation wall of their temple; and they come every Friday night, which is the beginning of their Sabbath, and sit in a row opposite the stones, and cry. Then they kneel down and pray with their mouths close to the stones, because they think that all the prayers whispered between the cracks and crevices of these stones God will be sure to hear.

What Jesus said about the ruins of their beautiful temple and the desolations of Jerusalem has come to pass. The thought of it made Jesus weep, and now the sight of it makes the Jews weep.—Child's Paper.

Willie's Flowers.

At the window of a small, poor-looking house, a little girl sat sewing busily, so busily that she seldom raised her eyes from her work, but softly sang to herself low, sweet tunes, that caused Willie to stop and listen, and look with wonder; for she was poor and very lame, and was obliged to sew steadily to help her mother buy food for herself and two baby brothers.

One morning, as he passed on his way to school, Willie slyly tossed a bunch of wild honeysuckle and violets through the open window, and ran away without saying a word.

The next morning Hettie, for that was the lame girl's name, called to him to come in; the flowers were in a mug on the window-seat beside her.

"Willie," said Hettie, "I want to tell you how much good your flowers did me. I was in great pain last night, and as I lay on my bed, I looked at the sweet blossoms, and wished I could walk out into the woods where they grew, when I thought little faces peeped at me, nodding their heads and smiling, and out from the centre of a little blue violet, a fairy form stepped, and with a soft, silvery voice said,

"'Be patient, Hetty; do not murmur or complain: God loves his children, and sends us to lift your thoughts away from the heavy pain to the sweet rest of heaven.

"'We are called 'good thoughts,' and go to everybody to help them all we can. We made the little boy bring these flowers, to give you a glimpse of the bright, sunny land, where no storm and no suffering comes.'

"She kissed me and I awoke; the morning sun was shining on my flowers, and I thought I must tell you how much good you had done me."

"Little acts of kindness,
Little deeds of love,
Make this earth an Eden
Like the heaven above."

—S. S. Gazette.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1850.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it, and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	"
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,655,
NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 17.
WHOLE NUMBER 351.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
209 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.
The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New-York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.
We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:
GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

(Continued from last week.)

WILL THE WICKED DEAD BE RAISED TO LIFE AGAIN?

BY THOMAS READ.

Is it asked, what is the meaning of these tremendous sufferings, and the ignominious death of the sinless victim; the highest being in the universe, save his Father? Why did God permit his Son, his only Son whom he loved, to suffer thus? Why this superlative expenditure of love on the part of the Father in the gift of his Son for such a fearful purpose? And why such submission, obedience and sacrifice, on the part of the Son?

Was it to satisfy the justice of God? No. The justice of God requires the death of the transgressor himself, and could not be satisfied with the death of an innocent substitute; no, the sinner must die. Was it to make an atonement for the sins of mankind? No. For sin cannot be atoned for; it must be freely forgiven for Christ's sake, or the penalty or it must be everlastingly endured. Did Christ then die instead of us? No. For then we should not have to die. A general atonement, and a partial atonement, are equally fallacious, and logically, they both lead to Universalism. For what then did Christ die? He died as the Great Ransom Price for the redemption of the World. He died to purchase life from the dead for all believers in him. We were dying, perishing in death without the great LIFE-GIVER; but he died that all believers in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. He died that the righteous might live again by a resurrection from the dead. He died to redeem us from hell, the state of death, and to restore us to a higher and better life than that animal life we have forfeited by sin. He died to reconcile us to God. He died as a great propitiatory sacrifice, to form a basis for the forgiveness of sins that are past through the forbearance of God. A basis for the dispensation of mercy, and the gift of a holy spirit to believers, by the assistance of which they may work together, with God in the formation of holy characters to make them suitable subjects for God's ulterior purpose of establishing a kingdom wherein dwelleth righteousness, to be ruled by his Son. He died as a victim, by the blood of whom, the Great Covenant of ages, made between God and man, is sealed, made valid, and confirmed. He died and was raised, as the Mediator of this better Covenant, appearing in the very presence of God in our behalf. He died as a transcendant exhibition of the love and mercy of God in Christ to us, by faith in which, introducing us into the family of God, and begetting filial love and gratitude in us, we are enabled cheerfully and lovingly to keep the commands of God, and thus the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin. He died and rose again, as the first fruits and the pledge of the glorious harvest of the resurrection of all the righteous dead. He died and rose again as the acknowledged King of Israel, and is now sitting upon his Father's throne till he shall come again in great power and glory, to raise his saints, establish his kingdom, and to sit upon his own throne, even the throne of his father David.

But the forgiveness of sins, our reconciliation to God, and the formation of holy characters, great as these gifts confessedly are, amount to but little when conferred upon mortal, corruptible, perishing creatures whose existence is bounded by three score years and ten. But God has given his Son, the life's blood of his Son, that though we are not exempted from death, believers do not perish in death, "their lives being hid with Christ in God," and they are to be restored to life, even to everlasting life, by a resurrection from the dead. All other gifts of Christ pale before this, without this they are transient, this makes them perpetual. Christ is the Resurrection and the Life, and so far as we are concerned, this is his crowning glory.

Redemption! Ransom! Everlasting Life! Oh! the meaning of these words! Redemption bought back from hell; Ransom the price paid to buy us back; Everlasting Life, perpetual, conscious, animated existence; an existence conferred only upon those who are fitted to reign with Christ in ineffable glory throughout the coming ages! We die; this mortal, corruptible, perishing, animal nature is constitutionally unfitted for that lasting painless, holy, happy and glorious state of being, that is to be the inheritance of the saints. We shall die, but "being bought with a price," we shall be restored to life again by a resurrection out from among the dead ones. God has established these immutable principles. If there be no organization, there is no life, and if there be no resurrection, there is no future life. The resurrection is the grand climax to this our trial state. We enter the dominion of death called in Hebrew, sheol; in Greek, hades; words though translated hell, mean in all places where they occur, the state of death, a state where there is no knowledge, no sensation, but Christ has redeemed our souls, which simply means ourselves, from hell by his blood. Our animal natures are dissolved, but God who raises the dead, giveth us a body as it pleases him, yet to every man his own body. The body is changed, but the man is preserved in all his original identity of being. The man of 70 knows himself to be the same person as he was when a boy of 10, though physiology tells him that his body has been changed ten times. The man clothed in weakness, dishonor, mortality and corruption; is invested with incorruption, power, honor, glory and immortality.

The mortal is absorbed in immortality. Shout! shout! Ye ransomed-ones! Oh, death! where is thy sting! Oh Hell! where is thy victory! Hades, the state of death, obtained dominion over the church of God for a little while; but Christ! the great Ransomer! has unlocked the the portals of the tomb, and the saints will rise therefrom in a new celestial organization to a life that is life indeed.

Without the resurrection of the righteous, the plans of God, comprising so much of mercy, love, and goodness to men, would all be frustrated; Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Noah, Daniel, and Job, and all the saints, would remain in hell forever, and Christ has died in vain! It is the resurrection that like the bow of promise spans the concave of hell with its glorious record; "The righteous dead shall rise again from the land of the enemy."

But what if Hell destroy the wicked? Be it so; it will not obscure a single ray of the glory of the promise. Better the wicked, who have rejected the loving Saviour, and perished in their iniquities, be engulphed in utter nothingness, than to pollute the fair creation with their loathsome presence.

The appeal is now made to the candid and intelligent reader. If such be the nature of the resurrection; its recipients so glorious, so exalted, so holy, and so happy, and the whole depending wholly upon union to Christ here in this present age: Can the wicked partake of the glories of the resurrection? Reason says, No. Christian sympathy says, No. Mercy says, No. Justice says, No. And the word of God says No, "they shall not see life, but the wrath of God abides upon them." The miserable being who has defiled his own character, who refused to be reformed, who rejected Christ, the great Restorer and the only LIFE-GIVER, is unfit longer to pollute the universe. Having passed his trial and refused to go to Christ that he might have life, and having been weighed in the balances and found wanting, let him sink back again to his primitive nothingness, and "be as though he had never been."—Obd. 16 v. The living wicked when Christ shall come will be as stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them, said the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branches.—Mal. iv. 1.

Again, the wicked dead are under the law, and not under Christ, nor grace; the law requires the life of the offender, its penalty is death, the wicked dead are under its penalty; to bring them to life again, would be to remit the penalty of the law, and would be unjust. Death means when applied to the wicked, the entire extinction of their being. Therefore the wicked will never be raised again.

The promise of the Gospel is "life" from the dead and "everlasting life." Supposing for the sake of argument, that the wicked should be raised to life again. Then they would obtain life the same as the righteous, and if they were suffered to live on in any condition whatever, they would as truly have everlasting life as will the righteous, which cannot be. But suppose God should "torment" them a little while and then kill them again. This would be unjust to the wicked, it is not contained in the law, and we are very certain that God will not infringe his own law. Therefore the wicked will not be raised to life again.

The resurrection is a gospel benefit, purchased by the death of Christ, for those only who believe on him, in which the wicked dead having rejected him, have no part nor lot. How then can there be any resurrection for the wicked? Such an anomaly would necessitate another reading of the gospel somewhat like this:

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whoever believes on him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" and Christ "will raise him up at the last day;" and whoever believes not on him, shall by no means perish, but shall have everlasting life, and Christ will raise him up also at the last day, or at some other time. That is, that the righteous and the wicked shall both be rewarded alike, at least so far as life is concerned. But the latter clauses are not written in the record, and as they neutralize the former, they are not true. Therefore the wicked dead will not be raised again to life.

The Scriptures present a numerous class of cases wherein persons have been destroyed by the direct judgment of God avowedly as a punishment for their sins. God has already executed his fierce wrath upon them, and needs not to do it again. The terms employed are so emphatic in some places that they seemingly preclude the very possibility of raising such persons to life again, their very identity having been already destroyed. Now it follows that if the wicked were annihilated by the judgments inflicted, they cannot possibly be raised again to life. If they could be raised again it would prove that they were not utterly destroyed, nor annihilated. Only a few cases are cited. God said to Adam: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for of dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This was his final sentence. If Adam were raised again it would not only remove this penalty; but we should then have two great heads of all that will live again in the future age, which is not taught. It is a mistake to suppose that the promise of a Redeemer was ever made to Adam. (See Rom.) It was simply an announcement of the serpent's doom. "A descendant of the woman shall crush the serpent's head." And the virgin's child shall destroy the devil.

God passed a final judgment upon the antediluvians, and plunged man and beast into one common destruction. "And every living substance was destroyed." God repented that he had made them. Will he make them over again? Not he. So of the cities of the plain, Sodom and Gomorrah. God having examined their case, he executed their final judgment. "Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven; and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of those cities." Now these are set forth as an example of the way the ungodly shall be destroyed. This implies that this destruction comprehends the whole of their doom.

(To be Continued.)

(Continued from last issue.)

AN EXPOSITION OF REV. XX. 12.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

II. Again we affirm, that "the dead" spoken of in this passage, necessarily refers only to the righteous, and not to both classes of the dead.

1. As we have before remarked, the principal matter at issue in this exposition is in regard to the application of the expression "the dead." We feel the utmost confidence in affirming that no proof can be found in this chapter to warrant the supposition that this expression embraces both classes of the dead; and we hope before the conclusion of this investigation to show to the satisfaction of all that no such proof is contained in the book of Revelation, or even in the whole Bible.

Some may cite the last verse in this chapter, that "Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire," as evidence of the supposed reliving of the wicked dead; but no candid mind, with a moment's consideration of this verse, can discover a particle of evidence to sustain such a supposition. Does it say, or even hint, that the wicked were made alive and then cast into the lake of fire? Is it not a far more reasonable conclusion that those who shall be cast into the lake of fire are the wicked who are alive at the coming of Christ? At that great and glorious day, when the descending King shall send forth his angels to gather his elect, all the wicked who have rejected the gracious offer of life will meet with total and eternal overthrow in the lake of fire. This is the class to whom John refers as not having their names written in the Lamb's book of life.

The "turning" of the "cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes," the apostle Peter tells us, was "an ensample unto those that afterwards should live ungodly." The Sodomites met their overthrow by fire and brimstone; but this destruction was only poured out upon the living. The dead were not brought forth from the darkness and silence of the grave to suffer the brief anguish of being burned up, and thus be again returned to the same condition from which they were awakened. We are afforded no evidence that they will live again, or that the wicked who have since died will be made alive to be cast into "the lake of fire."

2. To include the wicked dead in Rev. xx. 12, in the light of the New Testament Scriptures, would prove their resurrection to immortality, and consequently would establish the doctrine of universal salvation. This is a dilemma into which but few were aware that their construction of this passage involved them. But however much they may demur at this conclusion its soundness will appear satisfactory by reference to a few of those profound testimonies of Scriptures; and no stronger evidence is wanted than Christ's own words in the 20th chapter of Luke. He says: "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead neither marry, nor are given in marriage: . . . neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."—Luke xx. 35–38. According to this passage, a resurrection of all who are "accounted worthy" constitutes them "the children of God," as "equal unto the angels,"—and they will die no more. Therefore, God is not a God of the dead who will live no more, viz., the unrighteous dead. Eld. Miles Grant, though an earnest advocate of the revival of the wicked dead, makes this confession as to the truth of the passage; "God is not the God of those who will live no more. But Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob will live again. Therefore, God is the 'God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.' This is true!"

Again: Paul says; "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead. . . . But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? . . . It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body."—1 Cor. xv. 19, 20, 21, 35, 42. In this chapter Paul assures us that our only hope of a revival from death depends upon the resurrection of Christ; and he declares that Christ is now "risen from the dead" and become the "first-fruits of the resurrection harvest." "First-fruits," as all are aware, is a sample of the harvest. A sheaf of barley cannot be the first-fruits of a wheat harvest. So Christ, being raised from the dead as the first fruits of the resurrection harvest, is the sample of all who shall be raised from the dead; for the first-fruits and the harvest must be of one character. Christ was "put to death in the flesh, but was quickened by the Spirit (1 Pet. iii. 18); and Paul declares that "if the Spirit of him that RAISED up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8. 11. Thus the evidence is plain and positive that a resurrection from the dead depends entirely upon the indwelling of the Holy Spirit which quickened Christ from the dead, and all who are raised from the dead must be like unto his glorious body,—like the sample. To say that all men will have a revival from death is to contradict the Scriptures which make the indwelling of the Holy Spirit prerequisite to the resurrection; because all men do not have the Holy Spirit dwelling in them. But how plainly Paul places this matter within the comprehension of all! He argues that by Adam's transgression death came upon the race; but by Christ (who triumphed over death and obtained the keys of death and the grave, i. e., the absolute power to deliver man from death) came also the resurrection of the dead. Christ, the great LIFE-GIVER, has, however, made deliverance from death, or a future life, conditional. He says: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John xi. 25. Again Jesus says: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. Had not God sent his Son into the world the entire race would have perished, as none would have had a revival from death; but now all who believe on Him will not perish, because his mission was to give to all who would comply with the conditions of the gospel an imperishable life, viz., "everlasting life," by delivering them from death. Hence, all who do not believe on him,—reject the only LIFE-GIVER,—perish in precisely the same manner as though he had not come to offer them life from the dead. For additional and emphatic testimony we refer to John iii. 36: "He that believeth in the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth (Syriac, 'obeyeth') not the Son shall not see (zoen) life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." As the Greek word zoen means simply life without any reference to its duration, the divine testimony is unimpeachable that those who do not believe on Christ will not see life of any kind beyond the grave. Hence the conclusion cannot be fairly avoided that faith in Christ is required as the condition upon which He will exercise his absolute power in delivering man from the state of death.

From these facts (and many more might be added), we are unable to see how any one can include the wicked dead in Rev. xx. 12, for such a construction of the passage involves the conclusion that they are raised in immortality, and consequently will be saved; but such a conclusion is in direct conflict with the testimony of the word of God.

3. In harmony with the evidence we have already adduced we believe that "the dead" spoken of in Rev. xx. 12 are the same class mentioned in Rev. xi. 18, "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy (margin—'corrupt') the earth." The class which are here designated by the expression "the dead" are the prophets, and the saints and those who fear the name of God; and, therefore, we are afforded strong evidence to warrant the use of the same expression in Rev. xx. 12, in a limited sense. And further, we know of no passage in the Bible having reference to the resurrection of the dead "at the last day" where this expression is used in a general sense as embracing both classes of the dead.

4. The objection may be offered that the expression "small and great" is evidence that Rev. xx. 12, 13 includes the wicked dead. But this conclusion is not well founded. There is no evidence to warrant the conclusion that "small and great" refers to the moral character of those whom John saw standing before God, but on the the contrary there is valid and sufficient reason for believing that it refers to the position which saints are recognized by the Master as occupying in the great church. John uses the expression in this sense in Rev. xi. 18 where he speaks of "the prophets" and "the saints," and all who "fear" his name "small and great." If "small and great" in this passage does not include the wicked dead, where can evidence be found to show that the same expression in Rev. xx. 12 has a more extended meaning, or includes both classes of the dead. Again: John uses this same expression in Rev. xix. 5 in such a manner as to forever settle all dispute in regard to the extent of its meaning. He says: "And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God all ye his servants, and ye that fear him both small and great." Nothing is clearer to our mind than that "small and great" in Rev. xx. 12 refers solely to the righteous. That no other conclusion can be fairly drawn will still more clearly appear from the convincing evidence that still remains to be brought forward.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan., 1871.

[To be Continued.]

(Continued from last week.)

THE ATONEMENT.—A REVIEW.

BY J. C. DAY.

Let us examine the subject still further. A man deserving death may, it is said, demand from justice, or in other words, from law, an acquittal, upon the claim that another has suffered for him. But how came the substitute by such a claim? He may indeed have a demand on the ruler, founded on a promise to pardon the offender; but who gave him the right to change the sentence to one which the transgressor has never incurred? Or a demand binding the law to pardon? Or to bind the law to accept an innocent victim in place of the guilty?

The law which, to make the case a parallel one is the exact and unchanging measure of justice, said that the sinner, not an innocent substitute, should die. That, then, and nothing but that, is the claim of justice. How came a substitute possessed of a demand which annihilates this and renders the immutable claim of justice unjust. Even the administrator of law cannot be bound in justice, other than that justice to the substitute which arises out of a promise of reward, to accept the sufferings of an innocent person in the room of the guilty. How can he be? If the brother of a murderer comes forward to-day, and offers to die in the criminal's stead, are the rulers of the land bound in justice to accept the substitution, and to let the murderer escape? Their law, which is the exact measure of justice, we will suppose, said nothing about a substitute; but merely that the murderer should die. That, then, and nothing but that, is justice, or can become justice. On what principle can the substitute force himself upon them, and, in the name of justice, demands the release of one whom their law, and justice condemn? But suppose the rulers have agreed with the innocent brother to accept his substitution, and have thus allured him on to death; nay, have inflicted the stroke with their own hand, are they not now bound in justice to release the criminal? I answer, not in justice to the criminal, but certainly by both truth and justice to the substitute. Here is a claim of justice to be satisfied. By what? By the fulfilment of a contract on the part of the rulers. But we have been speaking of a claim of justice supposed to have been satisfied by the death of the innocent brother. By this transition from one claim to another the confusion is introduced.—Atonement, p. 71.

No one doubts that it is an act of justice to Christ to do to those for whom he died according to all the antecedent stipulations, and therefore to justify and save believers. But we are not speaking of a claim of justice to be satisfied by an act of the Father, but a claim supposed to have been satisfied by the death of his Son; not a debt of reward, due from the Father to the Son, but of a debt of suffering due from the sinner to the divine law. It is admitted that Christ, by his obedience unto death, rendered a stipulated service which justly entitled him to the promised reward; but this is not saying that by his expiation he paid to immutable justice, whose rights are not conventional all that was due from believing sinners. He created a debt in favor of himself, but did not pay what sinners owed. He made out a claim on justice by his obedience, but did not satisfy one by his expiation. This was a claim for the death of the transgressor in person, and not of an innocent substitute. This claim was certainly not enforced; but rather the death of Christ was accepted as an equal honor to the divine law. This is the plain matter of fact, in whatever language it may be couched.

It might be asked, "if one person has a claim upon another for kind treatment, can he not transfer that claim to a third person?"

This question refers not to the claim of Christ to be himself the object of his Father's love, for that, of course, he cannot transfer, but to his claim on the salvation of believers. Can this claim be transferred to them? If a child, you may say, visits one whom his father has befriended, he feels himself invested with a personal claim to a kind reception, and, if otherwise treated, resents it as a personal injury, not merely as an act of injustice to his father. Granted: But who gave him that claim? Not his father, but his God. The second great commandment has invested every man with a right to be treated according to the relation he sustains. The child of your friend has a claim akin to that which is possessed by your neighbor, and approaching to that which your own child possesses. Your own child has a peculiar claim upon you; but did you give him that claim? No: it was given him by God. But who or what gave the Mediator a claim to the pardon of sinners, but the promise of God? That promise fastens the claim immovable in himself; and created no such relations for the sinner as gives him a right, by any law, to urge the claim in his own person. It cannot possibly be in him unless he has actually performed the same service, or is absolutely identified with the person of Christ.

The right of the Redeemer to the salvation of believers has never been transferred, or alienated, but remains in himself. He has not put it into their hands, as though about to leave them to buffet the world alone. No: He abides with them, and is himself at once their guardian and their title to life. It is for his own sake, and to satisfy a claim which his obedience created. It must be thus so long as it remains true that the obedience was his own and not another's; and they receive their mercies from hour to hour. This accords with the consciousness of every true believer. When he is humbled in the dust, at the feet of his Maker, it is farthest from his thoughts to make demand, on the name of justice, or in any other name. His language then is, "Lord be merciful unto me a sinner;" and when he experiences a sense of pardoning love he is the more confounded, and opens not his mouth for shame.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS.,

[To be Continued.]

WAITING FOR THE LIGHT.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

IT appears that a people will be found at the close of the dispensation who shall be looking for the Saviour—or, waiting for the return of the Lord, when he shall come. To use the figure which he, himself, employs, "That you may open to him," whether he comes "at midnight, at the cock-crowing, or in the morning." The simple idea is, that of one person sitting up in the night, watching, waiting, looking for another;—with this qualification, that the one expected is the beloved Master and Lord, who has kindly cared for the children, servants, and all the members of the family; who has authority to demand this attention and expectation, and whose assurance of future benefit encourage the waiting and self-denial imposed by the conviction of his expected presence, and the fact of his still continued absence. The position is called blessed, in the gospel, "Blessed are those servants whom, when the Lord cometh, he shall find so doing." It is really waiting for him; for the light which he will bring. The longing for light may be relieved by the person coming, who should appear with the light, or the benefit being obtained which the light should give. Sometimes the presence or the blessing is all we can expect the light to bestow.

Believers are like those who "wait for the morning."

The waiting position implies a readiness, beforehand. If a walk or journey is requisite to take us to the station before we start; to wait signifies that we have taken that walk, and are at the station before the train arrives; at least, before the advertised time of leaving.

It is said that General Washington, at one time, upon breaking camp, found his body-servant a little behind in the arrangements for moving. "John," said the General, "do not let me find you thus again." Upon the next occasion he asked John, just before the appointed time for leaving, "Are you ready?"

"All packed up, sir," says John.

There is a plain intimation that the waiting class should suffer a disappointment in their expectations, as to the appearing of the Lord, and that darkness would be the result, while the requirement is that, if he should "tarry," (or seem to delay) "wait for him, he will not tarry, but surely come." This signifies that there will be no real delay—that, at the appointed time the presence will be found; but a seeming tarrying will exist from too full reliance upon calculation.

The real lover of Christ is always waiting for him; but more especially when the intimation of his return (signs) are patent. These, before the mind, will excite interest and lead to a looking, as we love a friend and would welcome him at any time, but should set up for him if he had sent us word that he were coming.

If notified to move, the Christian is like John "all packed up."

The mariners in the storm wait for the light. The poor shipwrecked sailor on the desolate isle will hail the light. The benighted traveller on the dark unknown road longs for the light. It is his life, strength and salvation. The sick, who must lie and wait for the morning cannot but feel that there is a blessing in the light. They wait for it. Many a time did I say, last summer, as the darkness gathered in for gloom, "I must try to pass another long, weary night," and the nights were not literally long after the fitful and broken slumber which the fever would allow. I watched for the first signs of light, and for the light itself. There is company and society in the light. A man is not alone in the light. The merry songsters in that old tree by the window—the beautiful robin whose shrill notes would never fail by 3 o'clock, in the short summer night; often led me to wait patiently for the sun rising. I knew it was close by.

Brethren, the tried people are said to wait, even to be children of the light. They are aroused by the song. They love the light that will break on the vision in the morning hour. That will wake a deathless joy in the heart.

"Long, long we have been waiting," may the tried flock well sing, and with the joy and interest of a "faith that does not shrink"—though long time elapse before the realization of the fond hope of immortality.

"We are waiting still, dear Lord for thee"—is a sentiment which swells the heart of the tried pilgrim on the stormy path of life, and now the illumination of a new glory bursts on the true, but weary hearts—left long trusting and looking—confirmed, at the last, by the answer of the event to the prediction.

"Then waiting brethren let us sing. He will not tarry long."

This is the grand point to occupy, with life, vigor, zeal; an earnest joy—a determined, happy labor; an nnabated undying devotion. God will reward the effort of the faithful soul . . . . to stand, to study and wait for truth, with the light. He will make known his purpose to his servants, the prophets, and the light of God in the kingdom of heaven shall be the portion of the vigilant and faithful in their watch for the rays of the everlasting morning.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

TEMPERANCE ANECDOTE.

IT is related of a minister of the Gospel, distinguished alike for his eloquence and exemplary piety, that having an appointment to preach in a certain village, he stopped on Saturday afternoon at a house of one of his early acquaintances, who was a resident of the village. To his surprise, he found his old friend, a distiller and vender of ardent spirits, and exceedingly bitter against the temperence cause. He could not refrain all the evening, from giving vent to his feelings, against all the temperance men, and every temperance movement.

The next day the preacher took his text from Josiah, "Dost thou well to be angry?" He showed what good was doing in the days in which we live, and especially in the temperance cause; how that cause was drying up the founts of pauperism, and crime, and brutality; saving thousands and thousands from the drunkard's path, and restoring many a lost man to society and to his family; transforming the most degraded and abject beings in the community, into useful and respectable citizens. And as he enumerated one blessing after another, he would cast his eyes down upon his friend, and ask, "Dost thou well to be angry?" It was more than the poor man could bear; shame and confusion were his. He hid his face from the congregation, and as soon as possible made his way from the church, and from that day no man has been a stronger advocate for the temperance reform, and made greater pecuniary sacrifices in its behalf. He will be rewarded a thousand fold, we doubt not, by an approving conscience, through life and in death.—Sabbath-day Miscellany.

A REV. D.D., of this city, tells a story of a man who sang with notable ardor of piety the hymn,

> "Were the whole realm of nature mine,
> That were a tribute far to small,"

and then all through the singing kept rummaging his pocket to find the smallest piece of coin in his possession, for the contribution box.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 1, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

NOTWITHSTANDING the kind notice of Br. THORNE, a few weeks since, there are a number who have not remitted anything on the present volume nor informed us that they will do so. We have now sent them seventeen numbers of this volume without any response from them; such persons must not blame us if they receive no more after this date. If they renew by a remittance, within two weeks, we shall probably be able to furnish the numbers issued during that time. We are sorry to part with any of you, but justice demands that we cease to send to all such as do not feel interest enough to pay for it, or at least inform us that they intend to do so.

Do not send money in "registered letters." They are no safer than letters sent in the ordinary way. If you cannot obtain a postal order, send us a plainly directed letter, the ordinary way. Your 15c. paid for registering does not insure safety. Over a thousand registered letters were stolen last year, and the government makes no restitution in case of loss.

In making these discontinuances, after this date, if any subscriber is omitted who has paid, please inform us immediately and we will correct the mistake.

Delinquents may consider this the last notice.

THOMAS READ.

WE are glad to see that this brother has taken his pen once more. Formerly he was a Local Methodist preacher in this city. He embraced the Life views about twenty years since; which, of course, cost him his reputation with that sect. Subsequently he brought out "BIBLE VS. TRADITION," of which he was the real author; though the subject was first suggested by Adam Ellis, but the latter contributed but little more to the work than the name, and the number of times certain words, such as soul, spirit, etc., occurred in the original Scriptures. Br. Read put those in order, and added ten times the amount of matter contained in the manuscript of Ellis, re-writing the whole, so that the work ought of right to have been credited to Read giving Ellis credit for the matter he furnished.

Shortly after Br. Read finished that work, he removed to Paterson, N. J., where he resided a few years, and then took up his residence in Catskill, N. Y. Some ten years or more have passed since that time, and we have heard very little of him in any way. His age or other infirmities may have been the cause. He must be very near our own age, now 74. Whatever may have been the cause, we rejoice that he has favored our readers with the articles which have just appeared in the HERALD OF LIFE. Few men can write better than he, and we trust he may be strengthened to continue his labors thus renewed.

INHERENT IMMORTALITY: ITS ORIGIN AND BLASPHEMY.—Our promised article on the above subject we have commenced, but were unable to finish it in time for this week's issue. It will appear next week, probably.

The cold and stormy weather of the past week has not been favorable to the rapid improvement of our health; we have, however, labored to relieve BR. THORNE as much as possible, and have prepared a considerable portion of the matter for the compositor for this week's issue, though we have furnished but little editorial; most of our space is occupied by correspondents.

THE SCOTTISH THEOLOGY.

THE Scottish correspondent of the New York "Observer," alluding to a trial for heresy in the Presbyterian Church of Scotland, says:

> "It must be acknowledged that there is a perilously increasing number of persons who, in one form or another, are questioning the eternity of future punishment."

So Scotland is troubled on the subject of "future punishment." It is a heresy, truly, to deny the doctrine of "the eternity of future punishment;" but it is a far greater heresy that maintains the doctrine of inherent immortality, which drags after it the blasphemy of eternal torments as the future punishment of any creature the LORD God has made, and substitutes torments for the death God has affixed to the wilful reglect of His offered mercy. The future punishment revealed in the Bible is eternal, but it is death, and not life in torment. The latter idea is a corruption of the testimony of God and a foul reproach on His character, of which intelligent men ought to be ashamed, and which must and will, sooner or later, be blotted from the vocabulary of all honest men who love God and his truth better than they do Romish lies and blasphemy.

THE ANATHEMA.

IN these days of searching irrisistible judgments we are oft reminded how unstable and evanescent a thing is earthly power and pretension. Proud in the possession of a limited temporal power secured to him by the presence of foreign warriors, Pio Nono would fain have had the world believe that the Pontificate gloried in the power of ancient days. In a fatal hour the beast that had so long patiently and meekly borne his precious pontifical burden suddenly became unruly and, unseating his aged rider, unceremoniously shook from his feet the sacred dust of Rome, stopping not until, beyond the Alps, he ranged the sunny fields of France.

Pius, with eyes so weakened with gazing long into the intense darkness of the past that he is unable to distinguish the plainest objects in the bright light of the events of his own time, seems stupefied with wonder, and fancies that the wheel of time has turned backward apace, and himself as Hildebrand. He imagines himself a Gregory; that he has only to pronounce a terrible anathema to bring another imperial Henry in penitence to the door of the Vatican, there to await, in deepest humility and suffering, the tardy pleasure of his Holiness. Standing to-day a mere reminiscence of the past, and absolutely without power, except of that doubtful sort which the superstitiousness of papal devotees permits him to exercise, he gives vent to his rage in the following worse than ravings of a mad-man, pronounced against the king of Italy. We have heard the universal papal wail resounding throughout the western continent, and now, though it shock every fine feeling and impulse of our nature, let us listen to the feeble echo as it floats to us from the Vatican.

By the authority of the Omnipotent God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit; and of the sacred canons, and of the Immaculate Virgin Mary, Mother and nurse of our Saviour; and of the celestial virtues, angels, archangels, thrones, dominations, powers, cherubims and seraphims; and of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and of all the apostles and evangelists; and of all the holy innocents, who, in the presence of the Holy Lamb, are worthy of singing new hymns; and of the holy martyrs, holy confessors, holy virgins, and of all the saints, together with all the blest and elect of the Lord—we excommunicate and anathematize and separate him from the Holy Church of Omnipotent God; that he may be tormented by an eternal martyrdom together with Dathan and Abiram and all those who say to the Lord God, "Depart from us—we do not wish to walk in thy ways." And as fire is quenched by water, so let his light henceforth be extinguished!

May the Father who created man, curse him! May the Son who suffered for us, curse him! May the Holy Ghost who visited us in baptism, curse him! May the Holy Cross on which Christ (for our salvation and triumphant over his enemies) ascended, curse him! May the Holy Virgin Mary, Mother of God, curse him! May St. Michael, defender of holy souls, curse him! May the angels and archangels, principalities and powers and all the celestial cohorts curse him! May St. John the Precursor, St. John the Baptist, St. Peter, St. Paul, St Andrea, and all the other apostles of Christ together curse him! May the rest of his disciples and the poor evangelists (that with their word converted the whole world), and may the holy and wonderful army of martyrs and confessors (they by their sacrifice defended the All-powerful God) curse him!

May the choirs of holy virgins (who for the love of Christ despised the things of the world) condemn him! May the heavens, the earth and all holy things embraced therein condemn him!

May he be condemned in the house and in the field, in the open streets and in the by-ways, in the wood, in the water, and in the church!

May be he cursed in his birth and in his death; in his food and in his drink; in his fasting and intemperance; in his quiet moments and in his sleep; in his waking and in his passage on foot or seated in his repose or in his labor; in the excrements in the circulation of his blood! Be he cursed in all the facilities of his body! Be he cursed internally and externally! May he be cursed in his hairs! May he be cursed in his brain! Be cursed in the covering of his head and in his temples! May he be cursed in his forehead and in his ears! In his eye-brows and in his eyes! in his cheeks and in his nostrils! in his anterior and posterior teeth! be he cursed in his lips, and in his throat! be he cursed in his shoulders and in his pulses! in his arms, hands and fingers! May he be condemned in his mouth! In the breast, heart, and all the bowels of his body let him be condemned! In his veins, in his arteries, in his thighs, genitals, ankles, knees, legs, feet, and in his nails! May he be cursed in all the ligatures and joints of his members, from the head to the feet! May he have no health! May the Son of the living God in all the glory of His majesty curse him, and may Heaven, with all its powers, unite and rise against him to curse and condemn him! So be it.

We do not know to what extent the superstition of Victor Emanuel may cause him to be affected by this would-be terrible document, but there is really no ground for fear. The cursings of the Pope can be no more potent than his blessings, and should they take a turn such as many of his blessings have, King Victor will be one of the happiest men in all Italy, for as Pio Nono's blessings seem all to turn into cursings, his cursings may turn into blessings.

He blessed Francis II, King of Neples, and Garibaldi drove him from his throne, in 1848; he blessed Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, and Count Radetzky, in a battle fought at Novara, March 23, 1849, defeated and dethroned him. We do not know whether he blessed Maximilian or not but the short lived Emperor's ill fate leads us to suspect he did. He blessed Isabella, Queen of Spain, and also sent her the Golden Rose, and she was dethroned and sent into exile some two years since. We believe he blessed Louis Napoleon, and he has been most ingloriously defeated and overthrown. It is said, we presume truly, that he blessed the first Roman railroad, and the first train ran off the track; he blessed a convent of monks, and the convent tumbled down upon all that were in it. On the whole, therefore, we do not think that even so superstitious a man as we have reason for believing Victor Emanuel to be need fear this anathema. We had infinitely rather be blessed with the Pope's cursings, than cursed with his blessings. L. C. T.

FRANCE.

THERE has been fighting during the past week, but nothing of a serious character, compared with what has preceded it. We hear from time to time something of the suffering in Paris, but as the Parisian authorities have regarded it so palpably their interest to keep the Germans in ignorance as far as possible of the true state of affairs, little was suffered to be told. With flour so scarce that it is doled out to the people; with potatoes a franc each, and dog meat a dollar a pound; with weather of unusual severity, and fuel so scarce that many people are compelled to lie in bed to keep warm, it is difficult to imagine any thing but suffering on the part of the inhabitants of that doomed city.

Our last report, it will be remembered, left Jules Favre preparing to leave Paris with the purpose, it was presumed, of attending the Conference at London. It now transpires that his destination was Marseilles, and his object treating with the Prussian authorities. A dispatch from Marseilles states that at an interview between Count Bismarck and M. Regnier, the former said: "Gen. Bourbaki is caught between Gens. Von Werder and Manteuffel, and must shortly surrender. Paris will capitulate in a day or two, when 300,000 Germans will be released to subjugate France. I want a party to negotiate with. I cannot negotiate with the nation, Regnier suggested that it would be suicidal for any party in France to make peace. Bismarck angrily closed the interview. It is believed that negotiations for the capitulation of Paris have been opened."

Information from London, by cable, is to the effect that a dispatch from Versailles, dated Jan. 24, evening, states: "Jules Favre is now here with proposals for a capitulation. He proposes that the garrison shall leave Paris with all the honors of war, but this is quite inadmissible. The attack on St. Denis and the defeat of the 19th mainly led to the asking of terms. Gen. Trochu is ill, and Gen. Vinoy commands. Favre has seen Bismarck. . . . The French demands are by far too large."

The London "Times" suggests that if Favre refuses an unconditional surrender, and will not end the whole war on German terms, Bismarck, who has in his possession the full acceptance of those terms by the French Emperor and Empress, will threaten to restore Napoleon.

LATER.—PARIS FALLEN.

The following, under date of Jan. 29, from London, tells the long expected story of surrender:

"Gen. Walker of the British army telegraphs from Versailles, at noon to-day, to the Foreign Office, that an armistice of twenty-one days has been concluded on the following conditions: A Constituent Assembly is to be convoked, to meet immediately at Bordeaux. All the forts around Paris have surrendered to the Germans to-day. The military forces in Paris are to remain in the city as prisoners of war. All are to deliver up their arms, except the National Guards and one division of the regular army. Communication with Paris is to be restricted provisionally, but no obstacle is to be offered to supplying the city with food."

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

"A dispatch from Versailles announces that Bismarck signed, on Saturday, with M. Favre, the capitulation of all the Paris forts and an armistice of three weeks on land and sea; the Army of Paris to remain prisoners of war within the capital.

"The entire garrison of Paris, except the National Guard, surrender their arms. The armistice expires on the 19th of February, Paris to pay 200,000,000 francs.

"The Twelfth Saxon Corps at 10 o'clock this morning occupied Romainville, Noisy, Rosny, and Nogent; the Bavarians Charenton, Montrouge and Vanves, and the Silesian Corps D'Ivry and Bicetre.

"'The Times' on Saturday published the following dispatch:

"'VERSAILLES, Jan. 27.—An armistice has been agreed upon which is to extend immediately to the whole of France. There was great agitation in Paris last night. The beating of drums and shouts of the multitude within the walls were plainly heard.'

"It is stated in diplomatic circles that the negotiations for the capitulation of Paris would have been concluded earlier had not Bismarck insisted on the acceptance of conditions of peace.

"Berlin is rejoicing to-day over the news from Versailles. No confirmation of the reports of capitulation were received there last night, and it was only this morning that the announcement of the actual signing of the terms of surrender was received. The first official dispatch was read in the churches.

"At a meeting held at the Mansion House yesterday for the relief of non-combatants in and around Paris, the Lord Mayor received and read a note from Earl Granville, stating that Mr. Odo Russell had been instructed to ask Count Bismarck to designate the route by which convoys of provisions from England might be sent into Paris, and to order that they be not interrupted on the way."

Still later accounts reduce the amount levied upon Paris.

Such is the present military situation in France. It is not improbable that a strong revolutionary feeling, no less than other considerations, incited the government at Paris to take some decisive step. A few days since there were demonstrations of an alarming character, many being killed or wounded, but the outbreak was overcome.

A correspondent at Bordeaux gives an account of an interview with M. Gambetta, who spoke with bitterness of the policy which England has pursued with reference to France. "He said she had made a fatal mistake in allowing fear and selfishness to withold her interference. In allowing France to be dismembered and destroyed England would lose her only ally on the continent. She will virtually turn the balance of power over to Prussia, whose close secret alliance with Russia is unquestionable. No one with common sense can doubt that ten years hence will see Russia in Constantinople, and Prussia in Holland, Belgium and Trieste. The whole control of the old world will virtually be delivered to those powers. The Czar looks further eastward toward the English possessions in India."

Now that Paris has fallen and negotiations for peace are pending, there is much talk about the restoration of Napoleon. Bismarck is accused of conspiring to that end, but the latest advices on that point are to the effect that he denies having done so. It is pretty certain that there is very great activity at the present time among the Bonapartists; a constant hurrying to and fro of couriers between Chiselhurst, Wilhelmshohe, Versailles and Brussels. The next few days, therefore, will be a time of excitement in political circles as the past months have been in military circles. Had the Republic of France accepted the situation when the Dynasty was overthrown, the people would doubtless have been altogether loyal to that form of government. As it is there may, during the past three months, have been a reaction in favor of the Empire. Let us await events. L. C. T.

"GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD."

BY A. G. M.

THERE is a general agreement among the Christian churches, I believe, that the eternal misery to which it is supposed man became liable after the fall, was a powerful motive, if not the chief motive in sending Christ as the means of salvation. Most, if not all, who believe in eternal suffering will without hesitation avow their belief that such suffering was the primary cause of the gift of Christ. In other words, if man had not been liable to eternal suffering God would not have given Christ to save him. This is all very well if it can be shown that suffering ever produces love; if suffering does not produce love, then it cannot be a motive or reason why God gave his only begotten Son.

That suffering does not produce love would appear from two reasons:

First: Throughout the whole Bible there is not one single instance recorded where love resulted from the sight of suffering. Although suffering had ever been the lot of man till he ended his career in death, yet that suffering is never given as a reason for God's love. If God had loved man on account of man's suffering in this world or the world to come, it seems incredible that no hint of this fact should have been given in God's Word.

Therefore, since God has never informed us that human misery was either the cause or the occasion of his love, we seem justified in the conclusion that his love originated or existed in his own nature, or in some circumstances of human nature of which we are not informed.

This conclusion is strengthened when we consider that the effect which the sight of misery has upon God is distinctly revealed. Misery excites God's pity and compassion, not his love. "Then will the Lord be jealous and pity his people." This pity is the result of the sufferings of Israel. They were beloved for the father's sake long before he pitied or had compassion upon them. The pity was subsequent to the love, and hence could not have been the cause. "Ye have heard of the patience of Job and have seen the Lord, that the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy." Why very pitiful? Because Job had endured so great suffering. In the Gospel, too, how often are we told that Christ had compassion on the famishing multitude, the weary sufferer from disease, or the persecuted outcast? He ever loved us, but the palsied arm, the leprous skin, the tears of the mourners weeping for their dead, the desponding cries of those ready to perish, moved him with pity and compassion and he brought relief. His love extended to all; his pity to the suffering and needy.

Second: We learn from observation that the sight of suffering produces pity and compassion, never love. We often pity those things that we loathe and abhor. We feel for those animals that we are obliged to destroy; we ever have compassion upon them, and sometimes save their lives, but we do not love them. The judge pities the criminal, but he sends him to execution. Jesus wept over Jerusalem and exclaimed, "O that thou hadst known in this thy day what had been for thy good." He loved Jerusalem for herself; he pitied her for the suffering of her mighty overthrow.

Thus God in revelation, and God in nature agree that the sight of pain or suffering produces pity or compassion, and never love. Hence, if God was moved to give his Son by the sight of man's future misery, it is not true that God so loved the world, but that he so pitied the world that he gave his only begotten Son.

Further: If eternal misery was the portion of any class of men, God must have felt compassion for them. He pitied the sufferings of Job, he saw the afflictions of his people in Egypt, and came down to deliver them. "His soul was grieved for their misery," and he sent Japheth to deliver them. And if God so pity misery here, is it not beyond belief that he can behold in the future an eternity of misery ever increasing, and never give one expression of his pity? Man may change, his heart may melt in sympathy, or be hardened against every feeling of compassion, but God is forever the same; and how can it be explained that he should so pity man's present sufferings, and utter no word of compassion for that boundless ocean of woe beyond the present life? How can it be explained that God's love rather than his pity moved him to offer man eternal life? Why did he waste his pity upon the ills that must cease when man returned to the dust, and give no answering word of pity to that groan of immortal anguish, echoing, wailing, agonizing through the eternal ages? Why did God use terms so weak, so fearfully without meaning as death, destroy, perish, to express unending woe? To these questions there is but one answer: no such unending woe exists.

By what principle of common sense or revealed truth, can we explain the fact that Christ could weep over Jerusalem, in view of her destruction, while he knew that ere that destruction should be consummated hundreds of millions of human creatures should sink writhing in eternal despair? Was there no tear for all these millions in woe? Could Jesus be moved by no sorrows but the sorrows of this life? It cannot be. Our perceptions of the future may be dimmed, but he saw all, saw the future as if present, and how like mockery it seems to weep over the fall of Jerusalem, while many of the very people before him would be enduring unspeakable anguish before Jerusalem should be destroyed.

The fact that pity was not a motive in giving Christ can only be accounted for upon the supposition that there are no eternal torments to excite that pity. Assuming eternal suffering as the penalty of sin, we should expect the pity of God as a principal motive in giving Christ; but when we find that love alone was the motive, we can only infer that the cause for pity does not exist. Nor is there cause. Man dies, his sufferings cease, and there is no need for pity though God is "full of compassion." It is all a mistake. God was not tortured into giving his only Son by beholding the misery of man. When shall we all learn that not our misery, but God's love gave us a Redeemer?

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan., 1871.

THE PRESENT AND FUTURE LIFE.

THE following extract from Archbishop Whately's Annotations on Bacon's Essay "On Death," appeared some time ago in the HERALD OF LIFE, in a chapter from Gail Hamilton's Summer Rest, entitled "Larvæ Lessons." It then appeared without comment, and as it presents from nature such a beautiful illustration of No Life out of Christ, I take the trouble of transcribing it, both for the sake of making a few comments, and for the information of the readers who may never have seen it:

"There is a remarkable phenomenon connected with insect life, which has often occurred to my mind, while meditating on the subject of preparedness for a future state, as presenting a curious analogy.

"Most persons know that every butterfly (the Greek name for which, it is remarkable, is the same that signifies also the soul—Psyche) comes from a grub or caterpillar; in the language of naturalists called a larva. the last name (which signifies literally a mask) was introduced by Linnæus, because the caterpillar is a kind of outward covering, or disguise, of the future butterfly within. For it has been ascertained by curious microscopic examination that a distinct butterfly, only undeveloped and not full-grown, is contained within the body of the caterpillar; that this latter has its own organs of digestion, respiration, etc., suitable to its larva life, quite distinct from, and independent of, the future butterfly which it incloses. When the proper period arrives, and the life of the insect, in this its first stage, is to close, it becomes what is called a pupa, inclosed in a chrysalis or cocoon (often composed of silk; as is that of the silk-worm which supplies us that important article), and lies torpid for a time within this natural coffin, from which it issues at the proper time as a perfect butterfly.

"But sometimes this process is marred. There is a numerous tribe of insects well known to naturalists, called Ichneumon flies, which in their larva state are parasitical, that is, inhabit and feed on other larvæ. The Ichneumon fly, being provided with a long sharp sting, which is in fact an ovipositor (egg-layer), pierces with this the body of a caterpillar in several places, and deposits her eggs, which are there hatched and feed as grubs (larvæ) on the inward parts of their victim. A most wonderful circumstance connected with this process is that a caterpillar which has been thus attacked goes on feeding, and apparently thriving quite as well, during the whole of its larva-life as those that have escaped. For, by a wonderful provision of instinct, the ichneumon-grubs within do not injure any of the organs of the larva, but feed only on the future butterfly inclosed within it. And consequently it is hardly possible to distinguish a caterpillar which has these enemies within it from those that are untouched. But when the period arrives for the close of the larva-life, the difference appears. You may often observe the common cabbage-caterpillars retiring, to undergo their change, into some sheltered spot, such as the walls of a summer house; and some of them—those that have escaped the parasites—assuming the pupa state from which they emerge butterflies. Of the unfortunate caterpillar that has been preyed upon, nothing remains but an empty skin. The hidden butterfly has been secretly consumed.

"Now is there not something analogous to this wonderful phenomenon, in the condition of some of our race? May not a man have a sort of secret enemy within his own bosom, destroying his soul—psyche—though without interfering with his well-being during the present stage of his existence; and whose presence may never be detected till the time arrives when the last great change shall take place."

REMARKS ON THE FOREGOING.

Nature, probably, does not furnish a more striking analogy than this to man's present and future condition. It is not perfect, to be sure, still it affords a beautiful illustration. From Archbishop Whately's stand-point, he cannot get the full force of it, as is evident from his comment. To those who believe there is no future life to the wicked, it has a full rounded meaning.

The larva-state represents the state of mortal existence; man is the caterpillar; the psyche is the divine principle within, which in time shall become the glorious resurrection body; the parasite with the sting is sin; the pupa-state with the psyche untouched by the sting of the parasite, will lie dormant for a time, but will eventually emerge into the glorious psyche-life; while those who have been stung by the parasite, though they may thrive as well during this present state, will have nothing left but an empty skin, a mortal body with no life principle, and which consequently can never see life.

W. H. H. McAllister.

St. Albans, Vt., Jan., 1871.

Letters and Extracts.

From Abby A. Perry.

Br. Storrs: I am grateful that the reign of Christ over the "mortal nations," is being agitated considerably for some time past, and I hope none will be offended at "the word." Let us take heed to the "sure word of prophecy," brethren and sisters, "as unto a light shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts."

Is Christ reigning on David's throne now, over the house of Israel? We know he is not, for "David is not ascended into the heavens." So Peter stated on the day of Pentecost. Does any one ask, "Will some one show where in the Scriptures Jesus is to take the throne of David at his second coming, and not at his first?" I can give a "Thus saith the Lord," if that will avail to prove the truth on this subject.

Turn to Jer. xxxiii. 14: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the throne of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David, and He shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our righteousness." "For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of Israel." I should have referred all others in difficulty on this subject to Jer. xxx. Let them begin there, one and all, and read carefully and prayerfully to the end of the 33d chapter, and they will be convinced of an age in the future, when Jehovah will bring the literal seed of Abraham from their captivity back to their land, "and they shall serve the Lord, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them." Now according to the chronology of my Bible, David had been left dead and buried many years when this prophecy was written, so David must be raised from the dead to fulfil this prophecy, or else it has reference to the reign of David's son, Jesus Christ. Will any one tell me when this glorious prophecy had its fulfilment?

Jeremiah is not alone in predicting this, we must know, if we will read and consider what all the prophets have spoken on this subject. If the wise ones will not see and proclaim the word fearlessly, God will raise up some foolish ones, like me, who will. I stood up a few evenings ago in defence of the truth of the non-immortality of man, against a champion of Methodism, who came out to defy those who dared to believe there was no immortal soul in man. Two of us, with the "sword of the Spirit," put him to shame, by asking him questions that he could not answer.

The words of the prophet Isaiah came forcibly to my mind, viz., "Wherefore the Lord said, forasmuch as this people draweth near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear of me is taught by the precepts of men; Therefore I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder, for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." This word is true of every nation, in every age of this world, concerning those who do not heed the word of Jehovah, spoken by his prophets.

May the Lord give us all wisdom to discern between truth and error, on all Bible doctrines, is my daily prayer, that we may be perfect saints, and edify the body of Christ, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." "Not tossed to and fro, by every wind of doctrine; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger be put away. . . . And be ye kind, tender-hearted one to the other, forgiving one another, as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

May the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob bless you, Brn. Storrs and Thorne, with all needed wisdom and grace to rightly divide the word of Life and Truth, and give "to every one a portion of meat in due season."

Yours, in hope of Life in the kingdom.

Scotland, Conn., Jan. 15, 1871.

From George E. Lee.

Br. Storrs: Being a lover of God's truth, I feel it my duty to write a few lines for your most valuable paper, the Herald. I am looking for the glorious appearing of our blessed Lord, who is about to come to reward his people. Then the faithful ones who have overcome shall be made immortal, and the sleeping saints shall arise from their dusty beds to die no more. I do rejoice that a way was ever provided by which sinful, mortal man might have hope of eternal life; and I am ever desirous to learn more of the things pertaining to my spiritual welfare. I have become fully assured, by the reading of God's blessed word, that there can be no hope of a future life to the dead who are out of Christ; and, trusting in his grace, I will not fear to stand boldly up for the truth. The doctrine of "No Life out of Christ," appears to stir up a spirit of contention and strife among its opposers; yet all the bitter words I hear do not in the least cause me to think I am not in possession of the truth, for I am aware that truth has always met with opposition, while error is easily received by many.

I would ever, in compliance with Paul's injunction, "let brotherly love continue" toward all, no matter how much they may differ with me; and it is my constant desire to be filled with the Spirit of Christ, for I read that "if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Rom. viii. 9. This, it seems to me, should be our first and greatest desire, and then we shall, with gentleness and meekness, receive the engrafted word.

Believing with Paul, "all things which are written in the law and in the prophets," they have failed to teach me that those who are "as though they had not been," the dead who are not "in Christ," have any promise of a future resurrection to life. On the contrary, it teaches me that "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise."—Isa. xxvi. 14. And it seems to me that if what Paul has said, (1 Cor. xv. 52), "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," be true, if a wicked dead man is raised to life at all, he must be "in Christ;" and if "in Christ," he is one of the "children of the resurrection," (which they that are accounted worthy to obtain . . . the resurrection from the dead, are,) and "can neither die any more." But this cannot be, as it is very evident that a wicked man is not "in Christ."

And further, all that are able to escape from under the penalty of God's law for disobedience to his commands, which penalty is death, can shout, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Now if there is really more than one death, where can the victory be? Do not the wicked get the victory as well as the righteous, if they arise to life, and even live but one moment of time? Are they not delivered from the bondage or "power of death?" "The wages of sin is death," or extinction of life; and not until the sinner is actually dead does he suffer the full penalty of the law. We are to "give thanks to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." How could saint or sinner ever have any hope of life when once dead, if it were not for the great Life-giver? It seems to me that the life which our Saviour has obtained for us through his death is a promised blessing, attainable only through faith in him, and is to be a deliverance from the bondage of corruption to a life of immortality, whereby we are brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God; which could not be if some were to be raised in a state of corruptibility. Unless he that is dead, when the Master shall come, has his name written in the "Lamb's book of life," the wrath of God will "abide on him," which is death.—John iii. 36. So that he must of necessity "remain in the congregation of the dead," (Prov. xxi. 16,) and "shall not see life."

These few thoughts I present, not with a controversial spirit, but that the reader may know that I am willing, at all times, to "give a reason of the hope" that is within me; and I would always endeavor, when talking or writing upon subjects of which there may be differences of opinion, to heed the following advice, which some one has wisely suggested: "Condemn no man for not thinking as you think. Let every man use his own judgment, since every man must be accountable for himself. If you cannot reason or persuade a man into the truth, never attempt to force him into it. If love will not compel him to come, leave him to God."

In hope of eternal life.

Brimfield, Mass., Jan. 16, 1871.

From W. H. Whitman.

Br. Storrs: We wish to say a few words on the question of future age. We love to read from those who differ with us on this question; for we wish to hear all that can be said on it. But we all should write in the spirit of love. We have long believed, that Jesus is heir to the throne of David. The angel said to Mary, "the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob" (the twelve tribes) "forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke i. 33. Peter saith, God raised up Christ to sit on David's throne, Acts ii. 30. This throne is also called the "throne of his glory." And when Jesus sits in the throne of his glory—or David's throne, then the twelve Apostles shall sit upon twelve thrones judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel.—Matt. xix. 28. And to show that this judging, or ruling is in the future, we only have to turn to Matt. xxv. 31. When the Son of Man comes in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Jesus is now upon his Father's throne in the heavens; but the time will come, when he will resign his Father's throne, and be seated upon his own throne, the throne of his glory—or David's throne. We understand that Jesus will reign in the future age forever, (not a thousand years, and then cease, as a good many teach) and his reign will never end; for "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end," say the prophets, Isa. ix. 7. Dan. vii. 14.

What are the promises made to the followers of Jesus? "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel."—Luke xxii. 29, 30. "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him."—2 Tim. ii. 12. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne," saith Jesus.—Rev. iii. 21. "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." The saints are to be kings and priests unto God, and shall reign on the earth. But Jesus will be King of kings, and Lord of lords. The saints will have rule over two, five, or ten cities according to ability. Matt. xxv. 15, 23. Luke xix. 17, 19. But who will they reign over? is a question often asked by our brethren. We answer, a remnant of Israel, after the rebels are purged out; and a left of the nation. We then quote Ezk. xx. 33 to 38, Zech. xiv. 16, with many other texts, to prove it.

In the winter of 1854 and '55, after reading the Bible twice, we formed the above conclusions. We have often been asked the question, who did you learn that from? We can answer all such, that we learned it from the Bible, and it will take plain testimony to change us. Yet we may be wrong, for we are all liable to err, and so we desire to hear all that can be said on the opposite side.

Galesburg, Ill., 1870.

From L. W. Bragg.

Br. Storrs: We hope this is the year of eternal deliverance to God's little ones, who by faith are found to be overcomers of the world, the flesh and the devil. My heart says praise the Lord for the abundant grace, and the gift of righteousness that he alone can bestow upon weak worms like us. Never was my courage in the Lord better than now. The joys of his salvation are certainly deepening, and growing more and more precious as we near the eternal, boundless ocean of bliss and unfading glories which are very soon to burst in upon our immortal vision. Then we shall really see as we are seen, and know as we are known, and enjoy the society of Jesus and angels forever. Till then I shall pray, "let thy kingdom come, and let thy will be done upon earth as it is done in heaven."

For a few months past we have had a sweet foretaste of the home of the saints in glory, as we have often met together here in Providence to comfort one another with the words of inspiration, which assure us that Jesus is soon coming to be glorified in his saints, and admired of all who believe in that day. We still find the Lord to be the hope of his people, and a strong hold of the children of Israel; and we have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold of the hope set before us in the gospel, which is truly a good hope through grace.

Dear saints, let us never be disheartened, for all things (not a part) work together for our good in the Lord. So we may be strengthened by our trials, and may count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations, for it is better for us in the end than fine gold tried in the fire. We read in James, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life, which the Lord has promised to them that love him." This love to the Lord weans us from the love of the world, and fits us for translation into glory. Pray for us, that our faith may grow exceedingly in the Lord day by day.

Providence, R. I., 1871.

From Eld. W. S. Campbell,
in Philadelphia.

Br. Thorne: I meet with the brethren and fellow laborers, "pilgrims and sojourners," with interest and much satisfaction, as possessing a common expectation of the kingdom, and immortality at its establishment.

I met, the next day after my arrival, Br. Jacob Grim, who called for me, being happy that I was able to ride, as the day was exceedingly fine—and took me in his carriage for two hours, through some of the most beautiful avenues in the suburbs of the city, and to Germantown, all within the city limits in fact.

This was very refreshing and heart-inspiring to me. But the greatest enjoyment consisted in the free and brotherly conversation which we had upon the state of the cause, its necessities, the condition of things in the world, especially in Europe, and the prospect of the kingdom. Br. Grim is impressed with the conviction that the overwhelming events of the time, in the old countries, indicate beyond dispute, the nearness of the Second Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We also rejoiced together in the restoration of our beloved editor, Br. Storrs, to health and further effort in the life cause; he having just received a letter from Br. Storrs, in his own hand, (the first he had written with his new strength). At dinner with Br. Grim, Sunday last, in company with Br. Burbank, these themes were renewed with great comfort and gratification to my mind.

The day following, I went to the funeral of our dear Sister Mary Clegg—wife of Henry Clegg—717 Passyunk Road.

Sister Clegg was a woman of faith, peace, hope in Christ, love of God and patience. Br. Clegg is a man who, through all the trial of his faith, stands firm for the truth and Christ. At the funeral, which was held at St. Paul's church vestry, (Methodist) Br. Burbank gave a discourse that awakened emotion in the hearts of all the believers present, instructing us in the true exhortation of the gospel. He spoke to the point; and many Methodists, probably, listened to what they had not heard before. I met here Br. Stuart and Ashman; also Br. Faxon, (Pastor of St. Paul's). It was an occasion of profit. Br. Stuart and myself availed ourselves gladly of the invitation to speak after Br. B.'s discourse.

On Sunday, I very earnestly started for the meeting at Ninth and Spring-Garden streets, where Br. B. was to preach. I went alone in a crowded horse-car, but without harm, a long ride; thence I walked four "squares" and then up the sta'r-case into a prayer meeting that was well agoing. I was glad to be there; and, by invitation, began at once to speak. It was a good and gracious hour.

After listening to Br. Burbank, who gave a discourse that was good for the soul, I spoke again on the nearness of the flock to the end of the pilgrimage, and the fact that the great adversary of the church of God is cast down,—which was food in time. Receiving the sympathy of the brethren, and the congratulation of friends, on my returning strength for the work. I was cordially invited to speak unto the people, these same things on the next Lord's day, which thing I attempted, by Divine aid, and found a large audience awaiting me (in a prayer meeting) when I limped into the hall, Jan. 22, to whom after the opening of the preaching sermon, I enlarged upon the teachings of the present state of Rome and France. The brethren were of different positions on some points of doctrine; but here there could be an agreement. Our preaching was often the old Advent positions. We showed that the coming of the Lord is at the door. We felt, and so did the brethren, a great interest in the subject. We thought, on all hands, we would wake up. The old firm believers were there. The young converts were there. There were present six preachers beside myself, and it was very plain that the Lord was among us by his Spirit. It was a season of revival in interest of faith to many hearts. May God make it a blessing, especially in the direction of the union of the brethren in this city, and of waiting for the glory of the Lord.

After very many and very hearty greetings, together with aid, "after a godly sort," I left the place of public worship, (having spoken enough for one day) and, by car, repaired to the house of Br. Grim to enjoy his hospitality and friendly conversation upon Bible topics, also, an interview with Br. Burbank.

It is good to meet with the tried brethren, to feel free, to lay aside, as fully as may be, "the bond of difference," and unite in the spirit of looking for the light of the great day.

I am securing a rapid improvement of my limbs, by continuing the baths which have proved so beneficial heretofore, and the application of electricity, by Dr. Bartholemew of this city.

Yours, fraternally.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 23, 1871.

From Mrs. E. G. Farmer.

Dear Editors: It is with heartfelt thankfulness and gratitude to God that I read of the improved health of our Br. Storrs. I know that many, very many prayers have been offered up for him. It seems as though our heavenly Father had more work for him to do. I do thank the Lord for raising up such men to publish the glad tidings of the kingdom. There are but few of like faith in Grand Rapids. We have no preaching except the Bible, the Herald, and a few other books; and when I want more, I read Br. Storrs' Six Sermons. With them and my Bible I get meat in due season. I thank the Lord of life and glory that he ever opened my eyes to see this blessed doctrine of no Life out of Christ, nor short of the resurrection of the just. We read, the wicked shall remain in the congregation of the dead—be as though they were not; for God so loved us that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life, and enter in through the gates into the city.

I am striving with the help of the Lord to have my lamp trimmed and burning, so that when Jesus our master comes, I may be ready to enter in, and have some small place in his kingdom. The signs of the times indicate the speedy return of our Saviour.

I do not feel as though I could do without the Herald. I hail it with joy. Each week it comes filled with so much food, it is like water to a thirsty soul. May God prosper both of its editors, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, waiting for the Life-giver to come.

> Though unseen, I love the Saviour.
> He hath brought salvation near, and
> Manifests his pardoning favor;
> And when Jesus doth appear
> Soul and body shall
> His glorious image bear.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 15, 1871.

From Samuel Morgan.

Br. Storrs: After so long a time, I write a few lines for the Herald of Life. How much its welcome and weekly visits do cheer my heart and mind. I have for some time watched closely for the arrival of the Herald, with both an anxious heart and mind through which I might hear how Br. Storrs is. I have been made to feel, at times, sad and fearful that he would fall asleep; and yet like Martha, in regard to her brother, I knew, according to our Lord's promise, that he would raise him up at the last day; and yet my sincere prayer to God in the Saviour's name was, not mine, O God, but thy will be done, inasmuch as we know that God worketh all things together for good unto them that love him; but I see in the issue of Jan. 4, that the prospect of the Elder Br.'s health is somewhat favorable, and I sincerely believe, of a truth, that our God doth hear the prayers of his children. Then, dear brethren and sisters, let us continue in the faith once delivered unto us, as children who fear their Father.

Seeing that these things are to be dissolved, what manner of children ought we to be, in all godliness and holy conversation, looking for and hastening unto the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I hope that the brothers and sisters will pray for me, for I feel that I need their prayers much. I have no friends here to sympathize with me in the Life views; but thanks be to God, I intend to stand, by his assistance, though the whole world be against me. The people here do not like my views at all; they call me soul-sleeper, and a heretic, and anti-Christ, and all of those names; but I do dearly love to take my Bible and meet them face to face, and see whether or no my doctrine, as they call it, is scripture or not. One sinner said to me, at one time, "Morgan, if I were in your place I would go to preaching, I believe that you would make a better preacher than half of the ministers we have now." I replied, "I may get round to that by and by." I see that they are not able to meet the Life views face to face. I do get hold on them now and then; they don't like me at all. I shall, by the help of God, use the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, he being our helper. Pray for me brethren and sisters, that when our Lord doth come, whom I love, I may be found of him in peace, spotless and stainless of this sinful world. May God bless and sanctify us all through his truth; for his word is truth: even so, Amen.

Yours, striving to obtain eternal life.

North Lawrence, Kansas, Jan. 18, 1871.

From F. M. Shockey.

To the Faithful: Dear Brethren: In the midst of superstition and gross error, we have great reason to rejoice, knowing that in the last days perilous times will come; men shall be fierce, despisers of those that are good, and false accusers, etc. Some of these things I witnessed a few weeks past, at a four day's debate, that took place between one of our brethren and a Campbelite. Yes, fierce despisers, the Apostle says. O how true was this scripture fulfilled with him and his brother. He took no stock in the earth inheritance, that Matt. v. 5, speaks of; nor in the language of David, Psa. xxxvii; these all need a spiritual interpretation before he and his brethren can understand it.

How few people there are who will receive the truth of the Bible. But it is no marvel, when we see all religionists join hands on the immortal soul dogma, and all their preachers talk as the serpent did when he said, God knows that you won't die. Then we are forced to say, they preach like the serpent.

But, dear brethren, let us not sleep as do others, but understanding the will of the Lord,

> And seize on the truth where'er 'tis found,
> In Christian lands, or on heathen ground,
> Among your friends, among your foes,
> The plant divine where 'er it grows.

Yours, in hope of the kingdom.

Waveland, Ind., Jan. 19, 1871.

Mrs. M. F. Tunnell, Folsom, Cal., writes: By the merest accident, some of your tracts have fallen in our midst, and are causing the people in this section to "Search the Scriptures to see whether these things are so." A lady sent them to us, saying, she was well satisfied with her belief and had no time to read them.

We "Christians"—taking the Bible alone as our rule of faith and practice, thought we must be right, as we had no human creed for our guide, consequently the tracts lay unread, till when in thoughtful mood our eyes rested on the picture of the Bible with rays of light emanating from it. Then we saw the words, "The Bible our Creed," which was enough to cause us to think they were published by some member of the "Christian church." We found on reading that we did not understand our Divine guide.

Enclosed please find sixty-three cents, for which you will send one each of the list enclosed. When these come I intend to send for more, for distribution.

Daniel Miller, Wampum, Wis., writes: Some people say that death is no punishment for sin, for all have to die. I think those who say this, and suppose it is no punishment to be blotted out of existence—as the wicked will be—and hold that the punishment is eternal torture, know but little of either the love or justice of God. The words of God are plainly death to the rejectors of His offered mercy in Jesus. "The wages of sin is death," is the voice of inspiration from Genesis to Revelation. To seek immortality in and through the Son of God is the only way to escape death eternal. So, brethren and sisters, I ask all your prayers that I may hold out in the way of life, and keep the gospel hope; and may we all meet in the day of the Lord to inherit the earth that is promised to the saints.

Notice.

Br. Storrs: Having been appointed Secretary of the Church in W. Meriden (vice Whitehead, resigned,) I would respectfully request that you give proper notice through the Herald of Life, as all business communications should be addressed to me.

Your Br., in Christ,

Address, S. D. Bingham, West Meriden, Conn., Box 4.

Appointments.

Meriden, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 5.

Middletown, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 12.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Feb. 19.

Providence, R. I., (Richmond Hall), Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

Concord, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

Manchester, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

Wm. Stuart.

Elder Geo. W. Brown, of Orrington, Me., will hold a series of meetings in the Advent Church, in Eatontown, N. J., commencing Wednesday evening, Feb. 8, and holding over the following Sunday.

S. W. Bishop.

Providence, R. I., Sunday, Jan. 29.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Feb. 5.

Springfield, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 19.

Geo. W. Brown.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Feb. 12.

W. S. Campbell.

Business Department

Cash Receipts.

One dollar each from—Mrs. E. C. Bennett, Martin E. Bozarth, F. M. Shockey, Daniel Miller, Mrs. S. N. Colby, Edward Lee, Henry Hutchins, Mrs. T. P. Anderson, Joseph Thomas.

Two dollars each from—Mrs. J. Wald, E. G. Hoagland, T. H. Landon, O. D. Brown, Daniel Clow, Benjamin Turpening, Hiram Deown, R. S. Mills. The person you mention has paid nothing on vol. viii. Daniel Putnam.

Various sums—John Pell, $3 50; H. G. Armstrong, $10; John Kemp, $50 on pledge; Lizzie P. Bush, 50 cents; Nelson Cornwell, 63 cents.

Parcels sent since last issue.

F. M. Shockey, Mrs. M. F. Tunnell, Daniel Miller, H. R. Perine, Walter Ferguson, H. A. Arnold, Chas. S. Miles, Edward Terford (book and tracts), R. M. Smith.

THE SPIRIT MESSAGE.

Ephesus:
Write! to my waiting Bride,
To the faithful watchers write,
Thy labor in hope, thy patience tried
Are precious in my sight.
Firmly contend for the victory,
And press for the golden prize:
I will give thee to eat of the healing tree,
In the midst of Paradise.

Smyrna:
Write! from the first and last,
The dead, yet living One;
I know of thy fiery trials past,
And the works that thou hast done.
Fear not! thou art rich, though passing poor,
And thy grief shall thy glory be;
Be strong! for my promise standeth sure,
There's a crown of life for thee.

Ye conquering champions hear!
List what the Spirit saith;
Rooted in me, ye may not fear
The stroke of the second death.

Pergamos:
Write! Saith the victor Chief,
With the sharp two-edged sword;
Sweet are thy tears, there is joy in thy grief,
While thou holdest fast my word.
Thou overcoming, heroic one,
The hidden bread I will give to thee;
And graven deep in the pure white stone,
Shall thy name a sure memorial be.

Thyatira:
Write! saith the living Son above,
With the glittering feet and the flaming eye,
I know of thy faith, thy toil, thy love,
Brightening thy path, as the noonday sky.
I will give to my steadfast warrior band
To rule o'er the nations, near and far,
When the earth shall bloom as Messiah's land;
And I'll deck their brows with the morning Star.

Sardis:
Write! saith He of the starry hand,
Who the spirit hath of the Lord Most High,
Watch! 'tis the King of King's command,
And revive the conflict ready to die.
My own I will clothe in vesture white,
In the raiment pure of righteousness;
To my Father high, to His angels bright,
The names of the ransomed I'll confess.

Philadelphia:
Write ye the words of the Holy, the True,
With David's key, I will show the way;
I will open a door to the constant few,
And guide their feet to perpetual day,
Like pillars my trusting host shall stand
To grace my Father's temple fair.
I'll inscribe with my own eternal hand
The name of God, and my new name there.

Laodicea:
Write! saith the great Amen, unseen,
From whom creation's glories sprung,
With gold, and garments pure and clean
I will set thee my precious gems among.
Beloved, yet chastened, I knock for thee;
Arise; invite thy Master in,
The bread of heaven thy fare shall be,
And my blood shall wash away thy sin.

Ye host, redeemed from death and hell,
Hear ye the Spirit messenger.
Ye have nobly fought, ye have battled well,
Ye shall sit on my throne, in my kingdom fair,
Ever with joyous tongues to tell
Of the grace that brought thee safely there,

T. W. W., Cincinnati.

THE SECOND DEATH.

BY ABEL LARKIN.

How shall we understand it? Many believe that the second death, mentioned in Rev. xx. 6, 15, teaches the resurrection of the wicked, and their extermination as its true meaning, in spite of all constructions that have or can be put on the passage, and say that no one can be subject to the second death unless he has been raised from the first death.

Now as we believe this to be an anti-christian doctrine, and the subject truly important, we should, one and all, give what light we can on the subject. I have read Br. Simond's articles on the punishment of the wicked with much interest and approval. But it seems to me that when he comes to the second death his light goes out too soon. But in order to get a clear understanding, I can do no better than to give a lengthy quotation from his last article of Dec. 7, 1870. He says:

"Now suppose we were to ask the Revelator what he means by the 'second death,' and he should answer in this way, 'Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.' Would you understand that it means to die a second time? Did death and hell die a second time? Had they ever been raised from the dead? Had they ever been alive? Did any one die at all in this transaction? Then the second death of this book does not mean to die a second time. To die a second time is a second death, but it is not the second death of this book. Again: The living wicked shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

"Rev. xx. 14. What does the second death mean here? To have their part in the lake of fire. This is the second death. It is the same whether applied to death and hell, or to the living wicked. In neither case does it mean to die a second time. If to cast death and hell into the lake of fire is the second death, then to cast the beast, the false prophet, the devil, the wicked dead, and the living wicked into the lake of fire must also be the second death, for this same thing is affirmed of them all. The beast and the false prophet were both cast alive into the lake of fire and brimstone. The devil was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. The wicked dead, whose names were not found written in the book of life, were cast into the lake of fire, and the living wicked had their part in the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death. In this list of names, that which is called the second death is affirmed of them all. Then all of them were part of the second death, it had equal power over them all. If, as is claimed, no one can be hurt of the second death unless he has died once, and has been raised from the dead, then the beast, the false prophet, the devil, death and hell, and the living wicked must all have died once, and have been raised from the dead, for they were all cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death."

Now this view may pass as genuine with those who give it only a superficial thought. But the prophetic thinker will soon wish to inquire, why the Revelator should give or call as the name of the lake of fire and brimstone, "the second death?" If there is no more object in view than to give this lake a name, why not call it the first death? or the third death? the fifth, or the tenth death?

But where is the propriety of attaching a name or phrase to it of any kind, which this view appears only to require? If there is none, is it not a stumbling block to inquiry, or at least, does it not prove a lack of true and genuine solution; such as the subject requires to understand the Revelator? That all those whose names belong to the above list, have their part in the lake of fire and brimstone of course is not denied. This is not the question. The question is, did they all have their part in the lake of fire at one and the same time? No.

Then a line of demarkation is essential to distinguish the two transactions or punishments; the first just before the beginning of the thousand years reign, and the other after it, when satan is loosed out of his prison, and shall deceive the nations, and gather together Gog and Magog; and they compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; when the fire and brimstone of this lake from God devoured them; where it had, one thousand years before, the beast and false prophet at the battle of Armageddon; and which is called the second death to distinguish it from the first, when satan was bound, but not destroyed. It is this special weapon, this fire and brimstone, in the hand of Providence by which the enemies of God are twice destroyed. It is here, and only here, that we find the great utility of this phrase; and all other constructions involve perplexities, and stagnation of thought, and support the creeds of men. But it is not necessary to suppose that this weapon, i. e., the lake of fire and brimstone, has an existence, only as it is used as a weapon of destruction. Should I say that two men were killed by lightning, one in 1820 and the other in 1870, no one would suppose that the same flash that killed the first continued to exist until it killed the other. The same elementary fountain that gave one could give the other. So with the lake of fire; God can call it forth at any time as a universal lake of destruction, similar to the one that destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah.—Gen. xix. 24.

But, says one, where is the proof that the first death implied by the second is a similar destruction? The binding of satan is simply the dashing to pieces all opposing nationalities, or opposition. See Psa. ii.: "The kings of the earth set themselves against the Lord and his anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder." These (the ten horns) shall make war on the Lamb, Rev. xvii.; also Dan. xi. 21–45; vii. 25; Ezek. xxxviii. "And then shall that wicked be revealed (the man of sin), whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."—2 Thess. ii. 8. "And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his hands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone."—Ezek. "And the day that cometh shall burn them up. And they (the stubble) shall be ashes under the soles of your feet."—Mal. iv. "Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and the inhabitants burned, and few men left."—Isa. xxiv.; Jer. xxv. 33.

MOUNT STERLING, ILL., Jan. 15, 1871.

THIEF ON THE CROSS.

BY WILLIAM WOOD.

"And Jesus said unto him, . . . to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke xxiii. 43.

THIS text is generally offered by our opposing friends as one of the greatest and very best to prove that mankind are possessors of inherent immortality. The thief upon the cross has, by the larger portion of the so-called evangelical church been assumed, in the most solemn manner, to have been with our Saviour, on the day of his crucifixion, after his decease, as a rational, thinking, conscious spirit or being. "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." The word paradise is of Persian origin, signifying a beautiful garden, or garden of delights, and the various interpretations given of our text is somewhat amusing.

First: It is believed by many to be a fabrication, not being found in the earlier manuscripts, those of the third and fourth centuries.

Second: It is by others received as genuine, but wrong in the punctuation. The comma should have been placed after to-day, not after thee, making the passage to read something like this, Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt at some time yet future be with me in paradise, or when I come into my kingdom.

Third: Some believe that as paradise is properly a garden, the thief being buried there, as also our Saviour on the same day, proves a correct exposition of our text, "to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," i. e., garden.

Fourth: Others teach (and this will be the class I shall more particularly address), that the text is genuine, and its meaning is that the thief was virtually with Christ, the same day, immediately after his decease, in paradise, the place and state of celestial blessedness, as a conscious, disembodied spirit, thus proving distinctly, as is supposed, but without authority, the immortality of the soul.

I am of the opinion that the text is an interpolation, inserted by some officious transcribers. If it is received, I should dissent from the process of punctuation, also the burial in the garden, it savors too much of a material called india-rubber, whose enlarging qualities are very remarkable. To be serious, we will now examine, assuming it to be genuine, the nature of our text. Whoever were the authors, it is evident their belief was predicated on the testimony of some of the early fathers of the church, and is now strenuously adhered to by almost all Christendom, that the kingdom of God, or heaven, was established at the commencement of the present dispensation. It was first proclaimed by John the forerunner, and subsequently by our Lord in person. For instance: "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matt. iii. 10. Again: "Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison he departed into Galilee . . . From that time he began to preach, and to say, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matt. iv. 12, 17. The kingdom of God is generally taught to be synonymous with the kingdom of heaven. It is the opposing and ultimately will be the prevailing power to overthrow the kingdom of satan, or god of this world. The mission of our Saviour is to take not only his disciples, who proclaimed repentance, and that the kingdom of God had approached, or was at hand, but all who might receive him out of the kingdom of satan, and bring them into the kingdom of Christ. This kingdom is said to affect every individual believer by being set up or established in the heart, and will fit all such for the celestial mansions, where, after death, they can rest with Jesus in blessedness and peace. This has been the belief of some of the early Christians, and also, apparently, the faith of the author of our text, but in no wise does it prove that man is the possessor of inherent immortality, or that he is endowed with a never-dying soul.

Paradise, in the day of Christ, appeared to be associated with the garden of Eden, from which grew an ideal or imaginary belief that it was a region where there was no scorching heat, no consuming cold; and the common prayer for the dying or the dead was that their souls might rest in paradise, in the garden of Eden. In all our Saviour's public ministry he does not use the term paradise, nor does he teach his disciples, in his intercourse with them, of a beautiful Eden, or a garden of delight. His mission was not to teach this, but to save men from death, and point them to a kingdom which was to be erected on the sufferings of himself as the Son of God. This was the glorious enterprise in which he was engaged, and he continued unwearily to pursue it against all threatenings and opposing influences till he expired on the cross.

Paradise, or garden, does not appear to have been the meaning of our Lord, but kingdom, kingdom of God. These are the terms he presented to his disciples. Thus is the thief made to express himself by the authors who believed that Christ would rise again from the dead, "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Our Saviour says, Luke xvi. 16, "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it," meaning, The law and the prophets prophesied until John, of the kingdom of God as yet to come (a future event). But when John came that kingdom was about to commence, and men, more particularly the despised publicans and sinners, desired admittance or a pressing into it. The kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven are considered by those teachers to be the same, and paradise a synonymous term; therefore we are led to conclude that the express desire of the thief was that he might be remembered, not raised to life at that time, but remembered by our Saviour after he came back from the dead, believing the kingdom would then be more fully developed, and that Christ would also be better prepared not only to remember but to give life. Therefore he says, Lord remember me when thou comest (from the dead) into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, To-day (not when I return from the dead, but to-day, now, at this moment, before death takes place), shalt thou (by faith) be with me in my kingdom, which is already established, i. e., paradise.

A few words to those in every church who believe that the kingdom of God, i. e., paradise, was set up eighteen hundred years ago. How and when did you enter therein? You have only to give your experience and our text is forever settled. According to your own testimony you can enter by no other process than was required of the thief on the cross, and as he entered in on the hour of his conversion before his death, so will you. Jesus being already in paradise, or the kingdom of God, prior to his decease, there seems to be but little difficulty in regard to the thief being with him after having repented of his evil deeds, without the aid of a never-dying soul.

LAWRENCE, MASS.

THOSE orators who are carried away without reason, remind me of those ships represented in bad pictures, with sails all filled on a sea smooth as glass.

POPULAR CREED.—No. 2.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

The wicked, when they die, are cast into a hell of endless torment.

THIS is also a mere assumption, without a particle of proof from revelation, science, or common sense.

It is contrary to the plain teaching of Scripture; that declares death, not endless torment, to be the penalty of sin.

It is a blasphemous libel on the character of God, whose tender mercies are over all his works, and who retaineth not his anger forever, because He delighteth in mercy.

It substitutes slavish fear, as a motive to repentance, for filial fear of offending so good and gracious a being.

It causes thousands to reject the Bible as a revelation from heaven, because they are taught to believe it sustains such an abhorrent doctrine.

It has incited the cruelty and malice of tyrants in all ages to persecute and torment all opposed to their traditions, that they may assimilate themselves, as much as in their power, to the God they profess to worship.

It drives to despair and madness many who are persuaded really to believe the awful delusion.

It was invented in the dark ages of the earth, full of the habitations of cruelty. Let it go back whence it came.

It makes thousands Universalists. When our friends die, we cannot think of their being in endless torment, and so try to transport them to heaven, if they must still be alive.

It is the most revolting of all the numerous progeny spawned by the heathen dogma of immortal-soulism, and adopted into the so-called Christian theology in an evil day. Let it die the death that has no resurrection.

SANDY HILL, N. Y.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

JACK, THE STREET SWEEPER.

YOU may think it scarcely true when I tell you there are hundreds of homeless boys and girls, that spend much of their time through the inclement season in sweeping the crossings in large cities, asking only a penny or two, as their reward of the passers-by.

Of this number was little Jack, homeless and without friends or relatives. No matter how stormy the day, how deep the slush and mud accumulated on the crossings by the frequent passers-by, Jack was always at his post on one of the most populous streets, broom in hand, cleansing the flag-stones from side to side, over which swept the glittering trains of wealth and pride and fashion.

Jack had long since learned that not from these need he ask even the small pittance of a penny, and yet from this class, without solicitation, would sometimes be dropped into his chilly palm a sixpence or a dime, which not his service but his pleasant, honest face had provoked.

Barefooted and sometimes bare-headed, with sadly worn clothing upon his body—still underneath the torn, patched jacket was concealed a brave, honest heart that would have done honor to the son of a king.

A circumstance occurred one day that proved, outcast as he was, the true nobility and character of the lad. A gentleman passing hurriedly along through a driving storm, was attracted by the attitude and voice of the child, who accosted him with, "Sir, have you a penny for only a street-sweeper?"

It was very cold; the storm was drifting from side to side. Almost any one would have felt justified in taking care of self, but the kind gentleman, drawing his warm fur from his hands, took out his money, and dropped a dime into the snowy palm of the child, saying, "If you have any home, my lad, you had better find it; you will perish in the storm."

"I have no home," was the pitiful answer; but his face, all flecked with the snow, grew radiant as he thought the dime would secure him a night in some poor wretch's cellar, with at least a covering for his head.

As the gentleman closed his pocket-book a gust of wind swept out a little coin, and at once it was lost in the snow. For a moment he searched, then said: "My lad, I think this was a gold dollar I dropped; if you find it, return it to me at No. —, Girard avenue."

"I will, sir, thank you," was Jack's prompt answer.

Little dreaming that he should ever see the face of the lad again, the gentleman hurried on to his cheerful home and a luxurious dinner.

One by one the little ragged urchins from the alley, homeless and perishing, gathered around, each one eager to find the golden prize, with the hope of pocketing the spoil.

Jack never relaxed his efforts, though almost blinded with the storm. At last the tiny piece was found; but it was only another dime like unto the one the gentleman had dropped into his palm. The two or three little homeless boys that still lingered upon the side-walk employed every artifice for a division of the coin, saying, "It was not worth taking home to the gentleman—he would not care for it, and if he did, he would never meet Jack again."

"No," replied the lad. "I would never deceive him: I gave him my promise, and though I have no home, food, or shelter, I will be honest."

Fearfully the storm blew upon the poorly protected form, whirling into eddies, drifting up the side-walk, almost barring entrance to the doors. At last the street, then the number greeted Jack's longing eyes. Boldly he pulled the bell. Why should he not? He felt brave and honest and true; and this seemed a shelter against the storm.

The servant opened the door, but finding only a ragged child, whom she presumed wanted alms, she quickly closed it and retreated, ere Jack could collect himself to speak.

Again he rang, and again the maid appeared, determined to send the little vagrant away.

"I am Jack, the street-sweeper," hastily spake the boy; "the good gentleman who lives here bid me call. Can I see him?"

With a curse upon her lip for these tribes of desperadoes, the door was again closed, only, however, to be reopened with—"The master bids you to his office."

Never before had Jack trodden on such soft velvets and downy rugs. He almost marvelled to himself, whether this wasn't heaven he had heard tell of—the happy land.

"Good morning, my lad," said the gentleman; "take a seat by the hearth, you look very cold."

"I am cold, but I don't mind it much, I's so used to it," whispered Jack; then added, "I found the money, sir, and have brought it to you, but it's only a dime."

"A dime, my lad! are you sure? It was a dime I gave you."

The thought instantly flashed upon his mind that he was mistrusted for exchanging the coin. His red, chafed face grew redder, as he produced his gift. It was only a counterpart of the other.

"Noble boy," exclaimed the gentleman; "your honesty shall be your fortune. You possess a jewel better than bags of gold, honor that would adorn other than a bosom clothed in rags. I will employ you on that honor that you so prize as my errand boy; but, remember, it was this love of truth, of honesty, of virtue, that has won this mark of regard. Let it be forever your shield."

The half-frozen face that had scarcely ever known a tear, was wet with the pearly drops as they trickled down, one by one, and fell upon the tattered sleeve. Oh, it was so good to hear such kind words, such good words!

"I did not mean it," stammered Jack. "I did not mean to give you so much trouble; I am only a poor street-sweeper."

"All the braver and better that you did not do it for reward, but the reward shall not be the less sweet."

Jack is no longer "little Jack, the street-sweeper." By degrees he has arisen step by step, by virtue of his integrity, to a position of credit that would do honor to many higher born than he who once swept the crossings for a penny.—The Children's Friend.

"FATHER KNOWS."

A GENTLEMAN was one day opening a box of dry-goods. His little son was standing near, and as the father took the packages from the box, he laid some of them upon the arm of the boy. A young friend and playmate of the merchant's son was standing by looking on. As parcel after parcel was laid upon the arm of the boy, his friend began to fear his load was becoming too heavy, and said:

"Johnny, don't you think you've got as much as you can bear?"

"Never mind," answered Johnny, in a sweet, happy tone, "father knows how much I can carry."

Brave, trusting little fellow! He did not grow restless under the burden. There was no danger, he felt, that his father would lay too heavy a load on him. His father knew his strength, or rather the weakness of that little arm, and would not overtask it. More than all, his father loved him, and therefore would not harm him. It is such a spirit of loving trust in Him that God desires His children to possess.—Selected.

SPEAK KINDLY.

A MAN once saved a very poor boy from drowning. After his restoration he said to him:

"What can I do for you, my boy?"

"Speak a kind word to me sometimes," replied the boy, the tears rushing from his eyes. "I ain't got a mother like some of them."

A kind word! Think of it. This man had it in his power to give that boy money, clothes, playthings, but the little fellow craved nothing so much as a kind word now and then. If the man had ever so little heart the boy must certainly have had the wish granted.

A kind word! You have many such spoken to you daily, and you don't think much of their value; but that poor boy in the village, at whom everybody laughs, would think that he had found a treasure if some one spoke a kind word to him.—Selected.

A LITTLE girl sat on a stone watching the other children play. She was crying, yet trying not to cry. Her feet were bare, and her dress torn. "Why don't that little girl play?" I asked the children. "Her father is an old drunkard, and we don't want her," they said. Poor little girl! Would Jesus treat her so, I wonder?

A BIBLE VIEW OF HELL:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

WM. H. SPENCER, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER.

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it, and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	"
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	3 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2 "
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "
21.	LIFE AND DEATH REAL,	2 "
22.	MAN'S DESTINY; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	THE LIFE VIEWS,	2 "
24.	HOW READEST THOU?	2 "
25.	WHAT A FARMER HAS TO SAY: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, THE WRATH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?	2 "
26.	SOUL SURVIVANCE IN DEATH: NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE BIBLE,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,551, NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 18.
WHOLE NUMBER 352.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

[Concluded.]

WILL THE WICKED DEAD BE RAISED TO LIFE AGAIN?

BY THOMAS READ.

GOD "having saved the people out of Egypt, afterwards destroyed them that believed not." This judgment was final. The Jewish writers agree in saying that these will not be raised again, they say they died the second death. Which may be thus explained. Some die and will be raised again; but these sinners died and will not be raised again. God swore in his wrath, that they should not enter into his rest.

Ps. xlix. 6. "They that trust in their wealth, . . . 11. their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever, . . . 12. nevertheless such a man being in honor abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish. 14. Like sheep they are laid in the grave: death shall feed on them. 19. They shall never see the light." Sheep and wicked men, dying alike will neither be raised again to life.

Ps. lxxxiii. 9, 10. "Do unto them as unto . . . . Jabin, at the brook Kishon: who (shomad) were annihilated at Endor: they became as dung for the earth."

Ps. ci. 8. "I will early annihilate (tsomath) all the wicked of the land." Ps. lxxiii. 27. "For, lo, they that are far from thee shall perish: thou hast (tsomath) annihilated all them that go a whoring from thee."

The wicked that are annihilated cannot be raised again to life. There are many such expressions but here are presented some positive declarations that the wicked will not be raised again to life.

Is. xxvi. 13, 14. "Other lords (the kings of Syria, etc.) "have had dominion over us, but they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." In contrast to the non-resurrection of the wicked the 19 v. affirms the resurrection of God's people. This plainly decides the question. Is. [xliii. 14–17. Their nobles and the Chaldeans . . . . which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army, and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise: they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

Jer. li. 39. "The Babylonians shall roar," etc. "In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the Lord, I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter." This is reaffirmed in the 57 v.

Ps. ix. 17. "The wicked shall be turned into sheol," (the state of death.) Job xxiv. 19. "Drought and heat consume the snow waters: so doth sheol those who have sinned, ... the worm shall feed sweetly on him: he shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall be broken as a tree."

Luke xiii. Pilate had mingled the blood of the Galileans with their sacrifices, and the tower of Siloam fell upon 18 and crushed them. Suppose these were extra sinners because they suffered such things; Christ says: "I tell you, nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." They perished at death, and can they be raised to life again?

2 Peter, ii. 12. The wicked are as "irrational brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed . . . . they shall utterly perish in their own corruption." Acts iii. 23. "Every soul, which will not hear that prophet shall be utterly exterminated from among the people."

John iii. 36. "He that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." v. 40, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Prov. xxi. 16. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the dead." These texts will be conclusive with the lovers of truth.

Dan. xii. 2. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Prof. Bush translates thus: "And many of the sleepers of the dust shall awake; these (the awakened,) shall be to everlasting life, and those (the unawakened) shall be to shame and everlasting contempt."

Aben Ezra says: "Those who wake shall be (appointed) to everlasting life, and those who awake not, shall be (doomed) to shame and everlasting contempt."

Gaon says: "This is the resuscitation of the dead of Israel, whose lot is to eternal life, and those who do not awake, are the forsaken of Jehovah." Bush on the Resurrection, p. 184. Prof. Whiting translates thus: "And many of the sleepers of the dust of the ground shall awake, these to everlasting life; and those to reproaches and everlasting abhorrence."

He says: "Those are such as do not awake; and hence seem to remain unawakened in everlasting abhorence."

Ailleh—weailleh, though translated "some" and "some" in the English version are in almost every other place translated "these" and "those." There is no representative of the word "some" in the Hebrew, and it ought not to have appeared in the translation. The "many of" is translated correctly, and that of itself confines the "these" that awake to a class, and clearly implies that there are the "those" that will not awake. Many of the sleepers shall awake, plainly supposes that there are some that shall not awake. This text truly translated is clear testimony that the wicked will not awake to life; will not be resurrected. Also Amos viii. 14; Nahum i. 9, 10.

OBJECTIONS.

After the mass of evidence brought forth; some of it so plain and positive, proving the non-resurrection of the wicked, there will need some very clear expressions, showing that the wicked dead will be raised to life again, to obscure or cast even a doubt upon the decision of the question.

The strongest passage is John v. 28, 29. "Marvel not at this; for an hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; those that have done good to the resurrection of life and those that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation."

In the passage before us we have an antithesis. The two last clauses are set in opposition. The rule applicable to such cases is, that if we can discover the meaning of one side of the antithesis we do discover the meaning of the other, as the other is its opposite. Now those that have done good, come forth to the resurrection of life, and those that have done evil do not come forth to the resurrection of life, but to the resurrection to condemnation to death. The case of the evil ones is brought up to be examined, and they may be said to stand up in a figure as in Rev. xx. 12, to receive their condemnation. In Ezek. xxxvii. The dry bones heard but after they were clothed with flesh "there was no life in them."

Some think the whole with the preceding verse refer to a moral resurrection. The passage, like many others, is not without its difficulties.

Rev. xx. 12. "And I saw the dead, the great and the small, standing before the throne. And the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of the things written in the books, according to their works," etc.

This is a scene evidently before the resurrection, and the dead are judged as dead, they are not made alive to be judged, but to determine those that are to be made alive by a resurrection. This is a very frequent figure in Scripture, when a person's case is called up for examination, he is said to stand up, though he be not present. This case throws light on the last.

Rev. xx. 5. "The rest of the dead lived not till the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." The text is of doubtful authority. But as there will be mortal men, in their present animal natures, during the 1,000 years, and good men die during that term, then the first resurrection takes place at Christ's appearing and kingdom, and a second resurrection of the righteous dead, who have died during the 1,000 years. Not a word here of the resurrection of the wicked.

Rev. xx. 6, 14. The phrase "second death," is a Rabbinical expression. They meant by it death inflicted by judicial sentence from which there is no resurrection. They applied it to those whose carcasses fell in the wilderness, whom, they affirm, will never be raised to life again.

Acts xxiv, 13. Paul said: "I have a hope toward God, which these themselves also look for, that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust." This is nearly the version of the Am. Bible Union. They leave out "of the dead," and Griesbach marks nekron, of the dead, as doubtful and should probably be omitted. See also Zachman and Robinson's Greek Testaments. The oldest copies of the Syriac leave out the words "both the just and the unjust."

The Pharisees to whom Paul alluded, (for Paul did not say that he believed the resurrection of the unjust) believed in a resurrection of some sort, a transmigration of the soul from one body to another, which they called a resurrection, but not a resurrection "of the dead," much less "from the dead." Observe Paul's resurrection was based upon a hope. The Pharisaic doctrine of the resurrection, was not a Christian doctrine. Supposing the passage should prove genuine, then, who did the Pharisees mean by the unjust? The pious and punctual observers of their law, they called the just, and the partial observers of their law, they called the unjust, whom they supposed would be the subjects of their resurrection. But the notoriously wicked they did not believe would be the subjects of even their resurrection. "The just and the unjust," therefore, do not include the notoriously wicked. The universal opinion among them was, that those whose carcasses fell in the wilderness, with other notorious sinners, would never have a resurrection. Josephus writes "that souls have an immortal vigor in them and that such as lived virtuously . . . shall have power to live again." He also says, "They," the Pharisees, "say that all souls are incorruptible, but that the souls of good men only are removed into other bodies." The Jews, during the captivity, had learned these notions from the heathen, notions respecting which their own Scriptures were either entirely silent, or taught doctrines entirely subversive of them. The Master said: "Beware of the doctrines of the Pharisees and the Sadducees."

Among the objections, some will observe that little notice has been taken throughout this investigation of the popular dogma of "The Immortality of the Soul." It has been purposely ignored. Being a speculative theory, it has no bearing whatever upon a Bible question. The immortality of the soul was invented by Pythagoras, the heathen philosopher, Anno Mundi 3,100, taught by Socrates and Plato, heathen philosophers, before Christ, and partially introduced among Christians as an acknowledged philosophical heresy, early in the second century. It was baptized as a Roman Catholic dogma, at the council of Lateran, A.D. 1513, by the infallible Leo X, the most profligate of Popes; buried by Luther among other heresies "in the Roman dunghill of decretals," in the 16th century. But being exhumed again, nursed and fostered by a spurious theology, it has now become the pet dogma of popular protestantism! The old mother has made all her daughters "drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." It denies and overturns the doctrine of the resurrection of dead men, of the righteous, as well as the wicked by keeping them alive while dead! It robs Christ of his glory as being the future LIFE-GIVER, and the "Author of Life," by blasphemously arrogating to itself, immortality by inherent right, as the privilege of all men!!! It places the crown of Life, plucked from the head of the Redeemer, on the head of the monster Death, making him the grand introducer into future life and glory!! It gives the lie to God and Christ respecting their offers of life, and necessitates a mode of interpretation which is undermining the most glorious doctrines of the Bible!

A Bible soul is an organized, animal frame work, whether dead or alive, but which, in its perfect state, lives by breathing. The word soul was used by the Hebrews, as, my soul, thy soul, etc., instead of the reflective pronouns, myself, thyself, etc. The Hebrews had no term to express the word body, but nephish, soul; so that wherever is found the word body in the old testament, the Hebrew word is nephish, soul. "The dead souls of thy servants have they given to be meat to the fowls of heaven." See similar phraseology in many other places.

If the advocates of the natural Immortality of the Soul dare openly to discuss the question, on a public platform, or better, in the papers, they have the opportunity.

The "Immortality tof the Soul" is the corrupt source of almost all other heresies. A monstrous tree whose branches are Roman Catholicism, Eternal Torments, Universalism, and Spiritualism, or Modern Demonology.

Christian brethren, lovers of truth and of God, help! Hew down the tree, dig up its roots, and burn the whole, root and branches, and busy the ashes among the explored humbugs of the dark ages!

May the God of truth inspire a spirit of investigation, and bless this little essay.

Conclusion from the whole of this examination.

The wicked dead will not be raised to life again. Amen.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Jan., 1871.

A SUBTLE FALLACY.

BY ALFRED H. CLEAVES.

THERE is perhaps no delusion so well calculated to mislead and sow the seeds of numerous and dangerous errors as that which men employ in dealing with the writings of the fathers.

If a doctrine of longstanding in the church can be traced in its origin to the immediate successors of the apostles, or farther yet, to those who lived and talked with them, it is looked upon by many as equal, if not superior in authority, to the testimony of the sacred writers themselves; and he who is so presumptuous at the present day as to raise the voice of dissent with Tertullian, or Origen, upon certain points of doctrine started by them, arranged for the church by the dogmatic doctors of the fourth century, systematized by the scholars of a later time, and sustained by the champions of dogma and system at the present time,—he is looked upon with supreme contempt by the votaries of learning, and learned creeds, and treated forthwith as an innovater.

There are some however—thank God! at the present day, who are enabled by the light which shines from his word, to perceive that men "may be always learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth," and among the number might be mentioned J. H. McCulloch, the author of "A Recast on the Credibility of the Scriptures," in which he gives evidence that his possession of intellect has not made him "wise above what is written."

He lays the axe at the root of the tree in exposing several ancient errors which have been cherished and fermented in the church for centuries; and which are looked upon today by the advocates of systematic theology as the foundation and superstructure of the Christian faith.

One illustration will suffice to show the manner in which he exhibiits the weak points of a false theology. He thinks it strange that theologians have not dogmatized concerning the phenomena of human generation, explaining the omission thus: "Had they asserted of the human soul that it was an act of God's immediate creation, it would have nullified the doctrine of original sin. On the other hand, had they admitted it to be the result of sexual intercourse upon the part of the parents it would have destroyed the doctrine of inherent immortality.

"Under this dilemma theologians have abstained from formally committing themselves on this point; but have resorted to either hypothesis in order to vindicate the opposite requirements of their theological systems.

"To sustain the doctrine of original sin, since nothing impure or unholy can be ascribed to God, they refer the evil to Adam and Eve; while the doctrine of eternal misery is defended on the ground that God by direct act of creation constitutes them living souls inherently immortal, in contradistinction to the animals which perish."

This illustrates but one form of evil which has grown out of the undue importance associated with the writings outside of the Bible.

The idea has always been more or less prevalent that the Spirit of God illuminated the early writers in the church in a supernatural manner, enabling them by its influence to interpret the language of the apostles with infallible certainty, and to present doctrines and precepts of their own equally valuable with those of the inspired writers.

If the apostle Paul in his day was under the necessity of repeatedly correcting and instructing his own brethren, by what authority may we attach an importance to the writers who lived after him which they never appropriated to themselves, and which the apostles never conferred upon them?

There are many who are slow to remove this impression from the minds of their followers; who practice, as Richard Whately has termed it, a disguise of prudence, which they term a fear of unsettling the minds of their hearers.

He speaks of them also as practicing what is termed "reserve" or "economy;" that is, teaching what they inwardly disbelieve: for example,—allowing the people to remain in ignorance of the fact that the punctuation of the Scriptures is not the work of inspiration; or, that the division into chapters is not from this source,—a knowledge of which on the part of many would entirely change their views in respect to some points.

He quotes very aptly in this direction from William Paley, "that pious frauds have done more damage to the church than all other causes put together."

It is among this class of subterfuges that we wish to place the above named practice of quoting a long list of declarations from the early writers without qualification; without removing the impression that the authority in their possession was equal to that of the apostles; or without confessing, that their sayings, however esteemed in the church, are subject to the same necessity of a searching measurement by the word of God that modern writers are subject to.

This custom of reverencing the ancient worthies however modified is none other than unsound doctrine of apostolic succession as held by the papal church, and most emphatically brandished by them in declaring the Pope infallible.

The elements of such a state of things are already in the Protestant body and only await a development to be clearly discerned; and when a long list of expressions found in the writings of the fathers is presented without distinction in connection with the language of the Old and New Testaments, it is here at the starting point that we must discover the show of reason.

What if D'Aubigne in his "Voice of the Church One," labors to show that the view of a terrestrial appearing of Christ was a curious one, and one to be associated with that of carnal Jews who were still looking for a Messiah altogether human,—does that make it so?—Where do the Scriptures represent the error of the Jews as consisting in looking for a human Messiah? or his future appearance in glory? Was it not rather for denying his Lordship and Sonship to God, as the Son of David, and the offspring of Mary, that the Jews were guilty of error; and for failing to discern him in his humiliation?

In what did the unity of the faithful consist until the age of dogma, if not in "turning from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven; whom God raised from the dead?"

D'Aubigne himself is constrained to admit this, and so he terms this condition of things in the church, "the form of life."

There was a unity then in this direction until the days of Ireneus and Tertullian, when according to D'Aubigne, the simple form of Christianity began to appear; and in what does this simplicity consist? Justyn Martyr proclaims a Unity in Trinity.—Theopholus professes a faith in the Holy Trinity.—Ireneus declared that Christ in himself united both God and man: and if all the church has declared sacred from that day to this were written and presented in a condensed form, one might well inquire of the writer for the "simplicity that is in Christ."

This is not intended as a personal representation of D'Aubigne so much as what it pertains to the church itself; for he afterwards candidly furnishes the mind of the fathers in relation to the word of God, in which they subject themselves and their testimony to the inspired text; but the name of the church has so much weight with the multitude of religionists, that the name, or at least the doctrines of Christ, are seemingly forgotten; the body has superseded the head, and the members have forgotten that the mouth is located there.

Let us look for unsoundness in this direction then; never receive a doctrine that commences here; and remember that the voice of Prophets and Apostles is the voice of inspiration.

Let us not undervalue the truth which the early disciples brought to light; but still remember that some of their sayings, since put up in gilt, are made to serve a guilty cause, and discover here the subtle fallacy of which we write.

Leaving the matter at present as a general exposition we will consider hereafter, the Lord willing, some special errors of this order.

BOSTON, MASS., Jan. 28, 1871.

(Continued from last week.)

THE ATONEMENT.—A REVIEW.

BY J. C. DAY.

WHILE this theory of the legal imputation of our sins to Christ, and a legal discharge to believers is, I believe, defective in very many of its aspects, yet there is one feature more to be feared than all the rest; and that is, that Christ procured for us no other benefit than pardon; that besides clearing from the current of blessing those obstructions which sin had thrown upon it, he is in no sense the ground of our positive good. That we are justified by the death of Christ from our sins that are past, and then are all left to our own obedience of the law, for all the positive good of this world and that which is to come; and that all the benefits of the atonement, to those who have lived since 1844, will be expended on those who have secured such good by keeping the ten commandments under what they term the third angel's message or the teachings of Elen G. White's visions, as, according to this theory, no other commandment keepers can be benefitted by the atonement. And in respect to sanctification, he only made such a work consistent with the wisdom of God by rendering remission possible. Such a sentiment ought not to be believed without good evidence. That Christ must have had a reward, and one awarded by law, is just as certain as that he was made under law. If God required his service he must reward that service as done to himself. But whatever reward Christ received was for his obedience alone, and not for his sufferings as such. Sufferings viewed by themselves, that is, as uncommanded, could be entitled to nothing. Besides, the law promised no reward to anything but obedience. And if Christ received a reward it must have consisted in blessings for men. He had no private wants to supply; no selfish propensities to satisfy by a personal and separate good; and without blessing for men, he could have had no redeemed kingdom to reign over; no gift in his hand to bestow upon his children or to gratify his benevolence.

My opinion is, by his filial obedience he received the inheritance of a Son, and was made heir of all things; and that in the all things was comprehended the whole amount of positive good ever intended for the fallen race, or ever to be placed within their reach, or offered to them on condition of their faith, or to be bestowed upon them in gracious rewards. I believe all these things were given to him as the legal reward of that amazing exhibition of holiness which he made under law, and belonged to the general estate which he holds by a mediatorial claim, and were made over to him. Not for his own private use, but to be offered to capable agents, leaving the issue to be decided by themselves.

In considering the good obtained for moral agents, I shall attend principally to that which he offers to men on condition of their faith, and confers on believers in gracious rewards. It is no part of this system that Christ obeyed in our room to supersede the necessity of our obedience. The obedience which we owed, he was never bound to pay; but only that which was due from him. The obedience which was due from him we never owed; and we still are bound to render that which was demanded of us. He obeys for himself, and we for ourselves. Nor is it any part of our system that we are rewarded for two things at once, (Christ's obedience and our own,) but rather that two persons in different senses are rewarded for the same thing.

A divine reward is a token of approbation presented as a motive to virtue, and is the recompense of him alone who is therein approved. It may be legal or it may be gracious. Our obedience began late and continuing imperfect is not entitled to reward by law; but yet is a thing really approved, and therefore is fitted to receive, not the legal, but the gracious token of approbation. What Christ received was in approbation of his righteousness alone, and was of course a reward to none but himself. The direct act of giving to him, though for the use of those who should be approved, was not itself the approbation of them. But the grant consisted in blessings for our use. When these blessings come from his hands, they are tokens of approbation of none but us. The same blessings therefore which to him are a reward of law, are to us the reward of grace. As they issued from God they were his reward, and not ours; and as they come from his hands they are our reward not his. Though therefore we are blessed for his sake (as without his righteousness to detach the blessings from God they could not have come to us), we are rewarded solely for our own: that is, the benefits as they come from his hands are to none but us, the tokens of approbation presented as motives of virtue.

We may see, therefore, in what sense it can be true that eternal life is granted for Christ's sake alone; and yet is a token of approbation to us, and would not have come to us had we not been approved. As it came out from God according to law, it came for his sake alone; but it was delivered to him, not for his own private use, but for the benefit of those who would obey him. But it may be said that if Christ is the ground of what believers obtain. they must all receive equally. Not necessarily. The only reward (as relates to the present subject) which he ever desired was that his disciples should receive at his hands the gracious tokens of approbation according to their fitness to be approved. Thus while his merit is the legal ground, their holiness, which constitutes a sort of spiritual capacity, is the measure of their blessedness. A parent labors for a man and receives his wages in articles of clothing for his children of different ages, which he could not wear himself. It is as much a transaction between him and his employer, and the reward is as much his own as though it had consisted in money. But he did not fulfil an obligation which belonged to the children or do a work in their room which they were bound to perform. They were never under obligation to render that service. When he has received the articles, he deals them out to his children according to their age and character, and gives to none further than they are approved, except what he bestows to put them in a condition to render the service required. This is the explanation of the system, and now for the proof.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS.,

[To be Continued.]

"WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE?"

BY A. BOYNTON.

AN important inquiry, but its answer is not for the benefit of your neighbor so much as it is for you. It is an individual question. Are you on the Lord's side? For the time is soon coming when "He (Jesus) shall gather all nations, and separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from his goats." True, "The Lord knoweth them that are his;" but it is of some importance that you should also know whose you are, and whom you serve. The children of the Lord are begotten of God by the Holy Ghost, "begotten again," baptized of the Spirit, "receive the spirit of adoption whereby they cry Abba, Father;" are sealed with the Holy Spirit which is the earnest, or assurance of Eternal Life until the reward is given. But as it is all important that we make no mistake in this matter, our path is set with guides, or waymarks, by which we are to "examine ourselves, and prove our own selves, whether we be in the faith" or no; for "the heart of man is deceitful above all things;" hence the caution. "A tree is known by its fruit." The first fruit of the Spirit (not first in order only, but first in quality, and ever to hold its position as such) is Love; not creature love, but God's love, or the "love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost;" this makes its possessor love as God loves, in

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

kind, yet not in degree. Our persons, or souls, are the glass to reflect the image divine or his character as revealed in the "word." This word, love, prompts us to study that we may know how to honor and glorify his name. Love worketh no ill to its neighbor; hopeth all things, beareth all things, believeth all things, (is charitable, not hasty to condemn) endureth all things, suffereth long and is kind.

Things are constantly transpiring to test the genuineness of our love; the purity of our affection for God, which trial will disturb our self love; and if we have not the love of God to fall back upon, we show ourselves only "as carnal, not having the Spirit." Thus are all the circumstances of life, and also the various doctrines and theories with which we meet in our researches for truth, (for we are to "search for truth as for hid treasure") calculated to bring out the principles of God's grace implanted in our hearts more fully, and also eradicate that which is evil. If God has indeed planted the seeds of Eternal Life within us, his purpose and work is its culture, growth and perfection, and if the true seed abound its growth will be more and more manifest; but if the seed be only of man's sowing, the culture will produce only the more briers and thorns. "Prove all things, hold fast (only) that which is good." This is accomplished by first having the candle of the Lord (or the Spirit) by which we then study the word. Not that the child of God can master the book; but this is the rule by which he is to work, adding to his "faith, virtue, knowledge," etc. Studying with or by some other light than the one of God's providing only bewilders and blinds with "words without knowledge." Here thousands fall out by the way, and are lost through "false philosophy and oppositions of science, falsely so called." "Let patience have her perfect work." Because we cannot see as far or as clearly as another, shall we seek other light than that given of God? Here is another waymark; patience in all ways of God's appointing. "They that will be rich fall into a snare, and many hurtful lusts," which is no less true in one case than another. This haste is a characteristic of our times, and is seen in the persistent advocacy of any new notion, as well as in the fixed opposition against it. both are fit subjects of the exhortation, "be patient." "Whom the Son hath made free, is free indeed;" is not an intellectual freedom only, as this is the result of the spiritual freedom from the power of sin; freedom in the last only ensures freedom in the first. Almost has this important fact become lost sight of by the world; "nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, the Lord knoweth them that are his." Now kind reader do you know him as yours? Can you say "my Lord, and my God?"

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y.. Jan., 1871.

FROM JEREMIAH AND SARAH P. CHANDLER.

BR, THORNE: We prize the HERALD above any paper that we read; we find no paper that advocates so much Bible truth as this. We are fully established in the blessed truth of Life only through Jesus Christ. We are almost alone in this faith; but once in a while we find one who is willing to talk about it; but the mass are opposed and will not look for the evidences of this great truth; but, to us, it is as clear as the noon-day sun, that if we do not have the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead, dwelling in us, we must perish forever.

We are sad to hear that our dear Br. STORRS is so feeble. O let the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous, that availeth much, be offered by all those that believe that, if we abide in Christ, and he abides in them, they can ask what they will and it shall be done. We believe that Jesus Christ has the same power to heal the sick now, as when on the earth going about doing good. We will join with all who will gather around the common mercy-seat for this one object; and the God of Daniel will answer.

Yours in Christian love.

EAST CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 25. 1870.

FROM WARREN SMITH.

Br. L. C. THORNE: I do not recollect of ever meeting you, although I have had the very great pleasure of often hearing from you through our most excellent HERALD, for which I feel truly thankful. I also rejoice there are those that are willing to sacrifice for the cause, not only with their money but also their time. The Lord only can reward.

There are but few living Life believers in this immediate vicinity. Still I have hopes that some able preaching brother will have a call to come to our place, and if so we will look after his interest for so doing.

As for one, I am fully satisfied that the Life views, as held by those that edit the HERALD OF LIFE, are the true Bible doctrines, which have been lost for ages past; at least, in part; till since the cry of the coming King and our blessed LIFE-GIVER has been and still is shining out from the mist which has covered up those most glorious truths which bring so much joy to the real child of God.

Yours, in hope of soon seeing our blessed Lord and LIFE-GIVER.

CAMBRIA MILLS, MICH., Jan. 8, 1871.

H. F. ELLIOTT, Waterbury, Vt., writes: For two years we have welcomed the weekly visits of the HERALD OF LIFE, laden with the precious truth from the great fountain of Life. We prize it highly and could not do without it.

JOHN WESTOVER, Haldame, Ill., writes: I expect to take the HERALD as long as I live and it is issued. I love the paper for the precious truths it advocates.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 8, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

INHERENT IMMORTALITY:

ITS ORIGIN AND BLASPHEMY.

Let no one suppose that we intend to accuse all the advocates of this heresy as blasphemers. Multitudes hold and promulgate it sincerely, believing it to be the truth; but their sincerity and belief does not alter the character of the doctrine. That which cannot be proved from the words of God, in relation to His government of the creatures He has made, no man has a right to insist on as a divine truth. No intelligent man, who has studied the Scriptures simply in search of the truth, will pretend, the doctrine of inherent immortality is taught in any express declaration by Moses, the prophets, Jesus Christ or his apostles. A "vain philosophy" has brought the doctrine into the church since the days of the apostles; it was matured by the "Mother of Harlots," and decreed by that "Mother of the abominations of the earth" to be an article of faith.

The heathen philosophers speculated about souls and their immortality; but their speculations never amounted to faith, even with themselves, because faith is the result of evidence, and they had no evidence on which faith could be founded; and "most men," Socrates declared, in his day, disbelieved the doctrine; and with the Philosophers themselves it had no practical use; for though there was a variety of opinions on the subject as to what became of these souls, the most common one was, that they all proceeded from the fountain which we call God, or the Deity, and that after various transmigrations or transformations they were again united with the Deity, and their personality lost in the fountain out of which they were supposed to originate; that is, they returned to the same state after their various transmigrations they were in before they had a separate existence. In other words, they believed that the soul was an emanation from the Deity, and ultimately returned to its original condition; so that, in fact, the soul never had a beginning, but was the immediate offshoot of the Deity, and returning to its original fountain would never have an end, because swallowed up in the ever-existing fountain of all life. "Practically," says Archbishop Whately, "it was the same as annihilation."

Such was the inherent immortality of the heathen Philosophers. In our day, professed Christians have taught that the soul is "God's immortal breath," i. e., a part of God; but most of them are now ashamed of that blasphemy, as it sets God at war with Himself, making some parts of the Deity to be sinners against the fountain from which they came.

The Scripture doctrine of a future life is that of a resurrection from the dead, and never by an immortal soul that survives in death. That the corrupters of the Christian truth might have begun their work in the Apostle's days is probable; and we may suppose that it was against such, Paul warned the Colossians when he said, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." —Col. ii. 8.

The heathen schemes of futurity naturally originated in the speculative powers of the human mind in its ignorance of the Bible doctrine of a resurrection from the dead. They had gloomy apprehensions of the future, and they set about devising means by which it might be possible that man should survive this event. It was not difficult to conceive some finer and more subtle composition than the body, in which might consist that life to which men clung even in death. Thus these immature efforts, aided by the speculations of philosophy, so called, were nurtured by the learned, venerated by the ignorant, and being suited to the quackery of the schools, and the selfish interests of the priests, became venerable from age, and formidable in authority, from Plato to Aquinas, from Des Cartes down to our days.

Early in the history of the Christian church, or soon after the Apostles left the world, converted heathen began to introduce this "vain philosophy" into the Christian system; but the authors were not very harmonious in their views as to what the fancied soul consisted of. The doctrine of its inherent immortality does not appear to have been authoritatively made an article of faith till the "Mother of Harlots" attained to its height of power, or till the beast of Rev. xiii. made its advent into the world. That beast, saith John, "Was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. . . . And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His name," etc. It was by this beast that the doctrine of inherent immortality was first authoritatively established as an article of faith in the church. This blasphemous beast was the author of the doctrine so far as authority for it in the church is concerned.

We here quote from a canon which was passed under Leo X., by the council of Lateran, which goes to show that the highest authority in proof of the inherent immortality of the soul was the decree of a previous Pope. It reads as follows:

"Some have dared to assert concerning the nature of the reasonable soul, that it is mortal; we, with the approbation of the sacred council, do condemn and reprobate all such, seeing, according to the canon of Pope Clement the Fifth, that the soul is immortal; and we strictly inhibit all from dogmatizing otherwise: and we decree, that all who adhere to the like erroneous assertions, shall be shunned and punished as heretics."—Caranza, page 412—1681.

Thus it will be seen that a Popish decree is the highest authority to which Pope Leo X. pretended to appeal as the origin of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; and he was bound to do his best in producing proof of said doctrine. Martin Luther had come out in a sweeping denunciation of the doctrine in the following language:

"I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as that he is Emperor of the world, King of heaven, and God upon earth—that the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."—Luther's Defence, Proposition xxvii. published 1520.

Luther thus bravely bore testimony against this blasphemous doctrine of inherent immortality, though he was deterred by the timorousness of his associates in the Reformation from following up this death-blow to papal "dunghill decretals." Such, and nothing more, is the source of the immortal-soul theory. The beast of Rev. xiii. is its author, so far as it has ever had place by authority in Christendom. Pope Clement V. was the mouth of this beast which was "opened in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His name," etc. This leads us to speak of the blasphemy of the doctrine itself.

To blaspheme signifies, "To injure one's good name, to defame." The term is from "blapto, to injure, and pheemee, reputation:" to injure the reputation of another. To "blaspheme God and His name" is to attribute to Him acts and an administration that injures his character and dishonors his name. The doctrine of inherent immortality does this more than any other heresy ever invented. It represents the infinitely happy, infinitely holy, infinitely just, infinitely wise, infinitely good God, God who is Love itself, as creating, of His own will, intelligent beings so constituted that He himself cannot take away their living existence, let their conduct and character prove what it may. Think of the infinitely happy JEHOVAH at work producing creatures, which He knows may develop a character out of harmony with Himself, constituting them with such a deathless nature as to make it impossible for him to dispose of them in any other way than to make them intolerably miserable, and that endlessly, with no alleviation or intermission. Is not such an imputation a blasphemy on the character and name of an infinitely happy Being? Who dares to say, It is not?

Again: Think of a Being infinitely holy, averse to all sin, creating beings inherently immortal, whom He knows are liable to sin, and thus to become eternal sinners, perpetuting sin endlessly in the face of their holy CREATOR; is such a work in harmony with the Divine character for holiness? Is the attributing it to God not a "blasphemy against Him and against His name?" showing clearly that the advocate of such a doctrine has a relationship to the blasphemous beast of Rev. xiii.

Again: Think of an infinitely just Being placing creatures, brought into existence without their knowledge or consent, and they being no party to the law under which they are placed, so constituting their being that a failure shall make them hopelessly and eternally miserable! Is not such a doctrine a "blasphemy against God and His name"—a violation of all rational rules of justice? Is it not worthy of its origin, i. e., the blasphemous beast of Rev. xiii.? Is it not a blasphemy of which all men ought to clear themselves without delay? When will the church of God purify her garments from this Romish heresy and blasphemy? Is it not high time that she ceased to follow and uphold the doctrine which has no higher authority than Pope Clement V. and his blasphemous decree?

Still again: Would an infinitely wise God have so constituted the creatures He made as to put it out of His power, if they sinned, to make any other disposition of them than that of eternal torments, and at the same time threaten them with death? To say such is the fact, is a blasphemy against the wisdom of God, and is characteristic of the blasphemous beast, "the MOTHER of the abominations of the earth."

Again: To attribute such conduct to an infinitely good Being, as the doctrine of inherent immortality implies and necessarily involves, is to blaspheme that Divine attribute which the Scriptures everywhere extol, declaring that "God is good to all," and that "His tender mercies are over all His works." What a blasphemy, then, to say that, at their very creation, God so constituted angels and men as to make them liable to an endless existence of woe and sorrow, where goodness and mercy are eternally excluded from affording any relief!

Lastly: To accuse that Being whose very name is "LOVE"—for "God is Love"—of creating, of His own free will, and not from any necessity, angels and men, so constituted by His own hand as to be forced on an unending existence, which might prove, and which He foreknew would be to many of them, an unending state of the most fearful misery, sorrow and wailing, is a blasphemy against the "name" of God, worthy of its origin from the beast that "opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His name."—Rev. xiii. 6.

The doctrine of inherent immortality was essential to the perfect triumph of the blasphemous beast, or the Papacy, when clothed with political power by the Dragon. The terrors of an eternal existence in torments were necessary to hold its ignorant victims in awe of the priesthood, and in dread of their authority. That beast, however, did not carry its system quite to the excess that its Protestant imitators have done. The beast created a half-way house, called "purgatory," where these immortal souls might be purified, and through the prayers of priests be delivered, if their surviving friends could pay the priest sufficient money to obtain his prayers. This made the matter profitable for the priesthood, and inherent immortality became a source of immense revenue to that blasphemous power.

Protestants, clothed with Clement Vth's decree of the soul's immortality, carry the matter farther than the Papist's, and grant no reprieve, or purgatory, after death; but send the sinner's immortal soul to eternal torture just as soon as he dies, and before he is finally judged, according to their theory. If such a system is not a blasphemy against the government of God, we know of no theory deserving that name. Yet we, ourself, have been, in time past, involved in the blasphemy, and feel charitable toward sincere souls who are still involved in it. But what shall we say of those who are convinced that the doctrine of inherent immortality is an error, but from shame, or some other cause, dare not openly bear testimony against it? Can such be blameless? Are they true to God and the vindication of His character and government? Will they still, by silence, give countenance to the blasphemy of the blasphemous beast; that beast whose perdition is now nigh? Will they not "come out" from her abominations, that they "be not partakers of her plagues?" God will yet visit even Protestants for adhering to this Papal blasphemy, for it is one of the "marks of the beast." Let all beware that it be not found on them.

It may be well to let our readers know something of the character of Pope Leo X., who may be considered the most prominent to establish the heresy of inherent immortality in the church. Rev. J. PANTON HAM, England, in his history of the doctrine, speaks as follows:

"The pontificate of Leo was an epoch in the history of the doctrine of the soul's immortality. It was then that the successful effort was made to establish and give permanence to this doctrine; but it was made by a usurper of the right of private judgment, and accomplished by an act of sacerdotal despotism. The advocates of the doctrine of the soul's immortality need not be reminded of this suspicious passage in its historic progress. The seal of authority was affixed to it by the Roman Pontiff, in the dawn of the sixteenth century, a man the worthy counterpart of England's Charles II., fond of fashion, field-sports, and mixing up in all the dissipated excesses of the sacred metropolis. Such was his extravagance, that 'the charge has been laid at his door,' says Ranke, 'that he ran through the wealth of three Pontificates—that of his predecessor, from whom he inherited a considerable treasure; his own, and that of his successor, to whom he bequeathed a mass of debt.' . . . 'At court,' Ranke remarks, 'they spoke of the institutions of the Catholic church, and of passages in the Holy Scriptures, only in a tone of jesting; the mysteries of faith were held in derision.' Such was Pope Leo X.; and such the circle of sanctified society of which he was the animating centre."

Mr. Ham remarks on the subject as follows:

"Behold, ye asserters of your own inherent immortality, the worthy 'nursing father' of your faith! the hero of a hey-day heterodoxy! the jolly jester with the solemn sanctities of Scripture! the mocker of the sacred mysteries! Worthy patron of a Pagan progeny! Let it be registered as the genuine genealogy of a fundamental doctrine of modern British Christendom, that the Pagan Plato was the father, and the profligate Pope Leo its foster-father. Born and bred by the Pagan philosophy and the protege of Popery [the blasphemous beast.—ED.] this notion of the soul's immortality has become a pet dogma of popular Protestantism, which, with a strange forgetfulness of its low lineage, openly declares it to be the honorable of a true orthodoxy."

Against this Popish blasphemy, we have said, Luther made a stand; for a time, at least, he did oppose the heresy, and maintained the unconsciousness of the dead. Sir Thomas More published a work in which he assailed the psychological doctrines of Luther, and advocated the Romish views. William Tyndale, the translator of the Bible and the martyr, wrote a reply to More, in which the following language occurs:

"In putting souls in heaven, hell, and purgatory, you destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . . . The true faith putteth the resurrection, [as to the hope of a future life], which we are warned to look for every hour. The heathen philosophers denying that [the resurrection], did put that souls did ever live. And the Pope joined the spiritual doctrine of Christ and the fleshly doctrine of philosophers together, things so contrary that they cannot agree. . . . And because the fleshly-minded Pope consenteth unto heathen doctrine, therefore he corrupteth the Scriptures to establish it. . . . If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? And then what cause is there of the resurrection?"

Some of the early Reformers made a stand against the Papal blasphemy of inherent immortality, but were overpowered by the bigotry and superstition of the times. The English Reformers soon followed suit with Rome in upholding the heresy; so that we understand why Rome came to have the title of "Mother of Harlots." These Reformers justly became entitled to the character of "Daughters" of the old Harlot, by adopting the same blasphemy imposed on the church by the blasphemous beast. Says Archdeacon Blackburn:

"Among the Protestants the honor of condemning such as dissented from Plato and Socrates was reserved for our English Reformers in 1552; whilst on the Continent, when, four years afterwards, the Helvetic Confession was published, supposed to have been drawn up by Beza, under the article entitled, 'The Creation of all Things; of Angels, the Devil, and Man,' it is solemnly announced, after a description of the qualities of the soul, as well as those of the body, 'that we condemn all who scoff at the immortality of the soul,' or bring it into doubt by subtle disputation."

Thus did professed Reformers, who claimed the Bible as "the only rule of faith and practice," allow themselves to be warped, by Popish decrees, to take on them "the mark of the beast," and indorse her "blasphemy against God and against His name," proving themselves the daughters of the harlot; and all such may well tremble in view of the judgments which have come and are to come on the MOTHER; for the Daughters will not escape sharing in her plagues unless they hasten to clear themselves of her blasphemies. Let those who fear God and his righteous judgments make haste to be rid of this scandalous heresy—this dishonor done to God and His name, and to His government of the creatures He has made.

We have now given to our readers some of the thoughts that came into our mind while on our sick bed, and near the gates of death, as was supposed. Then we charged our Assistant Editor, in case of our death, to bring out the fact—evident to our mind—that the blasphemous beast, of Rev. xiii., was the real author, in the church, of the doctrine of inherent immortality, and that this doctrine was the great "blasphemy against God and His name" which that beast uttered, and which Protestants have so thoughtlessly indorsed, though professing to take the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice; in which book no such doctrine is found, and not one word said of an immortal soul, or of any future life except by a resurrection from the dead.

We might, perhaps, with propriety name the doctrine of inherent immortality of an entity, called the soul, a "damnable heresy," as it "denies the Lord, who bought them," the honor of giving them a life beyond the present; claiming that life as the result of their own inherent nature, of which God himself cannot deprive them! A fearful blasphemy, seeing that God has said, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" and, "The wages of sin is death."

We now have spoken, and let those who choose "mock on;" God is their and our Judge. Never did the doctrine of inherent immortality look so horrible and blasphemous, so dishonorable to God and his character, as when we viewed it on our sick bed; and we saw, clearly, that it was the Romish beast that fathered it upon the church to the corruption of nearly every doctrine of the Bible, converting the terms by which the mind of God was expressed into an entirely different sense from their natural and obvious meaning, making death to mean torment, and life to mean happiness. It has bred Universalism, Spiritism, and has become "the cage of every unclean and hateful bird," or corrupt doctrine that now curses Christendom.

ALBERT BARNES' ADMISSIONS.

THE "Herald and Presbyter," a Presbyterian paper, published in Cincinnati, contains the following, from a clergyman of that denomination.

"A few weeks since I received, by mail, a pamphlet written by a Mr. Hudson, which advocated the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked at the second coming of Christ. I suppose every Presbyterian minister received it as I did. In this pamphlet there was a quotation from the writings of the late Rev. Albert Barnes, which Mr. Hudson would have his readers suppose sustained his views. I referred at once to Mr. Barnes' commentaries, and found there the orthodox doctrines on this point stated in the strongest possible manner."

The correspondent then states that he wrote to Mr. Barnes, and received from him assurances that he (Barnes) had not changed his views respecting the destiny of the wicked. The correspondent proceeds thus: "It is certainly unfair and untrue to misrepresent Mr. Barnes as Mr. Hudson's pamphlet does; and one good object which the publication of this letter may accomplish, will be to assure those who may be perplexed by the assertion made by any, that the great commentator Barnes doubted the eternal punishment of the wicked, that such inference is false and unwarrantable."

We cannot feel entirely certain as to what Mr. Hudson is here referred to, nor what is the tract in question, nor yet what is the particular quotation from Mr. Barnes' writings which has so much troubled our, so called, orthodox brethren. Why was not the clerical correspondent of the "Herald and Presbyter" more specific? Was he afraid to trust the quotation which he found in Mr. Hudson's tract in the hands of the readers of that paper? If this be so was it because he regarded the admission of Mr. Barnes as a very unfortunate one for the torment theory? Our friend overlooks the fact that they who hold to the destruction of the wicked maintain eternal punishment.

We presume the Mr. Hudson spoken of is Br. C. F. Hudson, now sleeping in Jesus, a man who attained unto eminence in learning and piety, and that the tract in question is one written by him a few years before his death, and entitled "Immortality through Christ alone." If this be so the quotation and its connection are as follows: . . . .

"An able writer has told us that he was once a strong defender of the doctrine in question. He thought the fact and justice of eternal suffering all clear and plain. But as he came to know his thoughts better, the whole dropped away as a sheer logical figment which had never been a part of his real mind or heart. And we met a short time since a fine instance showing how short a time may pass for as good as endless duration. A friend remarked that if the glorified state of the saints did not begin until the final resurrection it seemed hardly worth living for. The interval was his eternity. The infinite beyond eluded his thoughts.

"And this may explain the fact which so much amazes and distresses many devout men,—the indifference of men generally respecting the danger they are supposed to believe. 'I confess,' says Albert Barnes, 'when I look . . . upon the world of woe, filled with hosts to suffer forever; when I see my friends, my parents, my family, my people, my fellow-citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger, and when I see the great mass of them wholly unconcerned, and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet he does not do it.—I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it.'"

Is there a fair, sensible, religious man, other than this indignant Presbyterian minister, in all the wide, wide world who, after reading the above, would ever think of so far departing from the blessed principles he professes to uphold as to accuse Mr. Hudson of unfairness, untruth, and a misrepresentation of Mr. Barnes? Some there may be, few, if any, there must be. Br. Hudson does not intimate that Mr. Barnes denies the doctrine of future and unending torment, nor does he quote thus from Mr. Barnes in order to impress any mind with the idea that Mr. B. questioned the doctrine. He could not do so, for the language forbids it. It is altogether unfair to infer from the fact of the quotation,—that being all Mr. Hudson is responsible for, that there was a design to misrepresent Mr. Barnes. If Mr. B.'s admission is calculated to lead any to doubt the great commentator's loyalty to the doctrine of endless torment, the reflection is upon Mr. Barnes himself and not at all upon Mr. Hudson who simply and fairly quotes the language. The design of the quotation seems plainly to have been to show that the good Albert Barnes, no less than numerous other devout men, was amazed and distressed at the indifference manifested by men generally respecting the terrible danger to which they are taught to believe they are exposed. One argument to the support of which it contributes is that none can really believe it for the reason, largely, that man can not grasp infinitude.

But the quotation shows more than was primarily designed by Br. Hudson in making it, and that more is just what, more than any thing else, perhaps, renders it so very obnoxious to some of our friends on the other side of the question. The language constitutes a frank and manly admission on the part of Mr. Barnes that he was wholly unable to reconcile those unlovable, nay, hideous and fiendish qualities which the doctrine imputes to the divine character with his conception of the real character and attributes of God. "It is," said he, "all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it." And at another time he said, speaking of the punishment of the wicked, "I have met with nothing which would convince my anxious mind or give consolation upon the subject." Of course he could not disguise the awful darkness produced by the intervention of so frightful and appalling an object between him and the light of truth as is the eternal torment theory. How could he disguise it? How can any thinking man disguise it? Has our clerical friend thought so much less deeply on the subject than Mr. Barnes that he sees no difficulty here? Or does he possess the faculty for disguising what Mr. Barnes avowed he could not? Has he a source of consolation which Mr. B. could not reach?

Bishop Newton never uttered truer words than when he said that men might imagine "creatures delivered over to the torments of endless ages, without the least possibility of relaxation or redemption," but that they can "never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness." This is just where Mr. Barnes stumbled. He taught the doctrine, but when he undertook to "seriously believe it" he found it invested with insurmountable difficulties, and trying to believe it he plunged himself into darkness. Nobody supposes that Mr. Barnes meant to teach any other doctrine respecting the future of the wicked than such as are recognized by the Presbyterian church, but the admission under consideration is incontrovertable as showing that he,—and the same is true of other learned men of the torment school, sometimes, under the influence of the light of truth, was induced to give expression to his feelings in terms fatal to his theory.

We cannot remember to have read, for years past, a commentary, or any work in the interests of the, so-called, orthodox views, the author of which has not plunged into difficulties, in the shape of damaging admissions, from which extrication is impossible but by direct and absolute retreat. Nor is this strange. The truth is so plain that no pen, however guarded by prejudice or otherwise, can avoid sometimes attesting it. May the Lord help all truth-loving, God-fearing men to learn always to attest it. L. C. T.

Br. Grant's Report Corrected.

The "Reporter" and the "Chronicle," San Francisco, Cal., represents Eld. Grant as saying:

"In 1839 a man in New York, named George French, published a pamphlet setting forth these truths: [the destruction of the wicked, etc]. In 1844 Geo. Storrs, who had been led by French's pamphlet to examine the subject, published his famous Six Sermons."

This statement contains several errors. First: French's given name was Calvin and not George. Second: French lived in Mass., near Boston. Third: Geo. Storrs never saw French nor any of his writings prior to his publishing his "Six Sermons;" nor had he ever heard that French had published anything on the subject. Besides, Geo. Storrs had published "Three Letters" he had written to an eminent Methodist Minister as early as April 1841.

Will the "Crisis" please copy this correction?

France.

Among the first items of information received from Paris after the capitulation, and arrangement of the armistice was the assurance of very great distress in that city. The destruction of the railways has very much impeded the work of revictualing, but the Germans have been supplying articles of the first necessity from their own military stores and driving cattle into the city. England and Belgium have sent large quantities of provisions, and it is most likely that by this time much of the extreme suffering has been relieved.

Notwithstanding the many calamities to France that have followed one another in rapid succession, the armistice astounded many people in the Provinces, and many demonstrations have occurred in some towns against the armistice and any mutilation of the territory of France. Lyons was particularly bold and active in her opposition, but, as might have been expected, she has subsided into meek submission.

One of the conditions of the armistice was that a National Assembly, elected by the people, should be convened, which would constitute a responsible Power with which to negotiate in the arrangement of terms of peace. On this point an unfortunate disagreement developed. M. Gambetta issued a decree pronouncing all the functionaries under the empire ineligible to election to the Assembly. Against this Count Bismarck protested, stating that the Germans will only recognize an assembly composed of freely elected deputies. The following, respecting this protest of Count Bismarck, comes from Bordeaux, under date of Feb. 4:

"Count Bismarck having protested against the electoral disqualification decree of the Bordeaux government M. Gambetta has made a reply, in which he warmly defends that document, and says: 'It frustrates the plans of Bismarck and his accomplices, the fallen dynasty, and the insolent pretension of the Prussian Minister to interfere with the constitution of a French Assembly." The best justification of the Bordeaux government is the public meeting of last night, which resolved on a mass demonstration to-morrow to formally request M. Gambetta to accept the presidency of a committee of public safety, and prosecute the war to the death."

The result of the matter is the election is to be open to all parties and all kinds of candidates. The question of peace or continuance of war will necessarily be the first to claim the consideration of the Assembly. We say that will necessarily be the first business because the Assembly will meet on the 12th., and the armistice expires on the 19th., at noon. The German conditions of peace are said to be something like the following: The cession of Alsace to Germany, thus taking from France the great city of Strasbourg, thus driving France entirely away from the Rhine. Next, France to surrender twenty ships of war, a colony in Cochin China, and a money indemnity equal to some two thousand millions of dollars. Then Germany will require "material guarantees" for the fulfilment of these conditions.

Altogether, therefore, the Assembly will have a very important work to do at the very outset and hence will have little time to indulge in the stormy discussions which we may expect of it before its close. Terms of peace concluded, it is somewhat doubtful whether the Germans will much care whether the French establish a republic, re-establish Napoleon, or set up a Bourbon. It is a question which of the three things will be done. Certain it is that Gambetta in insisting upon the exclusion of the Bonapartists, Bourbons, etc., from the elections, fears that a perfectly free election may destroy the hopes of a republic.

What condition of things the present month may develop in France it is impossible for man to know beforehand. The French are impulsive and excitable, and the conditions of peace are hard and humiliating to a proud people. Of course every member of the Assembly will understand that to resume the war might and very likely would be to invite not only the dismemberment but annihilation of France. To provide for possible contingencies King William is making fresh levies. Thus strengthened, the German armies will be able to subdue the country to the very utmost in a comparatively short time. It is impossible to say with any degree of certainty whether peace upon humiliating terms, or complete destruction lies immediately before a country and a people which only a short time since were felt to be the masters of Europe. L. C. T.

Declined Articles.

Some persons seem to think a free paper must insert every article sent, no matter how absurd and unscriptural the sentiments contained therein.

One wishes to prove that prophecy is conditional, thus unsettling all grounds of faith in anything future, not accepting the coming of the kingdom of God on earth.

Another wishes to show that the kingdom of God did come eighteen hundred years ago, notwithstanding the prophetic word places that event in the time of the divided state of the old Roman empire, and at or after that "beast is slain, and its body destroyed and given to the burning flame."

Still another wishes to make it out that the saints sleeping in the dust of the earth will not be awakened at the coming of Christ from heaven, nor till some indefinite period afterwards, notwithstanding the testimony of the Bible that "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise," etc.

Yet another wonders why we cannot admit articles that advocate the claims of a certain individual as being the veritable "Elijah that was to come"; yet that individual has made numerous predictions which have been proved erroneous and an utter failure.

We might name other topics we are called upon to introduce into the Herald of Life, because "it is a free paper," which would entitle it to the name of Babel, instead of a free paper. Persons who wish such topics discussed should establish a paper without an editor, and direct the compositor to put into it whatever came to hand: then they would have what they call "a free paper." Let them try the experiment. There are some topics, that originate in speculative brains, which the Herald of Life has excluded, and probably will continue to exclude.

Man's Wisdom Foolishness:

or, the Papal Blasphemy Indorsed.

Rev. E. O. Haven, D. D., L. L. D., President of the Northwestern University, will deliver the last Lecture in the Course at Concert Hall this (Tuesday) evening, January 31st. Subject—"Soul a Positive Entity."

Tickets for Reserved Seats for sale at Goulds & Fischer's Piano Rooms, 923 Chesnut street.

Seeing the above advertisement, we concluded from the known ability of the speaker we should have something positive as to the nature of the soul as an entity. We, therefore, attended the lecture, if possible to settle the question forever. And to our surprise the speaker tried hard to play around and away from the subject.

After reviewing one class of what he calls, "Idiotic Psychologists," "who believe there is no such thing as matter; that the whole universe is soul;" and then another class of men of physical science, who deny the soul is an entity; it is a mere quality; it is secondary, not primary; it could not exist without a brain, and therefore a brain must have existed before there was any mind: the brain grows without any mind behind it."

Here is where we expected to hear the proof that a soul entity could think, act, and develop thought without an organization, or independent of it; but, alas, we heard nothing of the kind. He said:

"This theory recognizes no distinction in kind between the rock and the geologist who studies it; between the metal and the chemist who refines it; between the shell and the conchologist: the flower and the botanist; the sun or star and the astronomer; the dead carcass and the anatomist; the earth and the man who travels upon it.

"There is nothing in the world but matter. Matter can exist in solid, liquid, and gaseous forms: it can whistle in the wind, glitter in the sunshine, blossom in the flower, smite in the lightning; it can also develop into insect life, animal life, and finally, by an irrepressible energy, all meaner and weaker forms disappearing, crop out into all the varieties of animals, including even man, with all his passions, knowledge, powers, hopes, religions, and ambitions.

"When Huxley says there is no mind,
There is no mind in what he says."

Then we came to the Bible argument, and our hope began to revive, supposing we should receive something worthy of the man, and here it is; read it carefully and be converted from your folly of believing that out of Christ and away from God we are only animal.

"The Bible recognizes soul as an entity. It assumes this as it assumes also the existence of God. It does not attempt to prove either, nor does it condescend to assert either, but both are assumed. They are, indeed, the invisible, ever-present framework on which the whole structure is built. Some have maintained that the Old Testament does not teach immortality! Poor, feeble-minded, and blind literalists! Would they have had the inspired writers of the Old Testament imitate children who, when drawing pictures on their slates, write under them, 'This is a house,' 'This is a horse?' Must God be under the necessity of saying again and again, 'This being is immortal?'

"Did not God say, 'Let us create man in our own image'? But can a mortal mass of matter, however curiously wrought, be in the image of the Eternal Spirit? Did Jehovah manifest himself in the early ages to brutes? Did He select a mere animal, Abraham, to be the father of a chosen herd of animals? Were the sublime utterances of the prophets and the psalmist the brayings of beasts? Moses was skilled in all the wisdom of Egypt, but the Egyptians and all other ancient nations believed in immortality. Were God's people alone ignorant of this greatest truth?

"If this great truth was 'brought to light in the Gospel,' it was only as life and duty and 'prayer and religious experience' are brought to light by the superior illumination shed upon them in the teachings and example of Christ and his apostles, and in the more definite religious experience vouchsafed in these latter times.' Body and soul are both recognized in the Bible; the existence of neither is asserted. It would be no more absurd to state that the Bible teaches atheism than to assert that it teaches materialism."

Mr. Haven says, the Bible recognizes the soul as an entity. Why did he not give us the evidence so that we might examine it? He says, "it assumes this, as it assumes also the existence of God. It does not attempt to prove either." We are agreed in one thing with our Br. Haven, the Bible does not attempt to prove the soul as an entity. Good, my brother. I thank you for the admission; we hope many of your Methodist brethren will profit by your acknowledgment. "Nor does the Bible assert either." Stop; not so fast. When God appeared unto Jacob in Bethel He said, "I am the God of Bethel."—Gen. xxxi. 13. And on many other occasions, God gave visible manifestations of his existence and his presence. Can our brother give us one to prove the existence of the entity which he calls soul? "Did not God say let us make man in our image?" Yes, but He did not say, let us make an entity in our image: but man; and "God breathed into his nostrils," (an entity?) No. "He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Moses gives more argument and truth in one verse on this subject than the celebrated Dr. Haven in one whole hour's discourse.

"But, can a mortal mass of matter however curiously organized in the image of the Eternal Spirit?" The Bible says, "So God created man," (not the entity) "in his image, in the image of God created he him; male and female" (entity?) created them." Now Dr. Haven may endeavor to blindfold himself and his audience; but the naked fact stands out in the Bible, that in the image of God made he them, male and female, made he them; and we believe it. "Did he select a mere animal Abraham to be the father of a chosen herd of animals? were the sublimest utterances of the prophets and the Psalmist, the braying of beasts?" We rather expected, something more sublime from Dr. Haven. But as humiliating as the fact is, or may be to the Doctor, Paul says the first man was an animal, and if we ever attain to any thing above an animal man, we must become united to the spiritual man, the second Adam, or we will be found in that company of which Peter speaks, "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, etc., shall utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Peter, ii. 12.

The Dr.'s argument, or question reminds us of one used some 30 years ago, when we first embraced the Life views in their incipient state. A D.D. of the Baptist church, asked us why we did not go and preach the gospel to hogs and other animals? Our answer was that God had only commanded us to go and preach to the animal man; and as we did not wish to run before we were sent we would wait until God commissioned us.

"Moses was skilled in all the wisdom of Egypt; but the Egyptians and all other nations believed in immortality. Were God's people alone, ignorant of this greatest truth"? No: God's people knew more about it than any of the nations of which you speak; and Paul says, they, the twelve tribes, looked for the realization of immortality by the resurrection of the dead; which the Dr. seems to ignore altogether, and bases immortality upon an immortal entity.

"If this great truth was brought to light in the Gospel, it was only as life and duty and prayer," etc. This is something so vague that there is no life in it. The Gospel brings life and immortality to light by the resurrection from the dead, and not by the revelation of a living entity.

"But, body and soul are both recognized in the Bible." Yes: and so is spirit; and it takes the whole three to make a man, neither are the man; neither can exist alone.

"Body and soul are both recognized in the Bible: the existence of neither is asserted." The Dr. is evidently trying to evade the question. No one denied the existence of the body or the soul; the proof is unnecessary. Paul and the Bible writers knew they had a body, and soul, and spirit. The only question with them was, What constituted immortality? Paul and his collegues said, it consisted of a future life by the resurrection from the dead. Dr. E. O. Haven says, it consists of a positive entity, called the soul.

It was presumed that a great body of the people deny it and the Dr.'s lecture was made up of assumptions without the proof. We may say more hereafter. Jacob Grim.

Philadelphia, Feb., 1871.

Letters and Extracts.

From Daniel Clow.

Br. Storrs: Happy am I, indeed, to hear that you are up again, and at work. I could hardly believe that the good Lord would snatch you from the sorrowing household of faith, just as we are about to enter into the empire of glory. I do not know, indeed, that it would make any difference with you or with us, in the general issue, but I do most sincerely believe that it would make a vast difference with us in the work of preparation. We need your counsel, your advice, your aid and assistance. We have been vastly benefitted by your labors. Nay, we feel the weight of eternal gratitude to God, for the light that radiates through the Herald, and the nerve that God has given you and others to resist the sneers of the brainless multitude, whose silly conduct is only equalled by the lust of the flesh, the pride of life, and the deep-rooted moral corruption that permeates every branch of society. But why should I complain, when these are signs of the approaching judgment? when we are admonished that the God-forsaken church, and drunken world would be "eating and drinking together, even as they were when the waters swept them all away," and when the wrath of an offended God was poured out upon the cities of the plain, in liquid fire and brimstone.

Dear Br., I do most sincerely believe that you and I will live to see the blessed Jesus coming "in like manner" as he went away. Nay, I believe that the sixth vial will soon be poured out upon "the great river Euphrates;" that we will soon hear of a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, between the Turkish and Persian empires (kings of the East), and that events will follow, in quick succession, so startling, that we may go forth boldly to meet the Bridegroom, even into the broad ways, and in the open fields.

Has not Babylon fallen? Did not her plagues come in one day? Has not death and mourning followed? Are not the "kings of the earth" sympathizing with her? But mark you, they are standing afar off, "and none will help her." The merchants of these things (the priests) which were made rich by her, are they not standing afar off, weeping and wailing? Are we not eye-witnesses of their great distress in every part of the world? Mass meetings are called to express their indignation, and to utter their anathemas against Victor Emanuel, in all the large cities of the land, and a wailing is heard, that was never heard before. But she is to be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her.

Janesville, Wis., Jan. 25, 1871.

From B. J. Burnett.

Br. Storrs: I am filled with peace and comfort as I write, because of so many mercies bestowed in the past, and continued through unto the present; also because of my hope; a hope it is that will not be long delayed.

My Brother: It hath pleased the Lord to allow that I should be afflicted by the paralysis of the active nerve on my left side, for nearly the year past. This I accept as renewing the evidence that I am a son; and "if a son," etc., then our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Now I wish you to know that about twenty-eight years since, "the grace of God that bringeth salvation," brought me from a theatrical life to hear this gospel of the kingdom from your own lips. By this word I was begotten, and in due time brought forth by the Spirit that giveth life in Christ. This was the Lord's doings I know. But still I must respect His instrument; and as such I have unceasingly cherished you in my remembrance.

This I believe is all new to Br. Storrs, for I had intended to defer saying these things until that time of meeting on the river-bank, where there will be ample leisure to explain from what depth of pollution grace can reach a sinner. But as it is, there will be many more there to congratulate you, on that day, who will greatly excel in brightness over poor unworthy me, in your "crown of rejoicing."

Now, beloved, you may just commence an approximation of how good the Lord hath been, and is still unto me, when I tell you that for forty-six years He gave me almost a continuation of health, and a mind to labor for the bread that perisheth, and that even now I am still living on His bounty from day to day. Hence it is that of this bounty I now inclose this mite, as an earnest to indicate a will on my part to help on the Herald of Life; please accept it as such, and be instant in prayer for the church, and that will reach this penitent sinner.

Yours, hoping on, in that blessed hope.

Mount Vernon, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

It will be seen by the date of the foregoing that it was written just at the time we were confined to our bed by our late sickness, and we never saw it till this month came in. We rejoice that our brother is trusting in the Lord still. If we have been the means of good to him, let God have all the glory, whose we are with all our power to do good to any one.

From Eld. E. B. Taft.

Br. Thorne: My health has been such, for over four years, that I have not felt it to be safe to tax my mind to much extent in mental effort. I then had a severe turn of the typhoid fever, attended with a relapse which brought on symptoms of softening of the brain. This has been a sore trial, and has kept me, in a measure, out of work that I love to do. I have done what I could in circulating our works on the Life theme; and in private conversation have aimed to improve every opportunity to set forth the true light. At different times, within this period, I have attempted public speaking, but it was attended with injury to my health, on nearly every occasion. Sister Shafer has been active to assist in distributing our valuable works on the Life theme. She has been an active member of the Baptist Church for over twenty years. She rejoices much in the truth since some of those things (dark) connected with modern theology, have been removed by the comparative recent illuminations evolving from God's holy moral.

May health, wisdom and guidance be given you in your arduous work, is my earnest prayer.

Br. Storrs' is so advanced in years that his recovery will naturally be slow, at best. His case is anxiously and prayerfully watched by God's faithful ones in our interest.

Very truly, your brother in Christ.

Stockton, Cal., Jan. 8, 1871.

From Helen Robertson.

Br. Storrs: The "doomed capital" of France talks of capitulating, if she has not already done so. Truly she is in torment, and has no rest day nor night. She has been a popular city. She has glorified herself and lived deliciously. By her fashions have all nations been deceived, and they have courted her friendship, and professed friendship for her in return. But where have those her friends been in this her hour of torment and humiliation? Where has England, her former ally, been? Where have been those merchants, who have waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies? And all those traders by sea? We ask, where? Let the word of God answer: "The merchants of those which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing and saying, Alas, alas, that great city,—that was decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!" "In one hour is so great riches come to nought."

How literally that Scripture is being fulfilled at present. How they have stood afar off for the fear of her torment and bewailed their idol city, but none have gone to her rescue.

What will be next we can't tell; but let us be ready, with our lamps trimmed and burning, to open immediately when the Master appears. We are not in darkness that that day should come upon us as a thief.

New York, Jan. 29, 1871.

From Thomas J. Harris.

Br. Storrs: I am very glad to hear that your health is improving and that there is every probability that you will remain with us and instruct us in spiritual things for some time yet. You are only about one year older than myself, (I am 70 and you are 71 *) and I feel as if I might have strength to last to fourscore; or at least, see the great celebration of American Independence in 1876. But however this may be, I have no great desire to live much longer in this sinful and perverse generation; but yet I have no desire to die and go to corruption, for I do not believe

"That corruption earth and worms
Shall yet refine this flesh,
Till my triumphant spirit come,
And puts it on afresh."

Neither have I any great desire to live so long until I become helpless and have to depend on some one else to take care of me. I rather wish to be among those that will be changed from mortal to immortality "at the last trump;" for there are signs there is no mistaking, that proclaim Messiah near; the city of the nations (Rev. xvi. 19) is about to fall, and great Babylon will soon follow; so we can lift up our hearts and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh.

I enclose ten dellars to pay my subscription for the present volume of the Herald of Life.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1871.

* We were 74 in December last.—Editor.

David Stanway, Excelsior, Mo., writes: Myself and wife enjoy reading the Herald of Life very much, and trust our heavenly Father will bless you in all your labors; restore you to health and strength again, that you may gladden the hearts of the brethren by your words of counsel and love. Yours in hope of a resurrection.

One of the numerous guide-books for the French soldiers in Germany contains "a prayer for soldiers in war time," in which occurs the following devout sentence: "Forget not thou good God! that in aiding France thou defendest at the same time Thy Holy Church, whose eldest daughter is France!"

Appointments.

Middletown, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 12.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Feb. 19.

Providence, R. I., (Richmond Hall), Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

Concord, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

Manchester, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

Wm. Stuart.

Elder Geo. W. Brown, of Orrington, Me., will hold a series of meetings in the Advent Church, in Eatontown, N. J., commencing Wednesday evening, Feb. 8, and holding over the following Sunday. S. W. Bishop.

Springfield, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 19.

Northfield, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 26.

Hartford, Conn., Sunday, March 5.

Meriden, Conn., Sunday, March 12.

Geo. W. Brown.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Feb. 12.

W. S. Campbell.

Business Department

Cash Receipts.

One dollar each from—D. W. Curtiss, N. O. Coates, T. R. Lawrence, J. Whaley.

Two dollars each from—W. F. Gardner, Mrs. Lucy Gates, Matilda Hillstream, J. H. Brayton, Mrs. Barbara Lawhead, Andrew Jackson, Dr. G. E. Putney, D. E. Goodenough, Milton Barmore.

Various sums—H. M. Jones, $1 50; Lyman Minton, $1 50; Mrs. C. C. Williams, $5; H. N. Hazard, $1 50; Allen Login, $5 received in the time last; John S. Smith, $3.

Papers Sent Since Last Issue.

Mrs. C. C. Williams, Rev. T. R. Lawrence, La Fayette Norris, Stewart Carlisle.

If We Knew.

If we knew the woe and the heartache
 Waiting for us down the road,
If our lips could taste the wormwood,
 If our back could feel the load,
Would we waste the day in wishing
 For a time that ne'er can be;
Would we wait in such impatience
 For our ships to come from sea?

If we knew the baby fingers,
 Pressed against the window-pane,
Would be cold and stiff to-morrow—
 Never trouble us again—
Would the bright eyes of our darling
 Catch the frown upon our brow,
Would the print of rosy fingers
 Vex us then as they do now?

Ah! these little ice-cold fingers,
 How they point out memories back
To the hasty words and actions
 Strewn along our worldly track!
How those little hands remind us,
 As in snowy grace they lie,
Not to scatter thorns—but roses—
 For our reaping by and by.

Strange we never prize the music,
 Till the sweet-voiced bird has flown;
Strange that we should slight the violets,
 Till the lovely flowers are gone;
Strange that summer sky and sunshine
 Never seems one half so fair,
As when winter's snowy pinions
 Shake their white down in the air!

Lips from which the seal of silence
 None but God can roll away;
Never blossomed in such beauty
 As adorns the mouth to-day;
And sweet words that freight our memory
 With their beautiful perfume,
Come to us in sweeter accents,
 Through the portals of the tomb.

Let us gather up the sunbeams
 Lying all around our path;
Let us keep the wheat and roses,
 Casting out the thorns and chaff:
Let us find our sweetest comfort
 In the blessings of to-day,
With a patient hand removing
 All the briers from our way.

—Selected by E. C. M. B.

Christ as King is yet to be Revealed.

BY ELD. J. B. COOK.

He "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom."—2 Tim. iv. 1; Acts xvii. 31; x. 42; John v. 22–27; Matt. xxv. 31. "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ."—Rom. ii. 12–16; 2 Cor. v. 10; 2 Thess. i. 7–10; 1 Pet. 4, 5. "Therefore judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come."—1 Cor. iv. 3–5. "The law, the prophets and the Psalms" (endorsed by Christ, Luke xxiv. 44), so pronounce. In about nine-tenths of all prophecy the mind is borne on to this "day of Christ" in triumphant majesty; to "judge, deliver and reign in righteousness—to execute justice and judgment in the earth."—Psa. xcviii.; Jer. xxxiii. 9–16; Rom. xi. 26; Matt. xvii. 20; Acts iii. 21; Psa.l xxii.

His first advent, death, resurrection and intercession are essential, and yet so many preparatory steps toward "the great and appearing day of the Lord"—Acts vii. 20; 2 Pet. iii. 8–10.

The types give the most demonstrative forms (outlines or) "shadows of good things to come."—Heb. viii. to x. The yearly sacrifices of atonement were "a remembrance of sins every year," till "the one offering of Christ."—Heb. x. 1–12. So the mediation of the Old Covenant is an illustration—a Remembrance—of the greater mediation of "the Everlasting Covenant" by Christ. (This "Everlasting Covenant" occurs thirteen times).

I. Moses sanctified the people, after having judged Egypt, their oppressor, and delivered them, that they might become God's covenant nation and kingdom, and said, "Be ready against the third day; for the third day the Lord will come down in the presence of all the people."—Ex. xix. 10–15.

II. Moses went up into the mount to God—waited six days; and on the seventh day the Lord spoke to him.—Ex. xxiv. 16.

III. Moses received the two tables of testimony—the terms by which they agreed to become God's people, and He their God.—Ex. xxxi. 18. "After the tenor of these words have I made a covenant with Israel."—Ex. xxxiv. 27.

IV. Moses who was "a God unto Pharaoh," who "spake and it was done," in the plagues on Egypt, and in dividing the Red Sea, and providing food for the millions of Israel—"was King in Jeshurun." He sat "to judge the people."—Ex. xviii. 16–19; Deut. xxxiii. 5. He was invested with authority. It was under God, a supreme or sovereign authority to "judge" the Gentile oppressors, to give law to Israel, to be their "King" to administer the government under that covenant over them. This was the incipient stage of that typical kingdom that fills so large a page in the world's past history.

All the above, so imperfectly noted, and far more, finds its anti-type in "the Gospel" announcement of "the Mediator of the New and Everlasting Covenant."—Jer. xxxi. 31; Ezek. xxxvii. 26; Luke i. 70–73; Heb. vi. 13–18; viii. 8–12; xiii. 20.

The Anti-type.—The Mediator of the New Covenant is announced as a "Son over his own house."—Heb. iii. 1–6. And hence having more glory than Moses, and as a greater Priest than Aaron, and a greater King than David; "a Priest after the order of Melchisedeck, King of Salem." Of course this crowning point in the type, this climax of Messiah's official career as Mediator, remains to appear in his royal achievements as "the King of kings."Rev. xix. 11–20; Psa. lxxii. 16–18; Dan. vii. 14; Rev. xx. 3–7. Deprived of this "Majesty, shown (in the kingdom) in the holy mount," he would be divested of his crowning mediatorial prerogatives and character—like Samson shorn of his locks; like Napoleon at Sedan!

But not so: the type must not be bi-sected, nor the Anti-typical Mediator despoiled of his royal Priesthood. Uncrowned or dethroned, Christ could not mediate the New Covenant, as proposed in both Testaments. Those who would "withdraw" him at the critical juncture before us, would reduce the Anti-typical Mediator below that set forth in Moses the type; below the dignity of David and Solomon; and so annul the whole. But that cannot be. Our Mediator has gone (like Moses in the mount) to the right hand of God. Whence he will apper the second time to complete his mediation of the better Covenant, and judge and govern and bless (with his Bride, the Church) to the boundless, endless measure of God's good will to Israel and the nations.—Rom. xv. 8–13; Gen. xxii. 18.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb., 1871.

The Restitution.—No. 2.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

"Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things."—Acts iii. 21.

Restitution is the act of restoring a thing to its former state or condition.

The original condition of the thing to be restored, determines what its condition will be when it is restored.

The restitution, in our text, is a subject of so much importance that God hath spoken of it, by the mouth of all the holy prophets, since the world began. To understand this subject we must know what is to be restored. If we make a mistake on this point, our conclusions must be wrong. Let us therefore inquire, what is to be restored?

To this I answer: The world, sometimes called the kingdom. I will show, first, that the world, and the kingdom are the same thing at any given period in its history. By the world I mean the earth, with its inhabitants. This world is sometimes called the kingdom. The world that was made when the Lord created the heaven and the earth, was the kingdom that was prepared "from the foundation of the world."—Gen. i. 1; Matt. xxv. 34. The Lord did not make the world, and the kingdom besides, but the world and the kingdom were exactly the same thing. The world wherever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, was the kingdom that was given to Nebuchadnezzar. At that time the world and the kingdom were the same.—Dan. ii. 37.

The world, where all people, nations and languages dwell under the whole heaven, will be the kingdom that will be given to him that comes with the clouds of heaven, and to the saints.—Dan. vii. 14, 27. The world and the kingdom will be the same just before it is given to Christ. The world where the wheat and tares grow is the kingdom out of which will be gathered all things that offend, and them that do iniquity.—Matt. xiii. 41. They are the same. The world to come is the kingdom under the reign of Christ.—Heb. ii. 5, i. 8.

Again: The world that is called the new heaven and earth, where the river of life flows, and on the banks of which the tree of life grows, and where the nations live who have been healed by the leaves of the tree of life, this world is the kingdom over which Christ and the saints will reign forever and ever.—Rev. xxi. 7 and 22; 2 to 5. The passages to which I have referred are all of universal application. The world and the kingdom, in every instance cover exactly the same ground, and therefore mean the same thing.

In the examination of this subject, when I use the term "world," I mean as really the kingdom; and when I use the word kingdom, I mean as really the world. The world is called at different periods of its history by different names, such as the kingdom of Babylon, of the Medes and Persians, of Greece, of Rome, and of our Lord and his Christ, but it is the same world, the same kingdom under different rulers.

The world that is now under the curse is the thing that will be restored to its former uncursed condition. And the Lord saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good. This includes the earth, with its inhabitants. After Adam had sinned, the Lord said unto him: Because thou hast done this, cursed is the ground for thy sake; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee. In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life, till thou return to the ground; for out of it thou wast taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. This curse covers all that was called good. It includes the earth, with its inhabitants. The world that was good is now in a bad condition. It now needs restitution.

God has provided for its restitution. He has given assurance of it by all the prophets since the world began. He promised to Abraham that all the nations of the earth shall be blessed, instead of being cursed, as now. This will remove the curse. To Moses he said: As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with my glory. This will remove the curse. To David he said: All nations shall serve him and glorify his name. This will restore the world. To Isaiah he said: The wolf, the lamb, the leopard, the kid, the calf, the fatling, the cow, the lion, the asp, and the cockatrice shall live together in peace. Little children shall lead them, and play with them, and they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. This will restore the whole world. To Zachariah He said: The Lord shall be king over all the earth. It is the whole earth, with all that live upon it, that is to be affected by the restitution.

In the New Testament the testimony is of the same character. The gospel is the glad tidings of the kingdom. The Lord is to gather out of the kingdom all things that offend, and subdue all things unto God. The kingdom of the world is to become his. The will of God will be done in it as it is done in heaven, and then there shall be no more curse in it. These promises are all equivalent to a restitution.

The thing to be destroyed, then, is the whole world that now lieth in wickedness. It is the kingdom, including all people, nations and languages under the whole heaven.

This world includes all the things which have been spoken by the mouth of all the prophets. It includes all that is said of restoring the kingdom to Israel. But as the kingdom of Israel never existed free from the curse, so it can be restored only to its former condition. The restoration of the kingdom to Israel will be preparatory to the restitution of all things.

Let us be glad and rejoice, and praise the Lord that he has purposed the restitution of the whole world to its former uncursed condition.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec., 1870.

"It was Winter."

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

It is urged by some who are familiar with the climate of Palestine, that shepherds watch their flocks by night in the open plain, in the month of December, the cold making it necessary to watch flocks, especially at that time. This fact is insisted upon to justify the conclusion that Christ was born in December. If there were arrangements for housing sheep (which is a matter of question), then this, after all, is not very plausible. If December was as cold in Palestine as in Southern Europe, or the same latitude in our country, it is not natural to suppose that Joseph and Mary took lodgings in a stable on the night of the 24th, that Jesus might be born in a manger, when they went up to be registered for taxation.

Palestine was a mountainous country, a little north of the equator. The days and nights were so near of a length that the Hebrews began the day at six o'clock, evening, the year round; and yet some portion of it, at least, was so far north of the equator that they had winter and snow. There was "snow in Salmon," also in Lebanon, at certain periods of the year.

It was common to have fires for warming, as late as the middle of April, for Peter, at the time of our Saviour's crucifixion, stood and warmed himself in the hall by a fire of coal.

Dr. Barclay says: "On one occasion only, the thermometer, under favorable exposure, was only 28 degrees. Relics of ice an eighth of an inch thick, remained in the shade the whole day. January is, decidedly, the coldest month in the year. One might not think the climate uniform when the snow-capped Lebanon, and the Arabian desert are contrasted."

In Palestine they have two seasons, summer and winter. The winter was marked. In the gospel it is said, (John x. 22, 23), "And it was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication; and it was winter; and Jesus walked in Solomon's porch." An apostle "hoped to come before winter." It was a severe season. "Pray that your flight be not in the winter." It was wet in winter with some snow, and snowy days. 1 Chron. xi. 22: "Benaiah . . . went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day."

I close with the promise in Zech.: "It shall come to pass that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem, . . . in summer and in winter shall it be."

Soon may those looking for redemption rejoice in the departure of the "winter of our discontent," and the installation of the "voice of song." Look at Cant. ii. 11.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan, 1871.

A Conscientious Quaker.

David Davis, one of the early citizens of Lewiston, Maine, now gone to his reward, was a most excellent Quaker—a man of unspotted integrity. Some time before his death, he went to his son-in-law, A. Wakefield, Esq., and said to him: "I hear there's a pasture for sale (naming it) for $100; and I believe I'll buy it." He bought it, but told the owner it was worth $125, and paid the owner that sum for it. Shortly after, the person of whom Mr. D. bought the pasture wanted a loan of $40, and Mr. Davis granted him the loan, taking his note for that sum. Before long, Mr. Davis was taken ill, and feeling that it was his last illness he called Mr. Wakefield to his bedside, and said to him:

"I have a note for $40 against Mr. A., and I want thee, after I am gone, to destroy it."

Mr. W. wondering and asking an explanation, he said:

"Thee knows I bought that pasture of Mr. A., and I didn't pay him as much as it was worth, and I don't feel that he ought to pay me that note."

"But," said Mr. W., "you paid him all and more than he asked for the land."

"Yes," said Mr. Davis, "that is true, but it makes no difference—it's worth $40 more than I paid him, and I want that note destroyed."

Shortly after Mr. Davis passed away, and Mr. Wakefield in the performance of his duty as administrator, looking up the deceased's effects, came upon this note. It was a good note for $40, but in accordance with the good old Quaker's dying request, he threw it into the fire.

Not long afterwards, Mr. A., of whom the pasture was bought, called on Mr. Wakefield.

"You've got something against me, haven't you?"

"What for?" said Mr. W.

"I gave a note to Mr. Davis for $40, money borrowed of him, and I want to pay it."

"I have no such note," said Mr. W.

"But this estate certainly holds such a note against me."

"I can't help it—we've none now."

Very soon Mr. Wakefield explained the mystery, and tears rolled down the astonished man's face as he learned that the note had been burned—a witness to the wonderful conscientiousness and integrity of the sure-footed Quaker, one of the worthy first settlers of Lewiston. Such men will do for any age—the more the better.—Selected.

Respect for Christianity.

For the purpose of illustrating the secret respect which is entertained by infidels for a pure and consistent Christianity, we relate the following incident. It may serve to show that a testimony, which under ordinary circumstances would be studiously witheld, may by the force of circumstances be extorted.

In a certain town resided two gentlemen of high professional standing, but of infidel principles. In habits of the closest intimacy, they encouraged each other, not only in determined opposition to the spread of religion, but in the most profane mockery of its doctrines, institutions and tendencies. A third individual in the town, likewise possessing influence, but of truly Christian character, was the principal object of their profane jests. They pretended to hold his religion in utter contempt, and often made merry in ridiculing his superstition and fanaticism. How sincere and hearty they were in trusting their own principles may be learned from the sequel.

In the course of time one of them was attacked by a fatal disease, and died without any happy change in his religious views. On opening his will, it was ascertained that he had entrusted the settlement of his estate to the pious man, and that the infidel friend was not mentioned as an executor. This action spoke loudly of his distrust of infidel principles, and of his secret confidence in those of Christianity. He could not rely on the honesty of his boon companion, but he had no fear of the integrity of the man whose religion he had been accustomed to ridicule. We much mistake if every other infidel under similar circumstances, would not make a similar choice.—Sabbath Miscellany.

"I went out one day," says the pious John Newton, "to Mrs. G., just after she had lost all her fortune; I could not be surprised to find her in tears: but she said, 'I suppose you think I am crying for my loss: but that is not the case. I am now weeping that I should feel so much uneasiness on the account.' After that I never heard her speak on this subject as long as she lived.

"This is just as it should be. Suppose a man was going to York to take possession of a large estate, and his chaise should break down a mile before he got to the city, which obliged him to walk the rest of the way; what a fool we would think him if we saw him wringing his hands and blubbering out all the remaining mile, 'My chaise is broken! my chaise is broken!'"

A Christian wrestles, and yet prevails. and though yielding himself unworthy of the least blessing he enjoys, yet, Jacob-like, he will not let him go without a new blessing. He sometimes thinks himself to have no grace at all, and yet how poor and afflicted soever he be besides, he would not change conditions with the most prosperous man under heaven, that is a manifest worldling.—Bacon.

Children's Department.

The Frozen Regions.

Away, many, many miles to the North of us, lies a country where winter always reigns, where ice and snow are always found, and summer never comes. No beautiful spring or summer, with lovely flowers, soft balmy breezes, green grass and singing birds, gladden the hearts of the people who inhabit this icy land. One-half of the year is day, the other half is night. The sun does uot rise and set as with us; he never reaches the meridian, nor gives but little warmth from his rays.

The Esquimaux live in houses built of blocks of snow which they call igloos. They dress in furs, and live upon the flesh of the walrus, the seal, and the bear.

Rough and untutored as are these brown sons and daughters of the Frigid Zone, yet they have some thought for the hereafter, and of a power greater than their own which reigns supreme. They believe that after death they are transported to an island in the Southern sea where they shall dwell, and where cold nor hunger shall ever reach them, and if they are good they will be rewarded by an abundance of fish and meats, and they may eat as much as they desire. But if they have not done right while in this present state of existence, they will be punished by not being permitted to enjoy these good things.

Many attempts have been made to explore these regions, and discover if possible a passage around America by sea.

There is every reason to believe that as early as 1135, the entrance to what is now called Wellington Channel was reached by ships. Admiral Frobisher, of Queen Elizabeth's navy, made one of the first efforts to find this passage. He with three vessels left England on the 11th of July, 1576. When passing Greenwich, the Queen stood on the terrace, and waving her handkerchief, bade them "God speed." On they went, ill fitted to encounter the danger of Arctic navigation, and ignorant of the way except from reports and such aid as geographical science always has been able to give. He sighted the east coast of Greenland, then was driven by the wind to the south-west, finally reaching latitude 63° in the straits now bearing his name. He returned to England with specimens which were taken for gold, and the result was, several expeditions were sent out for the double purpose of discovery and speculation.

Baffin succeeded in traversing the now desolated shores of Greenland as far north as 77°. The next explorer was Fox, followed by Capt. James, Mackenzie, Cook, Ross and Parry. In 1825 Parry's third voyage of discovery was made. In 1829 Capt. John Ross set out on his second voyage. For three years Ross and his party were frozen in the ice. They had to abandon the ship at last, and took their boats and provisions on sledges, making their way back to Lancaster Sound, and finally reached a whale ship, which took them back to England. Sir John Franklin started from England on his third and last voyage in 1845. Picked officers and men formed his crew. Beside having orders for the course of his voyage discretionary powers were given him, and whatever would lead to the great object in view was to be attempted. Once they were heard from in the north of Baffin's Bay, and then for two or three years more, all was silence concerning them. In 1848, J. C. Ross (a nephew of Capt. John Ross), was sent out with three ships to search for them. In 1850, there was a goodly array of vessels sent to seek for and find if possible those who were lost. No expense was spared, the most rigid economist could find no voice to be raised in opposition. Away they went by the long route around Cape Horn, and through Behring's Straits, but without success.

All that has to a great certainty yet crowned the great efforts is the finding of a few personal effects of Franklin and his men. Parts of watches, knives, forks and spoons may be seen at the Museum of the Seaman's Home at Greenwich; they are believed to have belonged to the lost ones.

Will their remains yet be discovered? Or will their fate still be a sealed mystery, and only be revealed in the last day's revelation?

America joined in the noble work, and searched as gallantly and as perseveringly as if the lost men had been her own. Since that time the stars and stripes have been carried far into that icy-bound country by Kane, Hays and Hall. Will the open Polar Sea which is believed to exist ever be discovered, and by whom? Geologists feel almost assured from scientific discoveries which have been made, that this Frozen Region was once the Torrid Zone.

In this ever-changing world will it again become the land of the Tropics? Will tropical fruit and flowers flourish and bloom where now is eternal ice and snow?

Will the land of bloom and beauty vanish and become a sea of ice? One, and One alone knows the future.—The Children's Friend.

Bad Money.

Bill Dow was showing the boys a counterfeit ten-cent piece. "Oh, you don't know it is counterfeit," said Jem Drew.

"Yes, I do; father said it was," said Bill Dow.

"Well, you needn't know it," said Jem Drew. "Your father may be mistaken. I should go to that old peanut woman at the corner and spend it. Treat us, old fellow. She's half blind, and will never be the wiser for it."

"What an honest, honorable fellow you are, Jem Drew," cried little Asa Clicker. "That you call doing as you would be done by, do you?"

"Somebody passed it on Bill, and Bill does no more than keep it going," cried Jem; "come, Bill, give us some peanuts."

"No, sir," said Bill Dow, "I don't do that mean thing, I tell you. I do not intend to be dishonest in a little thing, then I never shall be caught being dishonest in great ones. Father says half the frauds, embezzlements, and bank robberies began in little dishonesties. They tunnel the way for a rush at last."

"Good for you, Bill!" cried Asa Clicker. "I believe in you."

Bill tossed the counterfeit ten cents into the river, and the boys stood on the bridge watching the eddies it made in the still water. "Let all bad money be sunk before it sinks us," said Asa.

"I shan't work; it is not the fashion to work. I mean to speculate," said one of a trio of boys, talking over their future.

"So do I," said another. "Make or break with a rush; that is the way I shall operate."

A wise man says that is a dark hour for any boy or young man, when he comes to the conclusion that there is any better way to get along in the world than by faithful, honest work. There is no better way, no surer way, depend upon it, than faithful, honest work; no other way to build up manly character and real independence.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of tae first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Edito of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander' of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it, and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	"
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 19.
WHOLE NUMBER 252.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

REV. N. D. GEORGE ON "ANNIHILATION."

REMARKS THEREON BY STEWART CARLISLE.

"BUT cannot kill the soul." This passage of Scripture is found on the title page of a work entitled "Annihilationism not of the Bible," written by the Rev. N. D. George, a Methodist preacher. The learned author quotes very freely from the writings of what he is pleased to call the "Annihilationists," and makes considerable effort to present their discrepancies as they exist among their writers, which is doubtless all right; but suppose both parties were called upon to reconcile existing differences between their authors, could the orthodox brethren show a record entirely harmonious? We answer, No. And why? Because "the doctrines of men" are the most inharmonious things under the sun; and to-day, while we are penning these lines, there goes out from the thousands of pulpits in our own and other lands, doctrines of men, which present to the ear of JEHOVAH a confusion, of which Babel was but a faint resemblance.

Our object, then, is not to reconcile differences among ourselves, nor to defend the writings or sayings of men, only so far as they may be found in harmony with the teachings of God's word. Br. George failing to find the doctrine of the immortality of the soul in the Old Testament, without the aid of the New, seems to conclude beyond a shadow of doubt that Matt. x. 28, furnishes positive proof of the doctrine in question: "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." He would have us understand, here, that "Christ teaches that man is a compound being, possessed of a material and an immaterial nature, or body, which can be killed by man, and an immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity, which cannot be killed by man." Does Br. George believe Joshua was a man? and that he smote with the edge of the sword, destroyed, or killed all the souls that were in Makkedah, in Libuah, in Lachish, in Eglon, in Hebron, in Debir, and all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings, he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed. Joshua x. Then they must have been breathing souls; and when God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, man became a breathing soul; and when a soul ceases to breathe it must cease to live. "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Psa. civ. 29. Then men can kill souls, and the Scriptures remain unbroken; and if we cannot understand this plain Bible truth, (though we be teachers or masters in theology) it is because our theories are not in harmony with the Bible, and never dreaming that human theories—especially ours—can be wrong, we set ourselves down to warp, twist and bend the whole Bible to suit our dogmas. This seems to be Br. George's difficulty; he has a theory that is nowhere taught in Scripture, and if he cannot make it work straightforward, he is bound to try it backward; and so not finding his favorite dogma in the Old Testament, he thinks he has it in Matt. x. 28; then arguing backwards, endeavors to prove that the Old Testament teaches his dogma all the way back to Gen. ii. 7. Now, where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world? "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, save the Spirit of God. Now, we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God, which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual things." 1 Cor. ii. 11, 12, 13. And if we possess the proper spiritual discernment we may be able thereby to "know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error."

Now with these facts before us, we shall proceed with spiritual comparison. In 1 Sam. xxv. 29 we read: "Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul; but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life, with the Lord thy God, and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he sling out, as out of the middle of a sling." Now could this man be said to seek the soul of David, if it was an "immaterial nature or soul, or distinct entity," beyond the reach or power of man to harm? Again: Why is it affirmed here that the soul of David should "be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God," while "the souls of his enemies shall he sling out," without regard to their future whereabouts? Why is it, that "man being in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish?" Why is it, that, "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain among the congregation of the dead?" Why is it, "that the soul that sinneth it shall die?" Why is it, that the "sons of men are beasts?" Why is it, "that the wicked shall be consumed like stubble fully dry?" And "be ashes under the soles of saints' feet?" Why is it, that "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise, but be as though they had not been?" Why is it, that "except they eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, they have no life in them?" Why is it, "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death?" Why is it, "to be carnally minded is death?" Why is it, "that they who sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption?" Why is it, "that they that do such things are worthy of death, and the end of these things is death?" The answer to all these questions is found in this single sentence, "For the wages of sin is death." "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." Sin kills, and the law keeps dead all who have not passed from death unto life, by a diligent application to the "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," to free them from the law and sting of death. "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh;" and like their first father, natural, earthy, and have no spiritual life whatever; "but as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed;" neither do they know any thing, "but what they know naturally as brute beasts." "They are earthy, sensual, devilish, and have not the spirit," and "they shall utterly perish in their own corruption;" and "never see light or life;" "but as drouth and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave them that sinned;" for "dust they are, and unto dust shall they return," and "be as though they had not been."

Yet, in the face of all these positive declarations of Divine truth, Br. George would tell us that these persons, in these passages, all possessed an "immortal nature, or soul, or distinct entity," that must be eternally in a conscious state of suffering. Well, if it affords him any comfort, or pleasure, or happiness, or adds any thing to his conceptions of the character of our loving Father in heaven, we shall leave him to the full enjoyment of his own thoughts. "Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men." "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned to fables." Now if the—Pagan fable—doctrine of the immortality of the soul—as perhaps nine-tenths of the teachers will this day declare it—be the truth, then to be in harmony with this teaching, the Bible should teach the same doctrine in plain and unequivocal language. Does the Bible so teach it? No, the Bible is as silent as death respecting it; and where silence reigns, the fabulous doctrines of men, with bold and intrepid tread, march in, and proclaim with trumpet blast, that man does possess an immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity, "that can never, never die." And yet in the case of the wicked they must die the death that never, never dies! Now if the "Spirit which is of God," by which "we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error," had taught this doctrine, we should most certainly believe it; but as it never taught it, we must leave it where it properly belongs, with the "Traditions of men." Men left to their education only prove the oft-repeated couplet, true

> "'Tis education forms the common mind,
> Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

Just commence in infancy to train a child that he is an immortal, and as he grows up keep it impressed on his mind, until he is of sufficient age to enter upon his college studies, then put in his hand the standard works of any denomination he may select; let him study them thoroughly, until he graduates with his diploma, and he will be prepared—as he thinks—to silence every tongue that may utter a word against that cherished dogma. Aye, even the most solemn utterances of Divine truth itself, must all bend and turn toward the object of his education; and nothing, "save the spirit which is of God," can ever open the eyes of his educational blindness, and show him as clear as the light of day, that "God only hath immortality;" and if men have any desire for it, they must, "by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality."

God, for wise reasons, long since determined that "no flesh should glory in his presence," because of any inherent immortality, or wisdom, or knowledge they possessed, as the offspring of a poor mortal man, "whose foundation is in the dust." And just here is the mistake of Br. George and his fellow-laborers, because the Son of God promises his people everlasting life, and assures them, that that life is beyond the power of man to destroy, and consequently they should not fear them that can kill the body—or destroy the life that now is—"but have no power to touch the life which is to come," they assume the responsibility of saying that that passage proves that man, even all men, possess an "immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity," that must live forever. Is this "separating the precious from the vile?" Is this "putting a difference between the clean and the unclean?" Is this "rightly dividing the word of truth?" Is this bearing the faithful message from God to men, when he says, "As I live, saith the LORD God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked?" or when he says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die!" Or does it look like "walking in craftiness, and handling the word of God deceitfully?" "Brethren we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." When the rich man whose goods had largely increased, said, "Soul that hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry," did he mean his "immaterial nature, or distinct entity?" Can "immateriality" eat and drink material things? And when God said unto him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," did he mean that the man should die, or that his "immaterial nature or distinct entity" should be "required of him?" Entity, or no entity, the universal belief is, that the man died. Again, when the blessed Jesus in the garden, was in agony, and said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death," did he mean himself, or an "immaterial entity?" Can an immaterial entity, by any possibility, die? When Peter, on the day of Pentecost, speaking of Christ, said that "His soul was not left in hell, neither did his flesh see corruption," did he wish to convey to the minds of his hearers, that Christ's "immaterial nature, or distinct entity," was in hell, while his flesh was in Joseph's tomb? If so, then where was the Christ? for, there is only "one Lord Jesus Christ," and he cannot be "divided." Jesus said, "Whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; but whosoever will lose his life, for my sake and the gospel's, shall find it. For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul," or life, as Dr. Adam Clarke assures us, the word soul is translated from the same original word as the word life in the preceding texts; and Br. George will not surely contradict the Dr.

In 1 Tim. iv. 8, Paul tells us that, "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Now this passage as it reads, and Dr. Clarke's exposition of the preceding one furnishes a key with which not only Matt. x. 28, but every other passage where the word occurs, may be easily unlocked, and its meaning readily apprehended. "The life that now is," is only mortal, and there are a variety of ways in which men may lose it. Man can kill the body, thus destroying the life which now is; "the life which is to come" is now "hid with Christ in God," beyond the reach and power of man to touch or destroy. "God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son;" and "when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." "For this is the will of my Father, which sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up, (not bring it down) but raise it up at the last day." Now this may not suit the wisdom of men, because it strikes a death-blow to their dogma of an "immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity," of which the Scriptures furnish us no account whatever.

Now would it be affirming too much for us to say, just here, that our Lord Jesus Christ is the "bundle," or sheaf, or first fruit of the immortal harvest of the redeemed; and that in this bundle, or sheaf is bound up the immortal life, or "the life which is to come," of every stalk however feeble; and when the harvest of the earth shall be reaped, and the tares are burned, will not the wheat be the perfect likeness of the original bundle, or sheaf? "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection?" Now will Br. George affirm that the wicked have the promise of the "life which is to come?" We think not. Then we affirm it boldly, and fearlessly, that wicked men are not now, nor ever will be, immortal; that they have no spiritual, immaterial, undying, or immortal entity in them; there is nothing in them but what man can kill. "They are like the chaff, which the wind driveth away;" and we do not deny the fact, Br. George, "that men have been killing souls ever since Cain killed Abel." "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam a quickening spirit." The first man Adam was only natural, the second man Christ, was spiritual; there was no promise given to the first Adam that he should live again. His promise was on this wise, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The promise given to the second Adam was as follows: "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." "He tasted death for every man." "And as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth whomsoever he will, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will."

"And if any man will save his life (by shrinking from persecution) he shall lose it; but if any man will lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, he shall have the life which is to come. For what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own life," and be cut off from the life which is to come. "Or what shall a man give in exchange for the life which is to come?" Then, "fear not them that kill the body, or destroy the life that now is, but cannot touch the life which is to come; but fear Him that is able to destroy both body and life in hell," and withold from you the life which is to come.

Such we understand to be the true teachings of Him who is "the way, the truth, and the life." Now we know that men are very apt to speak of life as though it were a continuity; they do not seem to even think of death as being the least interruption of life; if any thing it makes them more alive than they were before they died; but then men have many "strange notions, and have sought out many inventions," and are very poor guides to follow, unless they carry with them that word which "is as a lamp to their feet, and a light to their path." We must have the hammer of truth that breaks in pieces the rocks of error, and the fire shut up in our bones that makes us burn with holy zeal when we see our fellow-men beguiled by the wily serpent's lie. But what is this present life? "It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away."—James iv. 14. What, James? an immaterial nature, or distinct entity, "vanish away," like vapor? Certainly: "For as the body (or man) as a living soul without the breath (Marg.) is dead," so the finished work of sin is "death." He that gave, hath taken away their breath; "they die, and return to their earth," and they abide in that condition; nothing, save the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, can free man from (the dominion of) "the law of sin and death."

Our Br. George having assumed that Matt. x. 28 teaches that all men have an "immaterial nature, or distinct entity," proceeds to inform his readers that annihilationists teach the "serpent's lie," by saying that Adam did not die in the day that he ate of the forbidden fruit; he then informs us that "Adam lost the life of God out of his soul, and died a spiritual death in the day that he sinned;" (admitting this to be true) then when Adam lost the life of God out of his soul, he must have lost his immortality out of his soul; consequently he had nothing but mortal life left; and if spiritual death was the penalty of the law, and he suffered this death in the day he sinned, then why should his body be subject to death at all, for it was exempt from death in the day, and survived hundreds of years thereafter? This spiritual death theology was made to accommodate the immortal soul theory, and, of course, this piece of information is entirely gratuitous upon his part, for neither God, nor the serpent, nor Eve, nor Adam, ever uttered such a sentence as spiritual death; that is a forced conclusion, of a false premise.

When God said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," did he mean that the material Adam or the "immaterial nature, or distinct entity" of Adam should die? And as man was a "dual being," and God used the personal pronoun thou, which of the two did he address himself to? And was it the material Adam, or the "immaterial nature, or distinct entity" Adam that sinned by eating the forbidden fruit? And which of the two was it that "became as God, knowing good and evil?" Is this the way that the "dead know more than all the living?" Then "spiritual death, and the loss of the life of God out of the soul" made Adam, as God, to "know good and evil."

But again: When God said, "And now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever;" did he mean the material Adam, or the "immaterial nature, or distinct entity" Adam? Remember the thou, the he and the his are applied to the same person, and not to separate parts of a "dual being." Again: When God said to Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," what became of his "immaterial nature, immortal soul, or distinct entity," of which God never said one word, and for which he made no provision whatever? When Eve said to the serpent, "God hath said ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die," she should have had some spiritual prompter to call her attention to the very important fact, that she omitted to say "in the day," and also added, "neither shall ye touch it." What a seeming pity that some of her posterity were not present at the time; how different things might have been. No, dear Br. George, Adam did not die a spiritual or temporal death in the day that he ate; he forfeited his privilege for immortality, and in the day, aye, in the moment that he ate, he became "legally dead," just as the criminal goes from the court room, with the sentence of death pronounced upon him, is in the eye of the law dead, though the day of his execution was not named. So Adam was to toil and sweat to procure a subsistence until he should return to the ground. Such is the law, or wages of sin, and, in the law, there was no redemptive clause; but thanks be to God, that in his purpose and plan there was a second Adam, who was a quickening spirit, of whom the first Adam was only the figure or shadow; this second Adam was the "image of the invisible God," "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person," "and renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created Him." He it is that gives to his people "eternal life," either by a resurrection at the last day, or a translation at his second coming; and although we might ransack the vocabulary of the babbling tongues of earth, and explore the antiquity of the mouldering ruins of the ages past, or sit in silent contempt of the ever-living truth of God; and despite its warnings, and its threatenings, vainly endeavor to force back the bolt from the door of death, to hold communion with the dead, yet none of these can ever answer the question of ages, "If a man die shall he live again?" That question can only be answered by "Him who is the way, the truth, and the life." "Him who brought life and immortality to light by his gospel." Him who said to his disciples, "Because I live, ye shall live also. I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. I am the living bread that came down from heaven. Whoso eateth me, even he shall live by me." This is the uniform testimony of the Saviour and his Apostles, that his people shall have the "life which is to come." "Their life is bound in the bundle of life with the Lord their God;" and when the "bundle" (Christ) "who is their life, shall appear, then shall they also appear with him in glory;" and to apply in any sense whatever, life in a future state to the wicked, is to take "the children's bread and cast it to the dogs."

WILMINGTON, DEL., Jan. 22, 1871.

GOD'S PROMISE TO ABRAHAM.

M. E. GREEN'S RESPONSE TO THE EDITOR.—NO. 2.

BR. STORRS: Do I understand you correctly in your reply to my response to your question, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," that the promise is to extend to all the families or individuals of the earth, and not nations, as it reads in Gen. xxii. 18, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice?" I am led to this understanding from your remark, "What of the millions on millions of heathen which, all this time, (1800 years in the past) have been without God and without hope."

If the blessing promised to Abraham and his seed is to extend to all the families, or individuals of the earth, will not the "millions on millions of heathen" which have died without "God and without hope" have to be raised from the dead to be blessed? You say, the promise is "broad and unqualified; to qualify it is to ignore it; to make it void and unworthy of trust; and if this promise is thus treated who can tell what promise of God is reliable." To my mind, this is the logical conclusion if this promise extends to all the families of the earth in the sense of households, or individual families. About eleven years since a brother holding the views that "all the families of the earth were to be blessed" in this age or in a future age, in answer to a question, "Will not God's promises fail unless those nations which have died without having the Gospel preached to them, are raised from the dead and hear the glad tidings?" said, "God would be a respecter of persons if the Gospel should not be offered to them, and that God would revive them for that purpose; but those nations that had heard the gospel and rejected it would remain eternally dead." This is the only conclusion that we can come to, if all the individual families of the earth are to be included in this promise.

Again, if this promise is to extend into a future age, after Abraham and his seed are raised from the dead that he may "personally, as well as his seed" by faith, "accomplish the work of blessing all the families of the earth," which seed Paul said was "so many as the stars of the sky in multitude and as the sand by the sea shore innumerable: These all died in faith not having received the promise," then besides all that have been "adopted" into the family of Abraham, by faith, since Paul's day, there will be millions on millions of missionaries sent to the nations of the earth, which will add millions on millions to the family of Abraham, for this must go on as long as families are born, ages upon ages, otherwise the promise will fail, if the promise includes "all the families of the earth." What a vast innumerable multitude will there be to inherit the promise made to Abraham, as some believe is the land of Canaan only, a territory about 80 by 150 miles.

"God's word will not fail: it may puzzle us to see how it is to be accomplished." "Is any thing too hard for God?" I again ask, will not God's promise fail unless the "millions on millions" who have died without that blessing, are not made alive and have the gospel offered to them? If all means "all the families of the earth" "depend upon it it will not fail but will be accomplished to the letter." This is the logical deduction, if the foregoing premises are correct.

Again our brother asks, "Who are the seed of Abraham? Say you, Christ. Very well; but who else are his seed? If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs of the promise." That mode of reasoning, no doubt, was used by Paul's opponents in his day; but to refute them he says, "Now to Abraham and to his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one; and to thy seed which is Christ." Paul shows that the promise was to Abraham and Christ through whom the blessings were to come. All others that become partakers of this promise are adopted children, (see Gal. iv. 5, and Eph. i. 5,) and become partakers of the promise "through faith," which is conditional. "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "For we are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." This I apprehend is the blessing that was promised to "all the families of the earth" which will be completed when all are blessed with faithful Abraham with immortality. Thousands upon thousands had made sure of that promise by faith in Paul's day. He says, they were numerous "as the sand which is by the sea shore, innumerable. These all died in the faith."—Heb. xi. 12, 13. This shows that some of the "families of the earth" had been blessed before Christ came, the seed to which the promise was made.

Again: who is to bestow the blessing? You say, "Abraham and his seed; which includes the whole family of believers in Christ." What is the testimony? for "testimony is testimony after all." "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curseth thee; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Not a word said about Abraham "personally" blessing any one nor "his seed," which you say "includes the whole family of believers in Christ" are to do this "work of blessing all the families of the earth," after they are raised from the dead. The testimony is, "I (God) will bless them," and that "with faithful Abraham;" and therefore it does not depend upon Abraham and his innumerable seed to be raised from the dead that they may "accomplish the work of blessing all the families of the earth." Abraham has no "personal active" part in blessing them, for God does the blessing himself through Jesus Christ; for there is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved. Again: when God says, "all the families of the earth," does he not mean nations, instead of individual families or persons? A corresponding text, Gen. xxii. 18, says, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice." The word families is used in Jeremiah xv, "And I will appoint over them (the Jews) four families (margin) saith the LORD," etc. This is the same word as in Gen. xii. 3, and therefore should be understood nations in Gen. xxii. 18.

"Let us not run too fast brother," "and like Abraham take a Hagar and beget" more children by the bond woman than the children of the married wife, (Isa. liv.) "but wait patiently for God to bring forth" her (Sarah's) children in a resurrection at the last day. There is no day after the last day; no time beyond the last time.—1 John, ii. 18.

Again: if there are to be nations on the earth unconverted or unreconciled to God (which would be enemies to God) after Abraham and his seed by faith are raised from the dead, how do you reconcile Paul's declaration in 1 Cor. xv. 24–29, "And then the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God the Father, when every prince and every sovereign and all powers shall have come to naught. For he is to reign until he shall put all his enemies under his feet; and the last enemy death is abolished . . . And when all shall be subjected to him, then the Son himself will be subjected to him who subjected all to him so that God will be all in all." (Syriac.) It matters not whether Christ is now reigning (as I believe he has for eighteen hundred years in the sense here set forth), or whether it is yet future; for this reigning is to be before the dead are raised; for death, the last enemy cannot be destroyed in any other way but by giving life in its stead, as Paul says, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death where is thy sting! O grave where is thy victory!" Death now

THE HERALD OF LIFE is published weekly by THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION," at 208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,) NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. [illegible], New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB [illegible], Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. [illegible], New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. [illegible], Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 19.
WHOLE NUMBER [illegible].

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE
[illegible]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.
ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:
GEO. STORRS, Box 4,[illegible], NEW YORK.
All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

REV. N. D. GEORGE ON "ANNIHILATION."

REMARKS THEREON BY STEWART CARLISLE.

"BUT cannot kill the soul." This passage of Scripture is found on the title page of a work entitled "Annihilationism not of the Bible," written by the Rev. N. D. George, a Methodist preacher. The learned author quotes very freely from the writings of what he is pleased to call the "Annihilationists," and makes considerable effort to present their discrepancies as they exist among their writers, which is doubtless all right; but suppose both parties were called upon to reconcile existing differences between their authors, could the orthodox brethren show a record entirely harmonious? We answer, No. And why? Because "the doctrines of men" are the most inharmonious things under the sun; and to-day, while we are penning these lines, there goes out from the thousands of pulpits in our own and other lands, doctrines of men, which present to the ear of JEHOVAH a confusion, of which Babel was but a faint resemblance.

Our object, then, is not to reconcile differences among ourselves, nor to defend the writings or sayings of men, only so far as they may be found in harmony with the teachings of God's word. Br. George failing to find the doctrine of the immortality of the soul in the Old Testament, without the aid of the New, seems to conclude beyond a shadow of doubt that Matt. x. 28, furnishes positive proof of the doctrine in question: "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." He would have us understand, here, that "Christ teaches that man is a compound being, possessed of a material and an immaterial nature, or body, which can be killed by man, and an immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity, which cannot be killed by man." Does Br. George believe Joshua was a man? and that he smote with the edge of the sword, destroyed, or killed all the souls that were in Makkedah, in Libuah, in Lachish, in Eglon, in Hebron, in Debir, and all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings, he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed. Joshua x. Then they must have been breathing souls; and when God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, man became a breathing soul; and when a soul ceases to breathe it must cease to live. "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Psa. civ. 29. Then men can kill souls, and the Scriptures remain unbroken; and if we cannot understand this plain Bible truth, (though we be teachers or masters in theology) it is because our theories are not in harmony with the Bible, and never dreaming that human theories—especially ours—can be wrong, we set ourselves down to warp, twist and bend the whole Bible to suit our dogmas. This seems to be Br. George's difficulty; he has a theory that is nowhere taught in Scripture, and if he cannot make it work straightforward, he is bound to try it backward; and so not finding his favorite dogma in the Old Testament, he thinks he has it in Matt. x. 28; then arguing backwards, endeavors to prove that the Old Testament teaches his dogma all the way back to Gen. ii. 7. Now, where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world? "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, save the Spirit of God. Now, we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are freely given to us of God, which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual things." 1 Cor. ii. 11, 12, 13. And if we possess the proper spiritual discernment we may be able thereby to "know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error."

Now with these facts before us, we shall proceed with spiritual comparison. In 1 Sam. xxv. 29 we read: "Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul; but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life, with the Lord thy God, and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he sling out, as out of the middle of a sling." Now could this man be said to seek the soul of David, if it was an "immaterial nature or soul, or distinct entity," beyond the reach or power of man to harm? Again: Why is it affirmed here that the soul of David should "be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God," while "the souls of his enemies shall he sling out," without regard to their future whereabouts? Why is it, that "man being in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish?" Why is it, that, "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain among the congregation of the dead?" Why is it, "that the soul that sinneth it shall die?" Why is it, that the "sons of men are beasts?" Why is it, "that the wicked shall be consumed like stubble fully dry?" And "be ashes under the soles of saints' feet?" Why is it, that "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise, but be as though they had not been?" Why is it, that "except they eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, they have no life in them?" Why is it, "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death?" Why is it, "to be carnally minded is death?" Why is it, "that they who sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption?" Why is it, "that they that do such things are worthy of death, and the end of these things is death?" The answer to all these questions is found in this single sentence, "For the wages of sin is death." "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." Sin kills, and the law keeps dead all who have not passed from death unto life, by a diligent application to the "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," to free them from the law and sting of death. "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh;" and like their first father, natural, earthy, and have no spiritual life whatever; "but as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed;" neither do they know any thing, "but what they know naturally as brute beasts." "They are earthy, sensual, devilish, and have not the spirit," and "they shall utterly perish in their own corruption;" and "never see light or life;" "but as drouth and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave them that sinned;" for "dust they are, and unto dust shall they return," and "be as though they had not been."

Yet, in the face of all these positive declarations of Divine truth, Br. George would tell us that these persons, in these passages, all possessed an "immortal nature, or soul, or distinct entity," that must be eternally in a conscious state of suffering. Well, if it affords him any comfort, or pleasure, or happiness, or adds any thing to his conceptions of the character of our loving Father in heaven, we shall leave him to the full enjoyment of his own thoughts. "Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men." "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned to fables." Now if the—Pagan fable—doctrine of the immortality of the soul—as perhaps nine-tenths of the teachers will this day declare it—be the truth, then to be in harmony with this teaching, the Bible should teach the same doctrine in plain and unequivocal language. Does the Bible so teach it? No, the Bible is as silent as death respecting it; and where silence reigns, the fabulous doctrines of men, with bold and intrepid tread, march in, and proclaim with trumpet blast, that man does possess an immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity, "that can never, never die." And yet in the case of the wicked they must die the death that never, never dies! Now if the "Spirit which is of God," by which "we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error," had taught this doctrine, we should most certainly believe it; but as it never taught it, we must leave it where it properly belongs, with the "Traditions of men." Men left to their education only prove the oft-repeated couplet, true

> "'Tis education forms the common mind,
> Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

Just commence in infancy to train a child that he is an immortal, and as he grows up keep it impressed on his mind, until he is of sufficient age to enter upon his college studies, then put in his hand the standard works of any denomination he may select; let him study them thoroughly, until he graduates with his diploma, and he will be prepared—as he thinks—to silence every tongue that may utter a word against that cherished dogma. Aye, even the most solemn utterances of Divine truth itself, must all bend and turn toward the object of his education; and nothing, "save the spirit which is of God," can ever open the eyes of his educational blindness, and show him as clear as the light of day, that "God only hath immortality;" and if men have any desire for it, they must, "by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality."

God, for wise reasons, long since determined that "no flesh should glory in his presence," because of any inherent immortality, or wisdom, or knowledge they possessed, as the offspring of a poor mortal man, "whose foundation is in the dust." And just here is the mistake of Br. George and his fellow-laborers, because the Son of God promises his people everlasting life, and assures them, that that life is beyond the power of man to destroy, and consequently they should not fear them that can kill the body—or destroy the life that now is—"but have no power to touch the life which is to come," they assume the responsibility of saying that these passages prove that man, even all men, possess an "immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity," that must live forever. Is this "separating the precious from the vile?" Is this "putting a difference between the clean and the unclean?" Is this "rightly dividing the word of truth?" Is this bearing the faithful message from God to men, when he says, "As I live, saith the LORD God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked?" or when he says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die!" Or does it look like "walking in craftiness, and handling the word of God deceitfully?" "Brethren we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." When the rich man whose goods had largely increased, said, "Soul that hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry," did he mean his "immaterial nature, or distinct entity?" Can "immateriality" eat and drink material things? And when God said unto him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," did he mean that the man should die, or that his "immaterial nature or distinct entity" should be "required of him?" Entity, or no entity, the universal belief is, that the man died. Again, when the blessed Jesus in the garden, was in agony, and said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death," did he mean himself, or an "immaterial entity?" Can an immaterial entity, by any possibility, die? When Peter, on the day of Pentecost, speaking of Christ, said that "His soul was not left in hell, neither did his flesh see corruption," did he wish to convey to the minds of his hearers, that Christ's "immaterial nature, or distinct entity," was in hell, while his flesh was in Joseph's tomb? If so, then where was the Christ? for, there is only "one Lord Jesus Christ," and he cannot be "divided." Jesus said, "Whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; but whosoever will lose his life, for my sake and the gospel's, shall find it. For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul," or life, as Dr. Adam Clarke assures us, the word soul is translated from the same original word as the word life in the preceding texts; and Br. George will not surely contradict the Dr.

In 1 Tim. iv. 8, Paul tells us that, "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Now this passage as it reads, and Dr. Clarke's exposition of the preceding one furnishes a key with which not only Matt. x. 28, but every other passage where the word occurs, may be easily unlocked, and its meaning readily apprehended. "The life that now is," is only mortal, and there are a variety of ways in which men may lose it. Man can kill the body, thus destroying the life which now is; "the life which is to come" is now "hid with Christ in God," beyond the reach and power of man to touch or destroy. "God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son;" and "when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." "For this is the will of my Father, which sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up, (not bring it down) but raise it up at the last day." Now this may not suit the wisdom of men, because it strikes a death-blow to their dogma of an "immaterial nature, or soul, or distinct entity," of which the Scriptures furnish us no account whatever.

Now would it be affirming too much for us to say, just here, that our Lord Jesus Christ is the "bundle," or sheaf, or first fruit of the immortal harvest of the redeemed; and that in this bundle, or sheaf is bound up the immortal life, or "the life which is to come," of every stalk however feeble; and when the harvest of the earth shall be reaped, and the tares are burned, will not the wheat be the perfect likeness of the original bundle, or sheaf? "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection?" Now will Br. George affirm that the wicked have the promise of the "life which is to come?" We think not. Then we affirm it boldly, and fearlessly, that wicked men are not now, nor ever will be, immortal; that they have no spiritual, immaterial, undying, or immortal entity in them; there is nothing in them but what man can kill. "They are like the chaff, which the wind driveth away;" and we do not deny the fact, Br. George, "that men have been killing souls ever since Cain killed Abel." "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam a quickening spirit." The first man Adam was only natural, the second man Christ, was spiritual; there was no promise given to the first Adam that he should live again. His promise was on this wise, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The promise given to the second Adam was as follows: "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." "He tasted death for every man." "And as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth whomsoever he will; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." "And if any man will save his life (by shrinking from persecution) he shall lose it; but if any man will lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, he shall have the life which is to come. For what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own life," and be cut off from the life which is to come. "Or what shall a man give in exchange for the life which is to come?" Then, "fear not them that kill the body, or destroy the life that now is, but cannot touch the life which is to come; but fear Him that is able to destroy both body and life in hell," and withold from you the life which is to come.

Such we understand to be the true teachings of Him who is "the way, the truth, and the life." Now we know that men are very apt to speak of life as though it were a continuity; they do not seem to even think of death as being the least interruption of life; if any thing it makes them more alive than they were before they died; but then men have many "strange notions, and have sought out many inventions," and are very poor guides to follow, unless they carry with them that word which "is as a lamp to their feet, and a light to their path." We must have the hammer of truth that breaks in pieces the rocks of error, and the fire shut up in our bones that makes us burn with holy zeal when we see our fellow-men beguiled by the wily serpent's lie. But what is this present life? "It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away."—James iv. 14. What, James? an immaterial nature, or distinct entity, "vanish away,"like vapor? Certainly: "For as the body (or man) as a living soul without the breath (Marg.) is dead," so the finished work of sin is "death." He that gave, hath taken away their breath; "they die, and return to their earth," and they abide in that condition; nothing, save the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, can free man from (the dominion of) "the law of sin and death."

Our Br. George having assumed that Matt. x. 28 teaches that all men have an "immaterial nature, or distinct entity," proceeds to inform his readers that annihilationists teach the "serpent's lie," by saying that Adam did not die in the day that he ate of the forbidden fruit; he then informs us that "Adam lost the life of God out of his soul, and died a spiritual death in the day that he sinned;" (admitting this to be true) then when Adam lost the life of God out of his soul, he must have lost his immortality out of his soul; consequently he had nothing but mortal life left; and if spiritual death was the penalty of the law, and he suffered this death in the day he sinned, then why should his body be subject to death at all, for it was exempt from death in the day, and survived hundreds of years thereafter? This spiritual death theology was made to accommodate the immortal soul theory, and, of course, this piece of information is entirely gratuitous upon his part, for neither God, nor the serpent, nor Eve, nor Adam, ever uttered such a sentence as spiritual death; that is a forced conclusion, of a false premise.

When God said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," did he mean that the material Adam or the "immaterial nature, or distinct entity" of Adam should die? And as man was a "dual being," and God used the personal pronoun thou, which of the two did he address himself to? And was it the material Adam, or the "immaterial nature, or distinct entity" Adam that sinned by eating the forbidden fruit? And which of the two was it that "became as God, knowing good and evil?" Is this the way that the "dead know more than all the living?" Then "spiritual death, and the loss of the life of God out of the soul" made Adam, as God, to "know good and evil."

But again: When God said, "And now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever;" did he mean the material Adam, or the "immaterial nature, or distinct entity" Adam? Remember the thou, the he and the his are applied to the same person, and not to separate parts of a "dual being." Again: When God said to Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," what became of his "immaterial nature, immortal soul, or distinct entity," of which God never said one word, and for which he made no provision whatever? When Eve said to the serpent, "God hath said ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die," she should have had some spiritual prompter to call her attention to the very important fact, that she omitted to say "in the day," and also added, "neither shall ye touch it." What a seeming pity that some of her posterity were not present at the time; how different things might have been. No, dear Br. George, Adam did not die a spiritual or temporal death in the day that he ate; he forfeited his privilege for immortality, and in the day, aye, in the moment that he ate, he became "legally dead," just as the criminal goes from the court room, with the sentence of death pronounced upon him, is in the eye of the law dead, though the day of his execution was not named. So Adam was to toil and sweat to procure a subsistence until he should return to the ground. Such is the law, or wages of sin, and, in the law, there was no redemptive clause; but thanks be to God, that in his purpose and plan there was a second Adam, who was a quickening spirit, of whom the first Adam was only the figure or shadow; this second Adam was the "image of the invisible God," "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person," "and renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created Him." He it is that gives to his people "eternal life," either by a resurrection at the last day, or a translation at his second coming; and although we might ransack the vocabulary of the babbling tongues of earth, and explore the antiquity of the mouldering ruins of the ages past, or sit in silent contempt of the ever-living truth of God; and despite its warnings, and its threatenings, vainly endeavor to force back the bolt from the door of death, to hold communion with the dead, yet none of these can ever answer the question of ages, "If a man die shall he live again?" That question can only be answered by "Him who is the way, the truth, and the life." "Him who brought life and immortality to light by his gospel." Him who said to his disciples, "Because I live, ye shall live also. I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. I am the living bread that came down from heaven. Whoso eateth me, even he shall live by me." This is the uniform testimony of the Saviour and his Apostles, that his people shall have the "life which is to come." "Their life is bound in the bundle of life with the Lord their God;" and when the "bundle" (Christ) "who is their life, shall appear, then shall they also appear with him in glory;" and to apply in any sense whatever, life in a future state to the wicked, is to take "the children's bread and cast it to the dogs."

WILMINGTON, DEL., Jan. 22, 1871.

GOD'S PROMISE TO ABRAHAM.

M. E. GREEN'S RESPONSE TO THE EDITOR.—NO. 2.

BR. STORRS: Do I understand you correctly in your reply to my response to your question, "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," that the promise is to extend to all the families or individuals of the earth, and not nations, as it reads in Gen. xxii. 18, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice?" I am led to this understanding from your remark, "What of the millions on millions of heathen which, all this time, (1800 years in the past) have been without God and without hope."

If the blessing promised to Abraham and his seed is to extend to all the families, or individuals of the earth, will not the "millions on millions of heathen" which have died without "God and without hope" have to be raised from the dead to be blessed? You say, the promise is "broad and unqualified; to qualify it is to ignore it; to make it void and unworthy of trust; and if this promise is thus treated who can tell what promise of God is reliable." To my mind, this is the logical conclusion if this promise extends to all the families of the earth in the sense of households, or individual families. About eleven years since a brother holding the views that "all the families of the earth were to be blessed" in this age or in a future age, in answer to a question, "Will not God's promises fail unless those nations which have died without having the Gospel preached to them, are raised from the dead and hear the glad tidings?" said, "God would be a respecter of persons if the Gospel should not be offered to them, and that God would revive them for that purpose; but those nations that had heard the gospel and rejected it would remain eternally dead." This is the only conclusion that we can come to, if all the individual families of the earth are to be included in this promise.

Again, if this promise is to extend into a future age, after Abraham and his seed are raised from the dead that he may "personally, as well as his seed" by faith, "accomplish the work of blessing all the families of the earth," which seed Paul said was "so many as the stars of the sky in multitude and as the sand by the sea shore innumerable: These all died in faith not having received the promise," then besides all that have been "adopted" into the family of Abraham, by faith, since Paul's day, there will be millions on millions of missionaries sent to the nations of the earth, which will add millions on millions to the family of Abraham, for this must go on as long as families are born, ages upon ages, otherwise the promise will fail, if the promise includes "all the families of the earth." What a vast innumerable multitude will there be to inherit the promise made to Abraham, as some believe is the land of Canaan only, a territory about 80 by 150 miles.

"God's word will not fail: it may puzzle us to see how it is to be accomplished." "Is any thing too hard for God?" I again ask, will not God's promise fail unless the "millions on millions" who have died without that blessing, are not made alive and have the gospel offered to them? If all means "all the families of the earth" "depend upon it it will not fail but will be accomplished to the letter." This is the logical deduction, if the foregoing premises are correct.

Again our brother asks, "Who are the seed of Abraham? Say you, Christ. Very well; but who else are his seed? If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs of the promise." That mode of reasoning, no doubt, was used by Paul's opponents in his day; but to refute them he says, "Now to Abraham and to his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one; and to thy seed which is Christ." Paul shows that the promise was to Abraham and Christ through whom the blessings were to come. All others that become partakers of this promise are adopted children, (see Gal. iv. 5, and Eph. i. 5,) and become partakers of the promise "through faith," which is conditional. "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "For we are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." This I apprehend is the blessing that was promised to "all the families of the earth" which will be completed when all are blessed with faithful Abraham with immortality. Thousands upon thousands had made sure of that promise by faith in Paul's day. He says, they were numerous "as the sand which is by the sea shore, innumerable. These all died in the faith."—Heb. xi. 12, 13. This shows that some of the "families of the earth" had been blessed before Christ came, the seed to which the promise was made.

Again: who is to bestow the blessing? You say, "Abraham and his seed; which includes the whole family of believers in Christ." What is the testimony? for "testimony is testimony after all." "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curseth thee; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Not a word said about Abraham "personally" blessing any one nor "his seed," which you say "includes the whole family of believers in Christ" are to do this "work of blessing all the families of the earth," after they are raised from the dead. The testimony is, "I (God) will bless them," and that "with faithful Abraham;" and therefore it does not depend upon Abraham and his innumerable seed to be raised from the dead that they may "accomplish the work of blessing all the families of the earth." Abraham has no "personal active" part in blessing them, for God does the blessing himself through Jesus Christ; for there is no other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved. Again: when God says, "all the families of the earth," does he not mean nations, instead of individual families or persons? A corresponding text, Gen. xxii. 18, says, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice." The word families is used in Jeremiah xv, "And I will appoint over them (the Jews) four families (margin) saith the LORD," etc. This is the same word as in Gen. xii. 3, and therefore should be understood nations in Gen. xxii. 18.

"Let us not run too fast brother," "and like Abraham take a Hagar and beget" more children by the bond woman than the children of the married wife, (Isa. liv.) "but wait patiently for God to bring forth" her (Sarah's) children in a resurrection at the last day. There is no day after the last day; no time beyond the last time.—1 John, ii. 18.

Again: if there are to be nations on the earth unconverted or unreconciled to God (which would be enemies to God) after Abraham and his seed by faith are raised from the dead, how do you reconcile Paul's declaration in 1 Cor. xv. 24–29, "And then the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God the Father, when every prince and every sovereign and all powers shall have come to naught. For he is to reign until he shall put all his enemies under his feet; and the last enemy death is abolished . . . And when all shall be subjected to him, then the Son himself will be subjected to him who subjected all to him so that God will be all in all." (Syriac.) It matters not whether Christ is now reigning (as I believe he has for eighteen hundred years in the sense here set forth), or whether it is yet future; for this reigning is to be before the dead are raised; for death, the last enemy, cannot be destroyed in any other way but by giving life in its stead, as Paul says, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting! O grave where is thy victory?" Death now holds Abraham and all his seed, which cannot be destroyed until Jesus, who has the "keys of hell (or grave) and of death," shall unlock the charnel house and bring them forth. That this is the correct understanding of the destruction of death is evident, for death is a state, a fixed condition, and to destroy death, life must be given in its place; hence the Prophet Hosea saith, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave. I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy destruction." This is certainly spoken of his people, and not of the wicked; for death will hold them in his grasp eternally, and will never be "destroyed."

Then he will take "the throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke i. 32, 33. There is no intimation of his reigning over any one else than the house of Jacob after he takes his "father David's throne." There is no one else to reign over, for "every prince and sovereign, and all powers are brought to naught" before the house of Jacob is made alive from among the dead, which takes place "at the last day."—John vi. 40.

A word about "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations then shall the end come." Your remarks on my quoting Col. i. 2, 3, which was to show "that this gospel had a wide circulation" in Paul's day was not intended to show that Christ's words were perfectly fulfilled, but had a "wide circulation in his day." You think there should be an interpolation in Paul's words and read "Which was (to) be preached to every creature which is under heaven, whereof I, Paul am made a minister."

You say that the "end," that was to come, was the end of the Jewish dispensation, which was to take place at the destruction of the temple by the Romans, and that "this gospel of the kingdom" was only to be preached to the Roman "world," and then the end of the age or Jewish dispensation came. Now as Paul was preaching when the Romans began the wars on Jerusalem, (if history be correct,) and evidently had preached (for he preached in Rome itself), the gospel to all the Roman world in his day, before the temple was destroyed, I would ask, Why add to Paul's words "to be" preached, when it was already fulfilled?

A word about the age, or end that was to come. What is meant by aionos, age? When we say Gospel age, we mean the dispensation of the gospel; and in the same sense we understand the Mosaic age, or dispensation. What constituted the Mosaic age? The law and ceremonies connected therewith, which were "a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ, which law was nailed" to his cross, at which time the vail of the temple was rent from top to bottom, which forever put an end to the priest's officiating in the temple acceptable to God. There was no approaching God under that age except through a priest. When Christ became a priest, after the order of Melchisedec, the Levitical priesthood ended, which ended the Jewish age. When Jesus said, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate," what did he mean, if he did not intend to convey to them that God no longer accepted their offerings by appearing in the presence of the high priest to bless them? It is evident that God no more recognized the offerings of the Jews, after Christ became high priest, than he recognized the offerings of Baal's prophets. He could not, for there were no priests whom God recognized beside Christ after the gospel age commenced. Paul in Heb. ix. shows that the Levitical priesthood ended when the gospel age commenced; for he says, "Now once in the END of the AGE (aionos) hath he appeared to put away sin (or sin offering) by the sacrifice of himself," not forty years afterwards, when the temple was destroyed.

Truth is what I want, and not controversy.
Yours, in love, M. E. GREEN.

[See Reply by the Editor, inside.]

OBITUARY.

ASHMAN.—On Monday evening, January 30, Sister REBECCA ASHMAN, wife of Br. William Ashman, fell asleep in Jesus, in full hope of a resurrection unto life.

Our acquaintance with sister Ashman has extended over 30 years. In 1840 she joined the Baptist church, of which we were then a member. During the preaching of the coming kingdom, in 1843, she became a believer, but did not at that time dissolve her membership with the church; but some years after she followed her husband in the belief of the non-immortality of the soul, and the destruction of the wicked; since which time she has been a constant attendant with her husband. Sister Ashman has been a quiet, earnest Christian, a kind and affectionate wife, and a good mother. Her husband and children will feel her loss sadly. For nearly 39 years they have walked hand and hand together, and now suddenly this tie is broken. But there is one consolation, they sorrow not as those who have no hope; for yet a little while and our sister shall live again.

When we look back, over the past few years, our hearts are made sad over the loss of so many of our dear ones who have fallen under the iron grasp of death. It makes us long for the consummation, when the sleeping ones shall awake, and the song of the redeemed shall be sung, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory . . . thanks be unto our God who hath given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." May our dear Br. and his family be comforted with the consolation that she shall live again.

JACOB GRIM.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb., 1871.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 15, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

EDITOR'S REPLY TO BR. GREEN'S SECOND RESPONSE.

[See the Response on the first page; which please read before our Reply.—ED.]

Before proceeding to a direct reply to our brother, we will state the question at issue more fully. Our original question was put as follows:

"Do you really believe that the promise of God to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, 'In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed,' has been fulfilled? This promise was afterwards renewed to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 16, 18, and confirmed by an oath, thus—'By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD . . . in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.' These are 'two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie.'—Heb. vi. Have the promise and oath been realized in any fulfilment of the past?"

Such was the original proposition to be discussed. Our brother, in his first response, admitted that it had not been fulfilled in any age past, prior to the present, and said, "The promise made to Abraham, I have no doubt, refers to the Gospel age, or the age in which we live." If so, the promise no more covers "all the nations of the earth" than it does "all the families;" for there were certainly "nations" before the "Gospel age, or age in which we live." If the promise did not cover those "nations," then it must be restricted to some particular nations, and our brother restricts it to the nations in "this age." But facts show that there have been nations in this age that have never heard of Jesus Christ, and of course have never been blessed as the promise and oath declared they should be. If so, will not our brother be obliged to admit that such "nations" will have to be raised from the dead to have the promise and oath made good to them? The "nations" of "this age, in which we live," were all to be blessed in Abraham and his seed, is our brother's position. But all these nations have not been thus blessed; therefore, our brother must have them raised into a new life to receive the blessing, or the promise and oath fail, according to his own showing.

Our brother may say, "Some of all the nations have been blessed in Abraham in the age in which we live, and that covers the promise." Before he assumes that ground, he should prove that some of all nations have been blessed according to the promise and oath. But, for the sake of the argument, suppose we should admit his assumption; then the promise and oath should be altered to correspond, and would read thus: "By myself have I sworn . . . that in thy seed some of all nations shall be blessed."

What would be thought of an immensely rich man, if he should promise, and confirm it by an oath, saying, "In my wealth the city of New York shall be blessed." But the facts prove that only one ward out of twenty ever received any blessing from his wealth, or ever heard of his promise and oath? Would any thinking man, knowing these facts, say the promise and oath had been fulfilled? Does not our brother's position place God's promise and oath to Abraham in just this light?

We ask here, what is the difference between a promise to nations and to families? It takes families to make nations; and a nation, as such, cannot be blessed without the families composing it being partakers of the blessing in some degree. God, clearly, included the families when he spoke of the blessing to come through Abraham, for He expressly said so to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, and confirms the same to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 14, thus, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." To say that "all nations" means something short—far short—of "all the families" of which those nations are composed is making a distinction where God has made none, but has expressly joined the two together, so that the one includes the other; and "what God has joined together let not man put asunder," saith Jesus.

To the inquiry of our brother, if our view of the application of the promise to "all families of the earth" be correct, "Will not the 'millions on millions of the heathen' which have died without 'God and without hope' have to be raised from the dead to be blessed?" we reply; God's oath and promise will be fulfilled to them: of that fact, we have no doubt. If a resurrection from the dead is essential to its accomplishment, then God will raise them up. We do not say that such a revival is necessary, for we are not sufficiently acquainted with the resources of infinite wisdom, knowledge and power, to determine positively by what methods God may work to fulfil his promise and oath; yet that it will be fulfilled we dare no more doubt than we dare charge the God of truth of making oath to a lie. Again we say, If a revival into life is essential to the fulfilment of God's promise and oath, then those who have never heard of God's love to the world will be revived. Does that alarm our brother? Are his prejudices aroused? Does the thought make his traditions quake? Will he and the church generally be shocked at this suggestion of the greatness of God's love to "all the families of the earth"? Alas, that we have such limited views of that love of God which led Him to give His Son, "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." How can any one "believe in Him" if they have never heard of Him? Remember, "God so loved the world"—not a few men and women in different nations—but "all the families of the earth;" for them all He had love, and gave His Son to manifest that love; and to them all the Gospel in some way has been preached or will be preached: they shall all know that God has loved them—each individual; and their final destiny will turn on the reception and use they make of this knowledge. If they believe, they will have life eternal; if they believe not, when the object of faith has been presented to them, they perish, and perish for their own sin.

Such is God's scheme in relation to "all the families of the earth;" and to this end He will bless them all with the knowledge of His love. If it has not been done in this and the past ages, it will be done "in the ages to come," (Eph. ii. 7). Surely no one who has a moiety of the love God manifested to "the world," in the gift of His Son, will feel sorry to know that a work, which, through the neglect of the professed church, or some other cause, has been unaccomplished, in this and past ages, will be fully accomplished "in the ages to come." Let us throw away our old Jewish spectacles, which enabled them to see no blessings from Messiah but for themselves, and look through the "promise and oath of God" to that blessing promised to "all the families of the earth:" then shall we see, as we have never seen, the magnitude of God's love to "the world." This view will cause us to wonder at our past blindness, and to adore that love of God and of "Christ which passeth knowledge." "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end"—or, "the endless succession of ages," as Macknight renders it.—Eph. iii. 21.

The command of Christ to his Apostles, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel (the good news) to every creature" comprehends the same idea, that "all the families of the earth" should be blessed: it is a proclamation of God's love to all men, everywhere, and for all ages. It was first made in Eden, after man fell into sin; it was renewed by promise and oath to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and proclaimed by all the Prophets, and commanded to be made known everywhere, and to "every creature," by Christ. The whole train of testimony goes to confirm our idea that it is "all the families of the earth" that are to be "blessed in Abraham and his seed," and God's counsel shall stand and He will do all His pleasure.

Our brother next takes fright at a fancy of his own erecting. It is at the "innumerable missionaries" he supposes there will be in the next age, if our view is the correct one. How does he create this multitude? It is by stating that "Paul said" the "seed by faith was so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand by the sea shore innumerable: these all died in faith," etc. We can hardly see how our brother made such a mistake. The seed of which Paul speaks, in the text quoted from Heb. xi. 12, is clearly the literal one, and not "the seed by faith." Paul is speaking of the faith of the ancient worthies, and enumerates Abel, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Sarah, of whom he saith, "Through faith also Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised. Therefore sprang there of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable." On reflection, we are sure our brother must see that these were the literal seed of Abraham and Sarah, for the latter did not "conceive" any other seed. If then Paul referred to this "innumerable multitude," when he added, "These all died in faith," etc., then it follows that, all the seed that sprang from Sarah were Abraham's seed "by faith;" and so, all literal Israel and the posterity of Esau were persons of faith, for they were all the seed that "sprang" from Sarah's conception in her old age. All of them, therefore, who had "died" previous to Paul's time of writing were saved by faith. Truly there is hope for "all the families of the earth," if all the literal seed of Sarah "died in faith," Edomites as well as the Israelites. Paul's charity in that case would equal our brother's mistake in calling this "multitude" Abraham's "seed by faith." The 12th verse is clearly parenthetical; and "These all" who "died in faith" refers only to the ancient worthies he had personally named. Our brother's alarm, therefore, at the idea of such a "multitude of missionaries," in "the ages to come," is a needless one, and his fears that there will be too many, appear to be groundless.

On his supposition of so many missionaries to work in the "ages upon ages," in which "all the families of the earth" are to be "blessed," he is again apparently frightened, and says:

"What a vast innumerable multitude will there be to inherit the promise made to Abraham, as some believe is the land of Canaan only, a territory about 80 by 150 miles."

Here our brother excites his fears with apprehensions of his own creation. The promise made to Abraham was, that "he should be heir of the world."—Rom. iv. 13. The heirs of that promise are Abraham's seed by faith, who have been raised from the dead, and are immortal; they are "joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together."—Rom. viii. 17. With this agrees the promise of Christ, Rev. iii. 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne," etc. His redeemed ones, out of the past and present age, made immortal, are to be rulers in his kingdom, which is to have no end. Supposing others, in "the endless succession of ages," are "blessed" by these who sit with Christ on his throne, it does not follow that they are "joint heirs with Christ," nor with "His body—the church of the first born." They are "the families of the earth blessed" by the redeemed immortal ones, and dwell on all the face of the earth: not crowded into Canaan, as our brother fears, or as some one may have been unwise enough to assert.

Our brother is troubled with Paul's testimony, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise," Gal. iii. 29, and he says:

"That mode of reasoning, no doubt, was used by Paul's opponents in his day; but to refute them he says, 'Now to Abraham and to his seed were the promises made. He saith not and to seeds, as of many, but as of one; and to thy seed which is Christ."

To say nothing of the assumption that "Paul's opponents" used the language, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise," Paul preceded the language by saying, "Ye are all one in Christ Jesus." The church, Paul declares, is "The body of Christ," (1 Cor. xii. 27.) Is the Head separate from the body? Will the Head inherit and not the body with it? If Christ the Head is the heir, so is His body: you cannot separate them, brother, and you have no evidence that "Paul's opponents" used the language referred to, or that Paul attempted to "refute it," as our readers will all see, we doubt not.

Our brother saith, There is "not a word said about Abraham 'personally' blessing any one," etc. Indeed! He might just as well have said, when God promised Abraham, saying, "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession," (Gen. xvii. 8), there is "not a word said about Abraham 'personally' having any part in the land."

God said to Abraham, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed," Gen. xiii. 3, and repeated it by a declaration, Gen. xviii. 18, saying, "All the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him," Abraham; and reaffirmed it to Jacob, saying, "In thee AND in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. xxviii. 14. Yet our brother says, "there is not a word said about Abraham 'personally' blessing any one." If God's promises are so uncertain, that when He says, "thee," He does not mean what He says, then revelation is no revelation, and we are left to conjectures. Just as sure as Abraham is "personally" to inherit the land of Canaan for an "everlasting possession," just so sure is he to be personally concerned in blessing "all families of the earth:" and if we "believe not Moses and the Prophets, neither" would we "believe if one rose from the dead."

Our brother's special pleading about "families" meaning "nations," we let pass, as we have already sufficiently met that idea in our previous remarks. His observations on the "last day" and "last time" do not, in our mind, prove that there is no time or day after the resurrection of the saints. Every dispensation has its "last day." The Mosaic had its last day, and this dispensation will have its last day, and then those who are believers in Christ will be raised from the dead, according to the promise of Christ. Does that prove there are no days "in the ages to come?" Eph. ii. 7? Are not the saints, glorified, to "serve God day and night in his temple?"—Rev. vii. 15.

What our brother says on 1 Cor. xv. 24–29 we shall not follow in detail. The truth of his remarks all depends on the correct interpretation of two or three expressions. What is "the end" spoken of? What is "the kingdom" referred to, and when is it "delivered up?" What is meant by death as "the last enemy," and to whom does Paul state it to be the last enemy? This chapter is devoted to the proof of the resurrection of the believers in Christ. Their last enemy, who shall ever have dominion over them, is death: to them therefore death is destroyed by resurrection. That Christ does not deliver up the kingdom at that time is evident from many prophecies. First: Psa. lxxii., "In His days shall the righteous flourish." (Surely not till raised from the dead). "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. . . . The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before Him: all nations shall serve him. . . . His name shall endure forever; His name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in Him: all nations shall call Him blessed." This whole prophecy relates to what transpires after Messiah reigns on David's throne, which reign our brother admits is after the resurrection spoken of in 1 Cor. xv.

Another prophecy is found in Psa. xxii. 27–31. "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the LORD: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee: for the kingdom is the LORD'S," [the kingdom of God has come], "and He is the governor among the nations. . . . A seed shall serve Him; it shall be accounted to the LORD for a generation:" [not one, only, but a plurality]: they shall come, and shall declare His righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that He hath done this."

Still another prophecy. Dan. vii. After the fourth "beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame," one like the Son of man appears before the Ancient of Days, "And there was given him dominion," [not 1800 years ago], "that all people, nations, and languages, should serve and obey him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." The angel explains this to Daniel as the reign of the saints, made immortal, of course, thus: "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." The horn of the fourth beast prevailed against the saints "Until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment [rule] was given to the saints of the Most High: and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." . . . "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

Thus prophecy makes "people, nations, and languages" to exist, after the saints are made immortal; and they are all put in subjection to the saints in a kingdom that has no end. If our brother can reconcile all this with his construction of 1 Cor. xv., he can do what is impossible with us. We have given only a moity of prophecy which conflicts with his construction of the kingdom spoken of by Paul. We think we have produced abundant evidence that Christ is to "reign over some one else than the house of Jacob, after he takes his father David's throne;" even "all people, nations, and languages," which includes a wide domain, even over "kings and princes" of the earth, who shall become subject to his government, and offer Him gifts and do Him homage, as saith the prophecy.

Again we say, Do not let us drop into the narrow notions of the ancient Jews, who supposed they were the only favorites of heaven, and all others reprobates. These ancient, self-righteous Jews had no heart to receive the promise of God to Abraham, that "all the families of the earth," or "all nations," were the objects of His love, and that all "the world" were embraced in that love which led God to give His Son, (John iii. 16). To suppose the few saved in this and previous ages, are all who are to be saved into eternal life by Him who "tasted death for every man," and "is the propitiation for the sins of the whole world," (1 John ii. 2), is a view, to our mind, as narrow as the selfish platform of the old Jews. "O, but the saved in this and past ages are a great multitude." Jesus calls them a "little flock," and saith but "A few find the straight gate." The "great multitude" of saved ones will be found to belong to "the ages to come," before we have done with the subject, if it is followed up. God's love hitherto has been eclipsed by the traditions of men and the selfishness of the human heart: but that obscuration will vanish away when the Sun of righteousness shall arise to shine on this benighted world and a pur-blind church, and "the knowledge of the LORD shall fill the earth, as the waters cover the sea."

Our brother entirely misapprehends our language in reference to what Paul said, Col. i. 23. He certainly quoted that text in proof that the promise to Abraham had been fulfilled, that "all the families of the earth" should "be blessed," etc. With that text, in Col. i. 23, he coupled Jesus' saying, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come;" making Paul's words and Christ's to refer to the same events; which we showed was incorrect; or, if they did refer to the same event, the "end of the world" should have come in Paul's day; for Paul's words, without the ellipsis, of which we spoke, declare positively, that "the gospel was preached to every creature which is under heaven:" not barely "a wide circulation," but a universal one, and then "the end of the world" should have come, if Christ and Paul were both speaking of the universal spread of the gospel. We need not here repeat our remarks on the words of Christ or Paul, which we made in our reply of Jan. 25.

As to our brother's view of the end of the Jewish age, being at the cross of Christ, it is evident that the apostles and Jewish converts did not so regard it, as Acts xxi. 20 plainly teaches. Paul after a mission among the Gentiles, in the year A. D. 60, or more than 25 years after "the cross of Christ," met "James and all the elders" in Jerusalem. He declared to them what God had wrought among the Gentiles. James and the elders "when they heard it glorified the Lord, and said unto him (Paul), Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe, and they are all zealous of the law: and they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying, they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs." They then advised him to attend to certain things, that all the Jews "may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; and that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law." Paul did as he was advised. Did he do so knowing that the end of the Jewish age was past some 25 years before? Did he play the hypocrite? It is a clear case that he, James, all the elders and converted Jews in Jerusalem counted the law of Moses as still binding on Jewish believers in Jesus; nor did our Lord ever tell his followers to forsake that law or its services in the temple till they should "see Jerusalem compassed about with armies;" and not till then is there any evidence that they did omit attention to the services there performed. When the temple was destroyed "the sacrifice and offering" was caused "to cease," and there the Mosaic age ended. Whether those sacrifices, and the attention of the Jewish Christians to the law of Moses, were acceptable to the Lord is another question. It is sufficient for us to show that they were continued till the destruction of the temple, and that neither Christ nor his apostles said any thing to prevent it. Then, and not till then, did Jewish believers cease their offerings and ceremonies of the law, and the Mosaic age end.

We might confirm this testimony from prophecies, but our space admonishes us to close here. We wish, however, before closing, to invite our brother's attention to the fact that our original question was a call for evidence that God's promise and oath to Abraham had been fulfilled in any past or present age. His second response does not touch that question, but is made up mainly with objections to our reply: hence, our present reply is necessarily longer than we could wish. If he has further evidence that the promise and oath have been fulfilled, we shall be glad to see it. We are not averse, however, to answering objections; we have foreseen all that our brother has urged, and weighed them on our sick bed, before we put our question to him. We wish to shorten the discussion as much as possible, and hence desire to see all our brother's proof that "all the families" or "nations of the earth" have been "blessed in Abraham and his seed."

To our brother's concluding remark, "Truth is what I want, and not controversy," we respond, "Truth is what" we "want;" and truth, without direct revelation from heaven, is seldom elicited without "controversy." We wish, therefore, for controversy for the sake of the truth: but let it be carried on in love for the truth and in love to each other.

Fears that Arise.

"Take care, Br. Storrs, or you will upset the non-resurrection doctrine."

SUCH was the language used by a kind friend, who fears the doctrine of God's promise and oath to Abraham, that "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," or, "in thy seed shall all nations be blessed," "will upset the non-resurrection doctrine." We answer our friend, and all others who may be troubled with like fears, that we do not partake of their alarm in that respect.

In the first place, when we have developed our views, it will be seen there is no cause for such fears: but if there was, we say, Better that "the non-resurrection doctrine" go to the winds than to question the fulfilment of God's promise and oath; for these are "two immutable things in which it is impossible for God to lie;" and we must not seem to make Him "lie." If that promise and oath has not yet been fulfilled, it must and will be in some future period, no matter what doctrine is "upset" by it. Here is where we stand, and we have not overlooked any objections which we think can or will be urged against it.

The question we put to Br. Green was designed to bring out the evidence, if there is any, that a fulfilment had ever occurred in any of the ages past. Will any student of the Bible or history say that our brother has proved such to be the fact? We do not think he has; and with his knowledge of history, (and few men are better versed in history than he), if he cannot prove it, who can? The inevitable conclusion in our mind is, If not fulfilled in the past, it must and will be in the future, either in this age, or "in the ages to come,"—Eph. ii. 7. The means to accomplish it God will take care of, and that gives us no uneasiness or fears.

Our brother, in his first response, confined the fulfilment of the promise and oath to "the present age, or age in which we live;" yet it is clear to us no such fulfilment has taken place in this age. If he may confine it to one particular age, why may we not use the same liberty, and so say, It belongs to the age or "ages to come," after Abraham and his seed are raised from the dead and enter on their "heirship of the word?"

EUROPEAN MATTERS.

MUCH has been done since the commencement of the armistice toward revictualing Paris, but great suffering still exists. Jules Favre has written to the Mayor of London, expressing the gratitude of the Government and people of Paris for the munificent gift of food from the metropolis of England. He also says the distress in Paris has been very great, and that it still continues. Information from other sources is to the effect that although much has been received from outside, provisions are still very scarce in Paris. A dispatch from London, Feb. 5, says: "Several trains loaded with provisions entered Paris yesterday. The Foreign Office here announces that an offer has been made to Count Bismarck and M. Favre to place English resources at their disposal for the supply of Paris with food, the arrangements to be under the superintendence of French and German agents.

It is now known that about 180,000 prisoners were taken in Paris, with 1,500 cannon and 400 field-pieces and mitrailleuses. The gunboats in the Seine, and the rolling stock of the railways were also appropriated by the Germans. It is reported at Brussels that an attempt has been made at Paris to assassinate Gen. Trochu. The General's orderly officer was killed, but he himself was uninjured."

While the work of feeding the starving thousands in Paris has been carried on, the all-absorbing topic throughout France during the past week has been the election of members to the Assembly the convening of which will, if the time is not extended by the Germans, take place on the 8th inst.

The "London Telegraph" has the following information from inside Paris, 3rd inst.:

"Although the elections are to occur on Wednesday next, up to the present time everything is in confusion, with a general tendency to reject the members of the Government of National Defense. The meetings which are held in various halls are becoming more demonstrative. Some of the speakers demand the arrest and trial of those who surrendered the city. The Liberal Republican Committee has declared that the Government of the 4th of September should be arraigned by the National Assembly to render an account of their conduct of the defense of Paris, and give their reasons for agreeing to the armistice. The Committee also declare that no treaty ratifying the cession of Alsace and Lorraine should be signed, and that Paris should continue her defense and refuse to capitulate. One orator declared that France demanded a Robespierre, and that the guillotine alone could save the country. This sentiment was received with enthusiasm by the audience. The Deputies who favor the continuation of the war are loudly applauded at all the meetings.

"Gen. Trochu declined the candidacy for the Assembly in a letter, in which he says: 'I only consented to retain the Presidency of the Government because it was my duty to share with my colleagues the common responsibility. I am about to be discharged from it, and my part must finish with the events which gave it birth.' The meeting at which this letter was read shouted as with one voice, 'The members of the Government are cowards.'"

At one large meeting it was declared that the Government were twelve "bandits" who had "sold Paris." The German officials in France have been instructed to abstain from the exercise of vigorous censorship over the French press while the elections are pending, and it is said that many journals which had been suppressed, or had refused to appear, have resumed publication. The "Daily News," London, under date of Feb. 8, says: "The Parisians will vote to-day in entire dependence on the good faith of the Germans. It is impossible to complete negotiations for peace between the meeting of the National Assembly and the 19th, when the armistice expires, and when fighting may be resumed." It is said, continues the "News," "that the German preparations to overrun the whole of France, in the event, are of the most formidable character."

A dispatch from London, dated Feb. 10, says:

"Returns from eleven departments indicate the election of the Bonapartist, Orleanist, and Clerical candidates, but of very few Republicans.

The elections in Paris passed off quietly. Extra precautions have been taken to prevent riots. The 12,000 regulars first allowed to retain their arms for the protection of the city have been increased in number, by permission of the Germans, to 25,000. The tickets of candidates were mixed, and their political character confused. The Conservative element was surprisingly strong. The Orleans interest is believed to be strong throughout the country.

In the elections at Brest and Havre, the Gambetta ticket has been carried by a heavy majority.

"The duration of the armistice will probably be extended, in order that the Assembly may have time to perfect the work of restoration.

"Gens. Le Flo and Trochu are among the candidates elected to the Assembly in the Department of Finisterre.

"The German telegraph offices in France have been ordered to transmit French official messages relative to the elections and provisioning of Paris."

The Republicans have from the first manifested a decided lack of confidence in their supposed ability to carry the elections, and the result of the elections, so far as yet held, prove that their suspicions were well founded. It is difficult to say yet whether the Bonapartist or the Orleans element will be the strongest in the Assembly, but it is rendered quite certain that unless the Republicans do better in the later elections than they have thus far the chances of a Republic are fast waning. A dispatch from Wilhelmshohe says the ex-Emperor has issued a proclamation to the French people in reference to the elections. Jules Favre, it is asserted, is in communication with the Orleans Prince, who, it is also stated, are strong throughout France. None can know what will be the next course of political affairs in France, but time will quickly reveal it.

In Spain the Republicans are about making one more effort. A dispatch from Madrid, Feb. 3, contains the following: "The Republican Deputies of the Cortes have sent out a manifesto, urging their party for the coming electoral struggle, to support candidates pledged to the repeal of Article 33 of the Constitution, and the dethronement of the Savoy dynasty in Spain. They express ardent hopes of the ultimate success of the French people, now victims of the ambition of the Brandeburgs, the crimes of the Bonapartes, and the ingraaitude of the House of Savoy."

The recent unparelleled rise in the Tiber resulted in a flood such as Rome has not before witnessed in latter days, so fearfully destructive was it. The following extract from a letter written at Naples, to the "New York Tribune," will be found an interesting description of it:

"Though the waters of the Tiber have retired within their natural bounds, still, the recent disastrous deluge is the one subject which absorbs public attention, and I shall be excused if I give you fuller details. Last week people could only gaze with wonder and apprehension on the rising waters; this week they have been realizing the immense damage which has been done. Hundreds of thriving families reduced to ruin; thousands are houseless, and that, too, at a most inclement season, when cold and rain so greatly increase the evils of poverty. In the Corso, where were some of the richest shops of the city, now that the waters have retired, might have been seen before each door a mountain apparently of mud, but in which was involved the entire wealth of a family. In most cases the doors had to be forced, as they were barricaded inside by the counters, windows, and furniture, which had all been lifted up and then thrown on the ground. Everything was destroyed, and those who had entertained hopes of saving some portion of their property were soon undeceived. 'The jewelers,' says an eye-witness, 'found a stratum of mire, in which sparkled gems intermingled with rags and fragments of various objects. Linen and woolen drapers found stuffs, and rich silks floating on mire; satin cravats and artificial flowers, and laces, and gloves were intermingled with sand and mud, while books and papers were reduced to a paste, and china, furniture, and the ten thousand little nothings provided for the celebration of New Year's day, were confused and smashed together as if another invasion of barbarians had taken place, to whom free li cense had been given to destroy what they did not steal. Every merchant and tradesman, therefore, in the quarter afflicted has lost his all, for what has not been entirely destroyed has been rendered unserviceable, and many a family who sat down on Christmas day in easy circumstances, has been reduced to want.

"'That which makes the disaster still more lamentable is that in Rome there are special trades employing a great amount of capital. Of goldsmiths I have already spoken, but not of those who get up those splendidly embroidered garments so much used in the court and Church of Rome. Velvet and rich silks formed the least part of the value of robes which were stiff with pure gold, which can be recovered only by burning the other materials. Beside the shops, all those places of resort so well known to visitors suffered in an equal degree. All the lower part of the Hotel de Rome, the largest hotel in the city, so much frequented by your countrymen, was under water, and gayly decorated cafes, into which the Tiber burst, and laid a thick deposit of mud.

"'It is still raining, and who knows but that the enemy may be upon them again; still it is a melancholy consolation that nothing remains to be destroyed. The calculation is that there are 2,000 families without a home, and God knows when they will be able to return to apartments, so wet and soddened that fever and other maladies are sure to be lurking in them. Only two lives have been lost as far as can be ascertained at present—those of two men whose bodies were found in the Piazza St. Andrea della Valle. How to provide for the relief of the sufferers? The King on leaving Rome gave 200,000 lire; the Pope has contributed, it is said, 40,000 lire; every municipality in Italy is sending its quota, and among the private contributions the Americans have come out well, having almost immediately subscribed 12,000 lire, which has been considerably increased since by a collection in the American Church.

"'During the period of the deluge the municipalty divided into seven sub-committees worked well and did much for the preservation of life and property, but they were compelled to send to Naples for bread and boats, and for several days there was great activity in our arsenal. Though the overflow of the Tiber is a periodical event—sometimes assuming, as at present, dangerous proportions—it is extraordinary that none of that machinery necessary in such circumstances was ready at hand. Money has been lavished on palaces, on churches, 365 in number, and always increasing, but none to keep the Tiber within bounds, or to provide against a disaster which is of probable or possible occurrence at any rainy season. I tremble almost to think of what the consequences might have been had Rome been still under the government of the Pope in antagonism with all his neighbors! As it is, all Italy has come to the rescue, and the freemen of Rome have used their newly-awakened energies to good effect. An estimate is now being made of the loss which each one has sustained, and from the general fund relief will be given; but what is to be done with the multitude who have nowhere to lay their heads? It was proposed a day or two since in the Municipal Council to erect a vast wooden barrack for them, but before it is completed one-half of their number may have died from exposure. There are, indeed, vast monasteries not one half tenanted, but whether their claims of misery will be listened to is doubtful. If the law of Italy were fairly carried out there would be no difficulty in the matter, but Ministers have shown so much timidity as regards the Pontifical States, that they may fear to lay "unhallowed" hands on the monastic institutions.'"

Nothing new seems to have transpired concerning the Black Sea question. The eyes of all Europe are intent upon watching the present political contest in France.

The very latest election returns render it certain that a Republican form of government will not be established. L. C. T.

(Continued from week before last.)

AN EXPOSITION OF REV. XX. 12.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

III. It now remains for us to ascertain what is meant, in the passage under consideration, by the expression, "standing before God."

1. The words "before God," acknowledged competent Greek critics inform us should read, "BEFORE THE THRONE;" and Samuel Treggelles, LL.D., says that this reading is guarrantied by manuscript authority of at least twelve hundred years old. The American Bible Union, Emphatic Diaglott, and other eminent translations, give this reading, and scholars, valued for their learning, concur in its correctness. But either reading proves that those spoken are represented as standing in the presence of God, and cannot, therefore, include the wicked dead. This conclusion is sustained by the testimony of Paul as well as the words of Jesus. Paul declares that without holiness "no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. xii. 14); and Christ in his memorable sermon on the Mount of Olives, calls "the pure in heart" blessed, because "they shall see God" (Matt. v. 8),—thus implying, as plainly as language can, that none but "the pure in heart" shall ever see God, or stand in the immortal glory of his presence. Albert Barnes, commenting on this passage, remarks: "To see the face of one, or to be in his presence, were among the Jews, terms expressive of great favor." Thus, an unanswerable objection is raised against the claim that both classes of the dead are embraced in Rev. xx. 12.

2. John saw the dead standing "BEFORE THE THRONE," and as the scene is located in heaven, it furnishes positive proof that "the dead" whom he saw does not include the wicked.

Among the first visions presented to John, he was favored, for some wise purpose, with a view of the throne "set in heaven." He says: "I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard, was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter. And immediately I was in the Spirit; and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne . . . And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal."—Rev. iv. 1, 2, 6. In this glorious and rapturous vision the Holy Spirit is very particular to point out this pellucid-like place before the throne,—the design of which will appear when we consider the several visions which John had of this broad expanse in the immediate presence of God.

After this vision of the throne, and God sitting upon it, filling his heart with deep emotions of awe and sublimity, giving him new courage and preparing his mind for the important communications which were about to be made to him, he was carried forward in vision through the strange and bloody history of the church,—saw her trodden under foot by despotic anti-christian powers, and finally, in a sad and desolate condition, flee into the wilderness,—until, in Rev. vii. 9–17, he again beholds this sea of glass "before the throne" occupied by the redeemed and triumphant church,—all the children of God, "both small and great." He says: "After this, I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations and kindred, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands: And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. . . . These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them." This is doubtless a vision of the introduction of the resurrected saints into the presence of God. In glorious robes of righteousness, and bearing triumphantly the palms of victory, having conquered death and the grave, they stand in the presence of God and the heavenly hosts, and God, in gracious tenderness, wipes all tears from their eyes; and the Lamb of God, once slain for man's redemption, is still an active agent in promoting the happiness of his loving bride,—a union which eternity alone can measure.

Again, in Rev. xv. 2, John had another vision of this "sea of glass," and beholds this innumerable multitude "before the throne" celebrating their triumph over the grave,—having "the harps of God," and singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. As Moses taught the children of Israel to celebrate their deliverance from Egyptian bondage with a song of thanksgiving and praise, so John beheld the children of God celebrating their deliverance from the bondage of mortality. In view of the blessed promise which Christ made to his church, that the "gates of hades (the grave) shall not prevail against" it (Matt. xvi. 18), they can appropriately sing this song, and exclaim in language of inspiration: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (1 Cor. xv. 55). If the wicked dead are delivered from the grave, could they not as properly as the righteous sing the song of deliverance? And further: If they are raised from the dead would it completely destroy the force of Christ's blessed promise to the church that "the gates of hell (the grave) shall not prevail against" it? The implication could not be stronger than that the grave will "prevail" against some.

The vision in Rev. xx. 12 presents the same class,—the redeemed church,—standing "before the throne" that John had previously seen in two visions. To be allowed in the presence of God is a special favor, and hence our text affords no evidence of the re-living of the wicked dead.

Let us give a brief summary of the series of visions to which we have referred, each unfolding additional light to the mind of the Revelator regarding the scenes through which the saints should pass.

The first vision of the series was a view of the throne of God set in heaven, of indescribable glory, and his attention is particularly attracted to the broad and pellucid-like expanse before the throne, but unoccupied, (Rev. iv. 1–6.)

In the second vision of this place "before the throne" it was occupied by the redeemed church,—an innumerable multitude, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, bearing emblems of triumph over death, and wearing robes which had been washed in the blood of the Lamb. The scene is one of thrilling glory. This great multitude, just gathered from the prison-house of death, "stood before the throne and before the Lamb," while "all the angels stood round about the throne," gazing in upon that immortal company with enrapturing joy, and "fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God."—Rev. vii. 9–17.

The third vision presents the redeemed multitude "having the harps of God," celebrating their deliverance from the land of the enemy, and "they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb."—Rev. xv. 2, 3.

The fourth vision of this multitude,—all the saints, "both small and great"—is their judgment, for the purpose of awarding them their various positions in the kingdom of God; some of whom will sit upon twelve thrones, while others will occupy positions of less importance.

As all this transpires in heaven it may occupy the time that this world is being purified and prepared for the future abode of the saints; and then the new heavens and new earth will receive its immortal inhabitants, and "God shall dwell with them."—Rev. xxi. 3.

[Concluded in next issue.]

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

FROM MRS. C. C. WILLIAMS.

BR. STORRS: Another sorrowful year has nearly passed since I wrote last, and I am spared still for some wise purpose, I hope. Our precious first-born son was scarcely laid away to rest, when the gravest fears were felt for a daughter next in age; and that those were not groundless will be seen when I tell you that in just one year (viz., last Oct. 23) from the day he bade us a last adieu, we had to lay her beside him, and their rest is now together in the dust. She died of the same disease, viz.: consumption. Mourning for them is not without hope, and though I would not complain, yet gladly I would have retained my precious treasures longer; but it might not be; the bitter cup must be drained. At one time it seemed a second daughter, aged 19, must go likewise, in the same way; but at this date she seems in a fair way of recovery; so mercy is mixed with the cup, for which I trust I am not ungrateful. Thus you will see that heart and hands must have been amply employed, but not so engrossed but that the tidings brought by the HERALD of the prostration of its long revered editor could and did share the unfeigned concern and love felt by so many, and to unite in the prayer that God would have mercy on us all, lest in losing him we should have "sorrow upon sorrow." Thanks to Sister Helen Robertson for her detailed statement of your case in the Dec. 7th number, the last I have received. From that, I am led to hope a little that the next account will be more cheering, while at the same time I would not, if I could, have other than a cheerful ready deference to the will of that adored Master who knows so much better than we can what is best.

I must say, I am glad Br. THORNE occupies the place he does. I feel that he fits. That we all, and all things may be ordered and disposed of for the best, is my prayer. With love for all my Father's children, I am yours in Christian sympathy.

BUTLER, Mo., Dec. 27., 1870.

LORY JENCKS, Dansville, N. Y., writes: I take great satisfaction in reading the HERALD OF LIFE. It is meat in due season for me. I find as good preaching and exhortations as I want to hear, and should hardly know how to do without them.

[THE following article appeared in our issue of Jan. 25. The demand for the paper containing it far exceeds our ability to supply it, therefore by special request we re-print it this week.—EDITOR.]

THE HYGIENIC INSTITUTE OF NEW YORK:

OR, THE EDITOR'S SICKNESS AND RECOVERY.

THE general features of our sickness have been reported in the HERALD OF LIFE. It is sufficient for us now to say, that a hard, dry cough was its commencement. This was some time in October. For two weeks we continued our work in the office of the HERALD, taking such medicine as was prescribed by an eminent phycician; which however gave us no relief—night and day our cough continued unabated, till we became so exhausted and our appetite for food had so failed that we were obliged to take our bed about the first of November: from that time we were visited daily and sometimes twice a day by a Brooklyn physician in whom we had great confidence. He did all that human skill could do with homeopathic remedies. He gave us relief from the violence of our cough, but the disease continued unabated. At the end of three weeks we found ourself in "the valley of the shadow of death;" and our physician informed us distinctly enough that our end was near.

At this point an allopathic physician visited us. He pronounced us incurable. The same day, at evening, Dr. Miller, the hygienic physician, of New York city, came to our house, being urged thereto by Sister Helen Robertson, who was passing the winter at his Institute; himself also feeling a deep interest in our case from Helen's representation, though he had never seen us, but had read some of our writings on immortality twenty years ago.

The condition in which he found us is described by himself in the following note which he has since sent us by our special request:

MR. STORRS: Your disease was Acute Bronchitis. This is an inflammation of the lining membrane of the Bronchial tubes. In your case both the large and small tubes were involved, and the accompanying fever assumed a Typhoid form. When I first saw you, your pulse was about 130 to the minute, and would intermit once in seven or eight beats. Your respiration was 46 to the minute:* there was great difficulty in breathing, frequent cough, and a profuse expectoration of a thick, light colored stringy matter, about half of which would sink in water. The tongue was livid and red; no appetite, bowels constipated, countenance pale and haggard, no strength, spirits depressed, great restlessness, yet indisposed to move, with but little sleep night or day.

* Our natural pulse is 75 or 80 per minute, and our respiration about 20, to which they are now reduced.—EDITOR.

The result of Dr. Miller's first visit was an interview with our attendant physician, who cheerfully gave our case into his hands. From that time Dr. Miller visited us daily, though living some five miles from us, and crowded with business at his Institute. From the first treatment he gave us, we felt a sort of removal from "the valley of the shadow of death" where we had so long lain. He usually spent one hour with us, and applied his remedies with an energy that astonished us. We often said to him, "Doctor, you cannot be laboring thus barely for money." He was truly in earnest, and knew well our case was most critical. For four weeks he continued his daily visits and earnest efforts which proved successful, and after visiting us occasionally for two weeks more left us, saying, "You must come and see me now."

We have made the foregoing statement unknown to Dr. Miller, and out of gratitude to him as God's instrument in our recovery from the gates of the grave. The hand of God is visible to us in all this. If Sister Robertson had not providentially been spending the winter at his Institute we should not have known any thing of him or his practice. If he had not been providentially brought to my house, weeks since my friends, we have no doubt, would have laid me in the silent grave.

First of all, then, we thank and praise God and the Lamb for our prolonged life. Next, as God's instrument, we thank Dr. Miller for his faithful and kind services, which have resulted in our restoration, thus far; and as a token of our gratitude we give the following notice of his Institute, from "The Methodist," a gratuitous and unsolicited insertion in the HERALD OF LIFE, a paper that publishes no paid advertisements, for it is not an advertising sheet. We wish Dr. Miller success, and he cannot well fail of it. If you are sick, try him; we doubt not, if your case is a curable one, he will give you back health. Let him examine you. If he cannot help you, he will tell you so; he will not deceive you about it.

The following is the notice found in "The Methodist," of this city, two weeks ago; and we most cordially unite in the commendation at its close:

TURKISH BATHS.

Dr. E. P. Miller, the founder of the first Turkish bath in this city, has just opened a new and elegant establishment at 41 West Twenty-sixth street, New York. He has a house with fifty rooms, for transient and permanent boarders and patients, with excellent facilities for applying the Turkish baths, Electric baths, Water Cure, Movement Cure, and Lifting Cure.

His house is kept on strictly temperance principles, free from tobacco smoke, and affords a quiet home for those visiting the city for a longer or shorter time.

The Turkish baths are almost a specific for colds, catarrh, sore throat, bronchitis, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, and many other forms of acute and chronic diseases.

We commend this establishment to all our readers who wish to regain lost health, prevent disease, or secure a quiet, pleasant home in the city.

ONE of the finest qualities in a human being is that nice sense of delicacy which renders it impossible for him ever to be an intruder or a bore.

APPOINTMENTS.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, Feb. 19.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., (Richmond Hall), Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

CONCORD, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

MANCHESTER, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

WM. STUART.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 19.
NORTHFIELD, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 26.
HARTFORD, Conn., Sunday, March 5.
MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, March 12.

GEO. W. BROWN.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, Feb. 19.
HARTFROD, Conn., Sunday, Feb. 26.
WEST MERIDEN, CONN., Sunday, March 5.

S. W. BISHOP.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—Mrs. Lina Gamage, H. S. Hough, Z. McLester, S. Cornell.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—O. H. Merrill, F. L. Storrs, Dr. John Duncan, Henry H. Burroughs, Wm. L. Brown, J. T. Howland, W. W. Hosford, (received at the time sent;) Thomas Wilkins, Daniel Perine, Joshua Roberts, Lory Jencks, D. H. Baker, L. M. Dixon, F. Ingersoll, Simon Delicate, L. H. Rowe, Henry Lees, W. Jennings.

VARIOUS SUMS—Everett Hall, $3, (pays to the end of vol. viii.;) Wm. Squires, $3; R. L. Johnstone, 50 cents; R. E. Ladd, $25 on pledge, $5 for paper; Geo. Waugh, $3; Mrs. N. B. Smith, 50 cents.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Eld. H. Rockwell, Mrs. Lina Gamage, Robert Fowler, J. L. Whitney, A. A. Batte, Joshua Roberts, Mrs. H. M. Wood.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

R. E. Ladd, $10.

FOR OUR CAMP-MEETING IN 1771.

H. Rockwell, $1.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. BLANCHARD.—The money was not received.

THE POOR.

The poor—God's poor! oh, help them!
Keen blows the wintry blast,
And through the darkened air the snow
Is falling thick and fast;
It drifteth through the broken panes,
And through the shattered door.
O Christian friends, remember them,
And help, oh, help God's poor.

The poor—God's poor! oh, help them!
Look at their tearful eyes,
As winter's long and gloomy days
Before their vision rise;
Go to their cheerless dwellings,
Lighten their heavy load,
And fill with joy and thankfulness
Their desolate abode.

The poor—God's poor! oh, help them!
The Saviour here was poor;
He had not where to lay his head;
No sumptuous garb he wore:
A sad and weary wanderer
Upon Judea's hills,
He ate the bread of charity,
Drank from the sparkling rills.

The poor—God's poor! oh, help them!
For earth must pass away,
And rich and poor all equal stand,
At the last awful day.
So shall the blessed words of Christ
Be spoken unto thee:
"E'en as ye did it to my poor,
Ye did it unto me."

—Selected.

THE MILLENNIUM IN DANIEL.

TO EVERY thoughtful reader of the Bible, and especially to every true Christian, the question can never be without interest. What is to be the nature of the milleunial kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, which the prophets of old, and the apostles of more modern times, alike proclaim as to come? All, or almost all, are agreed that it is still future, and many believe that it is very near at hand; but yet, what we look for is still the subject of widely-differing opinion. Does not Scripture, then, afford us the means of arriving at a reasonably certain conclusion on this point? The writer thinks it does; and that the second chapter of the Book of the Prophet Daniel contains the materials of a very strong argument in support of the anticipation that the reign of Christ upon earth during the millennial period will be personal and visible. This argument is derivable from the vision of the image and its interpretation.

It is acknowledged by the large majority of writers upon prophecy that Nebuchadnezzar's image-vision includes the millennial period; but it does not seem to have been so generally perceived that it also determines, its time, that is, the epoch in history when it should commence, and, by an inference which seems inevitable, its character.

Nebuchadnezzar, in his dream, sees a great image, which stands before him. From its head of fine gold, to its feet of iron and clay, the figure of the image appears in all its parts perfect.

The king gazes upon the image until his attention is withdrawn to the cutting out of a stone from a mountain; and, looking, he sees that it is being cut out without hands:—"Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands." . . . "Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands."—vers. 34, 45.

While he looks, the stone is detached from its place, lifted into the air, smites the image on its feet of iron and clay, and breaks them in pieces. Immediately upon this, all the materials of which the image is composed are "broken to pieces together, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carries them away that no place is found for them."

The vision closes with the enlargement of the stone that smote the image, until it becomes "a great mountain and fills the whole earth."

We learn, from the interpretation of the dream, that the image, as it stood before Nebuchadnezzar, represented a succession of events which should take place upon the earth; and we observe that, as the events ranged downwards in the progress of time, so their symbols were ranged downwards in the construction of the image—the head representing the commencement, and the toes the termination, of the series of events shadowed forth under the whole symbol of the image. We may, therefore, speak of the period of gold, the period of silver, the period of brass, the period of iron alone, the period of iron and clay, which had its two successive phases—the first while the iron and clay were mixed; and the second, when, as in the toes, they were divided—and, lastly, the period of the stone.

Not until after the image, in its complete development, stands before Nebuchadnezzar, is the stone cut out; and, therefore, whatever may be the event of operation signified by the act of cutting out the stone from the mountain (upon which Daniel is silent), in point of time it comes after the commencement of the period of the clay and iron toes.

It will be obvious also that the time when the feet of the image are smitten by the stone cannot be anterior to the period of the toes; for its fall necessarily puts an end to the history of the image, and the toes represent the last page in that history.

The stone is interpreted to be a fifth and final kingdom, "which shall never be destroyed," and "shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms; and it shall stand forever."

Conformably to the structure of the symbolism of the vision, Daniel declares, "That in the day of these kings (necessarily the last of the series) shall the God of heaven set up this fifth kingdom."

Now there is an almost unanimous agreement among the numerous learned and able expositors of prophecy upon the following points:—

1. That the gold, silver, brass, and iron of the image, and the four beasts of Daniel's subsequent vision, recorded in the seventh chapter, are identical in their signification, and are typical respectively of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman Empires.

2. That the clayey admixture in the extremities of the image represents the broken and enfeebled state of the Roman Empire after, and consequent upon, the incursions of the Northern barbarians.

3. That the ten toes of the image, and the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast, as also the ten horns of the Apocalyptic beast (Rev. xiii. 1), each symbolize the ten kingdoms that arose out of the Roman Empire.

The identification of the kingdom of the second chapter with the kingdom spoken of in the 14th, 18th, 22d, and 27th verses of the seventh chapter is based on the following resemblances:—

1. They both arise at the same epoch in history—namely, at the time of the destruction of the fourth kingdom, or rather of the kingdoms that are formed out of the fourth kingdom. "In the day of these kings shall God set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."—ii. 44. "I beheld till the beast was slain . . . and there was given to the Son of Man dominion, and glory, and a kingdom."—vii. 14.

2. They are both instrumental in the destruction of the fourth kingdom. "The kingdom . . . shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms."—ii. 44. "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom."—vii. 18.

3. They both extend over the whole earth. "The stone became a great mountain and filled the whole earth."—ii. 35. "There was given to the Son of Man dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him."—vii. 14. "And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."—vii. 27.

4. They both endure forever; therefore neither can be regarded as the successor of the other. "And the kingdom . . . shall stand forever."—ii. 44. "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—vii. 14. "The saints shall possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever."—vii. 18.

If this identity be admitted, it follows that what is proved of the kingdom in one prophecy is proved also of the kingdom in the other prophecy; and that the imformations of the two prophecies must be combined in order to our full comprehension of all that is revealed on the matter.

The essential literalness characterising the whole of Daniel's interpretation of the vision of the image does not appear to have been distinctly apprehended, or the truth perceived, that (in this latter age, at least,) it will not admit of a spiritual or figurative meaning without violence to the structure of the entire symbolism, and to the texture and coherence of the interpretation itself. In this important particular it differs from the prophecy in the seventh chapter, and from other prophecies which relate to the fifth kingdom, and thus presents us with a key, and, it is believed, the only true key, to the millennial kingdom.

The express purpose of this vision was to make known to Nebuchadnezzar what should come to pass thereafter; and this purpose would have been defeated if the king had not received the interpretation given by Daniel in its literal sense for literally has the interpretation so far been fulfilled. Not alone to Nebuchadnezzar, however, but, age after age, to every reader of the Book of Daniel, accepting the interpretation in its literal sense, this vision has revealed what was yet future of the events predicted; and as, in the progress of time, event after event, in literal accomplishment, has passed from the prophetic to the historic page, belief in the literal sense of the prophecy has been confirmed, and the expectation of the literal fulfilment of what yet remained has been strengthened and justified; and if, in any age, from the days of Nebuchadnezzar to our own, a figurative, spiritual, or non-literal sense has been imposed upon the terms of the prophecy, the event has proved such a sense to have been unwarranted.

This prophecy has come down to our days with all its accumulated weight of confirmation, and there remains to be fulfilled but the smiting of the image, and the enlargement of the stone; or, as Daniel interprets it, the breaking to pieces and consuming of the kingdoms symbolized by the image, and the establishment of that kingdom which shall stand forever; and to believe that notwithstanding the prophecy in all its fulfilled particulars has been manifestly literal, yet in the two remaining particulars it is not so, is to believe that, up to a certain undefined and unascertainable point in the lapse of time since Daniel stood before Nebuchadnezzar, the reader of the prophecy has been right in giving to it a literal sense, but beyond that point has been wrong. If the prophecy in its unfulfilled part, be not literal, then the tendency of all the foregone fulfilments has been to mislead and not to guide us.

"The interpretation is sure;" but where, either to Nebuchadnezzar or to us, is its sureness, if its plain, obvious meaning may be overborne and beclouded by uninspired and secondary interpretation?

The Scriptures contain much of revelation in an emblematic form, which has not been interpreted; and, with regard to such, we may fairly admit human expositions; but Daniel's words are not emblematic, but very plain and unmistakable—words whose signification, as employed in the first part of the interpretation, has evidence in history (for the fourth kingdom unquestionably broke in pieces that which preceded it) and whose signification we have no reason to think was changed, when, in the 44th verse, Daniel declares that the kingdom which God shall set up, "shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms."

It must be borne in mind also that, as a rule, interpretations are intended to be understood in their obvious and literal sense. It is doubtful if there are any exceptions to this rule in the Scripture; for those cases (if there are any such) in which we are unable to apply the interpretation of fulfilled prophecy to historical events with absolute conclusiveness, cannot properly be regarded as exceptions.

The opinion that the symbolism of the vision, and the language of Daniel's interpretation, will bear such a meaning as makes the fifth kingdom to be simply a spiritual kingdom, having its seat in the hearts of true Christians; and the overthrow of error and the establishment of truth to be intended by the stone smiting the image, is at variance with many of the minute, but no doubt strictly accurate, particulars of the prophecy

1. The establishment of the truth involves the diffusion of the truth; but the stone does not fill the earth till after it has destroyed the kingdoms, and they are altogether swept away. Note the words, "The stone that smote the image became a great mountain," etc.—ii. 34, 35.

2. That no part of the image is typical of error; therefore it cannot be the extirpation of error in any shape that is represented by the destruction of the image.

3. The image represents from head to foot recognized kingdoms; of which the last, in its subdivided state, is now actually extinct; and surely the fulfilment of the prophecy imperatively requires the destruction of those kingdoms.

4. The action of the stone, as well as the language of the interpretation, denotes violence. "The stone smote the image" (ii. 35); "it shall break in pieces all these kingdoms" (44); whereas the establishment of a kingdom founded on the dissemination of truth and the growth of convictions, be they never so rapid, can have no resemblance to the scenes brought before Nebuchadnezzar in his dream.

5. The stone, which represents this kingdom, is not cut out of the mountain till after the last of the image periods has set in; and, conformably to this, in the interpretation, this kingdom is declared to be set up in the days of these kings—not till then—consequently it cannot typify a purely spiritual kingdom; for such a kingdom was certainly set up (if setting up means commencement) before the flood, and has been ruling in the hearts of the redeemed throughout all time. Moreover, it seems altogether inconsistent with the nature of a spiritual and invisible kingdom, to destroy, and then to take the place of, the existing governments of the earth. For surely, under these circumstances, even if its spirituality should be retained, it must lose its invisibility. The spiritual wages war with the spiritual; but here we have a spiritual kingdom to which is assigned by prophecy the work of destroying and superseding the material and visible kingdoms of the world.

With regard to the supposition that the smiting of the feet of the image by the stone symbolizes the establishment by Constantine, in the year A. D. 313, of Christianity as the religion of the Empire, and the consequent overthrow of idolatry, it may be observed,—

1. That no part of the image represented the idolatry of the Roman Empire. The legs of iron represented its political state and dominance; and therefore the application of the symbol to the destruction of idolatry cannot be sustained.

2. That the act of Constantine takes place in the purely iron period, and therefore is too early; for, as before pointed out, the stone cannot fall till the period of the clay and iron toes.

From the image vision and its interpretation, we do not gather the time of the setting up of the fifth kingdom with more precision, than that it shall be during the days of the last kings. Now, history informs us that the Western Roman Empire was divided into ten distinct kingdoms in the year 526; and therefore, at any time from that date up to the present, the fall of the stone would have been within the limits defined by this prophecy. But the vision of the four beasts narrows this limit, and teaches us, first, that the duration of the fourth kingdom in its divided state must be more than 1260 years; because that is the period assigned to the domination of the little horn, which does not rise till after the kingdom is divided into ten parts; secondly, that the downfall of the fourth kingdom and the destruction of the little horn take place simultaneously at the end of the twelve hundred and sixty years. Consequently, to the close of this period we must look for the event symbolized by the falling of the stone.

It remains to show the identity of Daniel's fifth kingdom and the millennium of the Apocalypse, and to draw the conclusion that thence necessarily follows.

Obviously, there are but two alternatives; the millennium is either the same with, or anterior to, Daniel's kingdom.

For the two cannot be supposed to co-exist as distinct kingdoms; and, therefore, as Daniel's kingdom, when once set up, endures forever, the millennial kingdom, if it be not identical, must precede it.

But if the millennium precede Daniel's kingdom, the period allotted to the little horn's making war with the saints, and prevailing over them—interpreted by the angel as "their being given into his hand"—must extend through the millennium; for it is said to continue till "judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Also, "the days of these kings" must, upon this supposition, be held to extend throughout the millennium; for it is in their days that Daniel's kingdom is set up; and the circumstance that they shall be broken in pieces and consumed by it, insures their continuance till its advent. Moreover, the angel's words in the 17th and 18th verses of the seventh chapter indicate a close successiveness in the following of the final kingdon upon the fourth, and give no countenance to the supposition that there can be interposed between them a period of a thousand years.

But as neither the continuance of the subjection of the saints to the little horn, nor the prolongation of "the days of these kings" through the millennium can be regarded as admissible suppositions, it follows that the millennium is Daniel's fifth kingdom—that is to say, the commencement of it—and therefore a literal and visible kingdom, which shall overturn the existing sovereignties, and exercise in their stead a government more perfect than this world has ever beheld.—London Quarterly Journal of Prophecy.

CHRIST IN THE SYNAGOGUE.—What a vivid picture has the inspired Evangelist been moved to present to us of that memorable morning! Prayer and the reading of the law were now over, and the reading of the prophets was to begin, and the reading of the season was from the old Evangelist Isaiah. The Redeemer stands up to read, and with the sanction of the now not improbably expectant ruler of that house of prayer, the roll is delivered to him by the attendant. He unfolds it, and reads that striking passage which his own divine wisdom and foreknowledge had moved him to select,—that passage which both in its specifications of time and circumstances was now being so exactly fulfilled. Such words might well have aroused the attention of those that heard it, nor can we wonder that our Lord's explanations were looked for with interest, and at first received with a kind of amazed approval.—Ellicott.

RUSKIN comparing England in the days of Alfred with the England of to-day, says: "As to public or private virtue, as to helpfulness and loving-kindness between man and man, between high and low, no wise man will say she is a whit higher, an inch nearer to God." And again: "Though England is deafened with spinning-wheels, her people have not clothes; though she is black with digging of fuel, they die of cold; and though she has sold her soul for gain, they die of hunger."

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

A TRUE STORY.

IN the field back of my house, and up the hill, are two nice springs. From one I draw water to my house through pipes, while the other goes to my barn, and my neighbor's house. The water runs very swiftly, because it is running down hill.

The pipe enters this spring, not at the top of the water, nor at the bottom either. If it were at the top, the scum would get into the pipe, and a floating bug now and then. If it were at the bottom, dregs and sediment would get in. So the pipe goes in about six inches below the top of the water.

When we draw the water at the barn for the horses, and my neighbor draws water at the same time for her washing day, the pipe sucks at a great rate. But it draws in nothing but pure water, if all floating things keep at the top, and all heavy things lie still at the bottom. Now for my story.

One morning there was a gay young frog about as big as half my thumb—too big for a tadpole, too small for a wise frog. He could go just where he pleased. He did not have to float with the bugs, for he knew how to dive. He did not have to stay at the bottom with the dregs, for he knew how to swim. So he kicked out his little hind legs and swam all around the spring, doing very much as he pleased.

One day he saw a little, round black hole of the pipe, where the water was running in quite freely. He wondered where it led to. He put his nose in and felt the water pull, and was a little scared and backed out. But it was such a funny feeling to be sucked that way; it felt kind of good round his nose, and he swam up and looked in again. He went in as much as half an inch, and then the water got behind him and he was drawn all in. "Here goes!" said he. "I shall see what I shall see!" And along he went with the water, till he came to where the pipe makes a bend for my barn—a sharp bend, straight up. As the water was quiet there, he gave a little kick and got up into a still, dark place, close by the barrel where the horse drinks. "Well," said he, "it's a snug place here, but rather lonely and dark."

Now and then he thought of the spring, and the light, and the splendid room he used to have to swim in, and he tried to swim back against the stream. But the water was on him, or running by him swiftly, and he had no room to kick in the pipe. So every time he started to go back to the spring he would work hard for a few minutes, and then get tired and slip back into the dark place by the barrel.

By and by he grew contented there. The water brought him enough to eat. He shut his eyes and grew stupid, stopped exercising and got fat, and as he had no room to grow very big in the pipe, he had to grow all long, and not broad. But he grew as big as he could, till at last he stopped up the pipe.

Then I had to go out and see what was the matter, for the horse had nothing to drink. I jerked away the barrel, pulled out the little plug and put a ramrod down; felt a springy, leathery something, and pushing, down it went, and out gushed the water. "What was that?" I thought. So I pulled out the big plug, and put down an iron ramrod and out came a great, long, red and white, and bleeding frog.

I couldn't put him together again. Any thing that gets sucked into that pipe and grows up in those dark places, has to come out dead, and all in pieces. I wondered how such a big frog could ever have got into so small a pipe. Then a wise lady in my house told me, "Why, he went in when he was little and foolish, and grew up in there!"

I cannot get that poor frog out of my mind. He was so like some young folks that I have seen. They frolicked up to the door of a theatre, or they stood and looked into a barroom, or they just wanted to go to one ball, or get behind the barn to smoke a pipe, or went off sleigh-riding with some gay young man without asking leave—or some way put their foolish noses into a dark hole that felt funny, and led, they didn't know where. Pretty soon, in they go. When they want to get back, they can't; and they grow bigger, and wickeder, and all out of shape in that dark place. If they come out at last, they are all jammed up, knocked to pieces, sick, or dying, or dead. When I see them in their coffins, I hear folks ask, "How came he to throw himself away so?" "What made him drink himself to death?" "How happened she to go off to infamy?" "How came he to be a gambler?"

Then I shall answer, as the wise lady told me about the frog, "They went in when they were little and foolish, and grew up there." A bad habit hugs a man tighter, and jams him out of shape worse than my pipes did that poor frog.—Thomas K. Beecher, in Little Corporal.

OLD CHARLIE.

OLD Charlie was a fine-looking horse, and very spirited. He was a very strong, serviceable horse, too. But with all his good qualities, Old Charlie had one very serious fault. When placed before a light load, he was all go-ahead, and it required a strong arm to keep him in check. But when it came to steady, hard work, then old Charlie would shirk, if he could get a chance.

I remember once father had some lumber to be boated on the canal about twenty miles. Unable to find a boatman, he hired a boat and took his own team, "Old Charlie and Bill," to do the towing, while I was driver. The horses were harnessed tandem, that is, one placed before the other, like most of the teams on the canal, Old Charlie being the hind or saddle-horse. For the first two or three miles he worked well, and then, finding it was steady, hard drawing, he took to his old habit of shirking, which was done so slyly that it was some little time before I discovered it. He appeared to be drawing hard all the time; but as the boat moved slower than at first, and knowing Old Bill was honest and the fault was not with him, I began to urge Old Charlie along.

Since that time, how often have I thought of Old Charlie when I have seen smart, active boys, and girls too, trying to evade hard study. Such scholars like easy lessons. Then they are sure to be the first to learn them. But when the lessons need hard study, then they seek to find some easier way of getting along. At their seats they have their books open, and appear to be busy; but they are only making believe. At recitation, too, how many ways they contrive to get along, and not have it appear that they know nothing about their lesson. If they only made the same effort to learn that they do to shirk their lessons, they would succeed without any difficulty.

Seems to me I hear some little boy or girl saying: "There, I have been acting just like Old Charlie; I have been shirking the hard work." Have you? Then stop at once and take a new start. Press your shoulders right into the harness, and you may be sure the load will move steadily along; and before you know it your work will be done, and well done.—The Child's Paper.

MORE than thirty thousand children in the city of New York, who ought to be in school, attend no school at all; and more than half of these are prowling about the streets smoking, drinking, fighting, and pilfering, growing up ignorant of everything but vice and dissipation. Already these mere boys insult people on the sidewalks, and shock the public by their rowdyism and crimes. And yet New York is full of schools, and schools of the best kind; free schools, where whoever will can come in and receive an education fit for "an American citizen." What is the difficulty? The fact is a bad one; for truancy and vagrancy are two little tracks running straight to ruin. Be sure of that.

A BIBLE VIEW OF HELL:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS.

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 366 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	3 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2 "
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "
21.	LIFE AND DEATH REAL,	2 "
22.	MAN'S DESTINY: or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	THE LIFE VIEWS,	2 "
24.	HOW READEST THOU?	2 "
25.	WHAT A FARMER HAS TO SAY: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, THE WRATH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?	2 "
26.	SOUL SURVIVANCE IN DEATH: NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE BIBLE,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box [illegible],
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 20.
WHOLE NUMBER [illegible].

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, [illegible] cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box [illegible],
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

The Meaning of the War.

EIGHTEEN hundred and seventy has left its awful mark in history. We had no intention of taking the place of the newspapers, which, for many months contained little else than carnage, distress, and misery unprecedented in modern times, and, in some respects, unparalleled in the dismal story of man. Our business was to point the moral of the dreadful fact now and then, to generalise and suggest, not to write the history of fire, agony, and famine with which the world's papers were making the world's inhabitants only too familiar. We keep to our sacred mission, and proclaim that the things which are shaken must pass away to make room for that which cannot be shaken, because it is founded in everlasting righteousness. We need not indulge in words of indignation against ambitious monarchs, because we understand, and have taught for many years, that all "the powers that be" are simply provisional, during the time that God permits the world-power of Gentilism, and will pass away for ever as soon as Christ, the Anointed Sovereign of universal empire, shall come to His throne. We leave it to the secular press to mete out praise or blame as it sees fit, to emperor, king, or republican, and to devise its own schemes to universal peace and brotherhood, for we know beforehand that all those schemes will fail, and that they are, like the very war which has given them birth, among those signs of the times, which speak of the nearness of a crisis, the naming of which only provokes the world's ridicule, and provides satire to the avowedly "religious" as well as the secular portion of the press.

We are not surprised at anything that has taken place during the last six months, because we know that the time of man's probation is fast coming to a close, and that in the face of the universe he must be pronounced a failure once more. That the doctrine of human perfectibility by human agency is utterly fallacious, though proclaimed by statesmen, philosophers, and divines, we are thoroughly convinced, and have been scorned and shunned for saying so, although the reason why we have spoken thus is simply because we prefer the word of God to that of men. There is a divine constitution prepared for the government of the nations, and they will be heaved, and tossed, and shattered, and broken until that be brought into actual operation. The government of the world will be a perfect and most beautiful thing some day, but not until the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven, is "KING over all the earth."

The thing that has pained us most of late, however,—i. e. apart from our deep sorrow on account of the poor men and helpless women and children who have been the victims of the insanity,—is the ignorance of men who ought to know better. Some amazingly foolish things have been said about "Christianity and the War Spirit." We cannot cease to wonder how it is that men who are in the habit of reading the words of our LORD and his apostles can possibly expect the era of universal peace before the Prince of Peace returns to set up his kingdom of truth and righteousness. The world would not have the Prince of Peace when he was here. It preferred the dominion of the Prince of Darkness to that of the Son of God, and what can it expect but upheavings, revolutions, trouble, war? For the divinely appointed Ruler has not given up his claim to the inheritance and the throne; and one of the worst things that could happen to humanity would be the enjoyment of undisturbed repose under "the ruler of the darkness of this world," who is a usurper, a murderer, and a liar. We have had leaflets, and tracts, and pamphlets sent us, denouncing the war,—as if any one approved it,—and intimating that ministers of the Gospel are to blame for not preventing its continuance, which is something too absurd for criticism.

How little some men know, even at this hour of the day, what the proper function of a minister of the Gospel is! The fallacy of this kind of reasoning arises from the inveterate idea that Christianity is destined to subdue the nations to the will of God—an idea which is not only without the slightest support in the Bible, but which is directly contradicted by its plainest teachings. People will have it that the dispensation of grace is the last dispensation which the divine programme of all time furnishes for mankind; and this radical error vitiates the frame-work of their logic, and hurries them to conclusions which are at once wild and worthless.

"But," we are asked, "is not war antichristian?" And as it is correctly assumed that there is only one reply to this pointed question, the querist congratulates himself that he has made out his entire case, that Christianity is "a failure," and that its advocates must be struck dumb by the horrible calamities which are desolating "Christian nations" in the latter end of the nineteenth century! But we are too old to be frightened by a logical superstructure whose foundation is a quagmire. We have but to touch the imposing erection and it sinks into ruin. We admit at once that war is antichristian, obviously, emphatically, flagrantly so; and that Christianity has not tamed the ferocity of the human animal, nor sheathed swords, nor subdued the ambition of tyrants, nor diffused the love of peace through the hearts of nations. "The nations have drunk of the wine of Babylon, therefore the nations are mad." The intoxication caused by the poisoned cup of apostasy from God has driven the human race into acts of insanity; and Christianity, though nominally embraced by the chief of nations, has not exorcised the delirious demon under whose influence they have been wounding and slaying each other from time immemorial. The nations are called Christian, but there is no magic in a name to change them into the likeness of him to whose name they have no right. There are "Children of God," saints and servants of Jesus Christ, in Germany and France, men who sigh and cry because of the abominations that surround them, and they are the living proof that Christianity has done the holy work she professes. She comes to "take a people out of the nations," and gladly welcomes all who submit to her gracious conditions, but she is not responsible for a task she never undertook, and must not be charged with failure in a religion where the unbelief of men would not permit her to act. The war, then, is another evidence that the boasted "civilization" of the day is only a more highly educated barbarism; another proof of the truth of our Lord's prophecy that wars should continue to the end of the age; another most manifest sign of the times, telling us that events are rapidly hastening to the great crisis; and another call upon believers to look for the coming of their blessed Lord, whose presence is so urgently needed in this sin-cursed and terribly distracted world. This is the lesson we draw from the tremendous conflict of 1870. May it be impressed upon many hearts, so as to lead to a more earnest waiting upon God!—Editor of the Rainbow.

A Fraternal Greeting.

IT is on our heart, brethren beloved in the Lord, to say a word in this closing number for the year, which may be kindly interpreted by you as at once a cordial salutation, our expression of gratitude for your valued help, and an encouragement to continue "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

SALUTATION.—There is much moral strength in sympathy, much comfort in that mutual esteem which springs up in minds united in the pursuit of a sacred object. Men who are clearly conscious that the honor of One who is unspeakably dear to them all is the supreme purpose of their hearts, whatever variety of opinion may exist among them, will regard each other with brotherly affection, and wish for each other the enjoyment of those blessings which the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ graciously bestows upon his children. It may be that, as in this case, some of them live far apart, separated by seas and continents, and placed amidst greatly varying circumstances, yet they can waft to each other in silence the feeling of esteem, and send up to heaven the believing prayer for increased light and love, and joy in the Holy Ghost. God has assigned their lot in different lands, and given to each of them the work he has to do in the service of his generation, but through Jesus they all have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Intervening space prevents them from seeing each other in the flesh, but distances and material measurements form no hindrance to fellowship with the Father and with the Son Jesus Christ. The brethren "scattered abroad" are one in their blessed Saviour; through him their prayers and thanksgivings are offered up; he is their LIFE, and they all meet in him. Without noise, or ceremony, or demonstration of any kind, the hearts of all the children of God in the world are habitually offering up the incense of adoration, through the High Priest of their profession, Christ Jesus. to him whom the Holy Spirit has taught them to call Abba, Father. This is true worship. Of it the outside world knows nothing, hears nothing. It is all perfectly noiseless, silently sublime, yet acceptable to God who hears it all, sees it all, as the fruit of his love in the Son of his love, by the consecrating Spirit. The booming organ, the lofty cathedral, the smoking incense, the robed choristers, the priestly procession, the imposing ritual, are not there; but consecrated hearts, living sacrifice, holy aspirations, devout thanksgiving, warm love, and the hope that maketh not ashamed are there; and God looks down well pleased with the issues of his eternal love and pours his blessing on the heads and hearts of his redeemed family. It is in such a scene as this that we delight; and to the brethren who compose this invisible congregation we send the salutation of brotherly love. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: to the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

GRATITUDE.—John wrote thus to the well-beloved Gaius: "Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; who have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well: because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth." The love of the apostles to those who gave them willing co-operation in their honorable but arduous work is repeatedly expressed in language of remarkable tenderness. Thus Paul, also: "I commend unto you Phœbe our sister, who is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea, that ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succorer of many, and of myself also. Greet Priscilla and Aquila my helpers in Christ Jesus; who have for my life laid down their own necks; unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles." "Help those women who labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life." Gratitude for help in Christian work is thus not only an appropriate and becoming feeling, but one for which there is abundant and touching apostolic precedent. We do not talk about "apostolic succession" in the gross sense of mere officialism—a thing whose mysteriousness consists simply in the fact that it has no existence—but apostolic doctrine is very precious to us, and as far as we know it we wish to commend it to the faith and love of others. Those who purchase and circulate this publication are our "fellow-helpers" in this Christian labor, and we thank them. Those who contribute to the necessary expense of printing and publishing a magazine which never did and never will write for the multitude, but for the thoughtful and devout, the earnest and intelligent, are our "fellow-helpers," and we thank them. Those who merely tell their friends that there is such a magazine, and that it reverently deals with the holiest and highest matters of revelation without the slightest regard to church, creed, sect, or party, so that God be glorified, whilst men are enlightened and truth is diffused, are our "fellow-helpers" too, and we thank them. We cannot help thinking, feeling, hoping, nay, positively believing, that the day will come when every Christian who has helped to make known the doctrines of the Second Advent of the Lord, and Immortality only in Christ, will thank his Father in heaven for the privilege and honor. Not more certain are we that the sun shines at midday than we are of the truth of these doctrines; and once they are permitted to have their legitimate force upon the heart and understanding, the word of God becomes clearer and dearer than ever, faith is strengthened, hope is brightened, cares are lightened, existence itself acquires a new significance, and to live to Christ is found to be life indeed!

ENCOURAGEMENT.—If we are certain that we are engaged in the work of the Lord, we have his assurance that our labor shall not be in vain. Let us make sure then of the nature of our work, and of the spirit in which we pursue it. Having ascertained these two things, we can leave the issue with our Master, and calmly wait the harvest. We wish above all things that Christ may be honored; and for this purpose we feel that his truth in its own loving simplicity and peerless beauty, stripped of all human traditions and scholastic glosses, is the agent; whilst his Holy Spirit, by whom it is inspired, gives it saving and enlightening effect upon human consciences. The Bible, always precious, is increasingly so in proportion to our advancing knowledge of its doctrines, precepts, and promises. It is to us, and to many of you, in some respects a "new book" since we learned to take its leading terms in their natural, grammatical sense. By "death," it means death; by "life," life; and by "the coming of the Lord," the coming of the Lord. These and a hundred other expressions accepted in their strict and proper meaning, and in no mystical, secondary, or "theological sense," make the Book a revelation, a lamp to our feet and a light to our path in our journey to meet the Lord we love, and not an enigma, a riddle, a mystery, the supposed "meaning" of which takes twenty different forms in the hands of twenty different teachers, leaving the bewildered learner at his wit's end, and utterly unable to answer the question, "What is the thing that the Lord hath spoken?"

But we have encouragement also from results actually ascertained. Doubtless—at least, we hope so—there are cases of spiritual and intellectual benefit through this magazine of which we have never heard; but we have received intelligence of a sufficient number to gladden our heart, to convince us that the work is of the Lord, and to encourage us to continue that work in the Lord's name and strength. It is but a short time that any of us will have to work. This duty of witness-bearing for Christ will not last much longer. Let us do it while we can. He deserves this grateful service at our hands. Does he not? —Editor of the Rainbow, for Dec.

"The Provisional Council of America."

BY MRS. CATHARINE C. WILLIAMS.

BR. STORRS: I thought I would take occasion to copy a letter I have just finished and addressed "To the 70 enrolled (and those who may hereafter be enrolled) members of the Provisional Council of America," through Rev. H. W. Beecher: greeting. Without suspecting that the equanimity of the distinguished circle of clergymen, laymen, etc., who so lately fraternized by breakfasting together at the Astor House, (an account whereof is given in the "N. Y. Tribune" of Dec. 21, 1870) will in the least be disturbed by any reflections such a significant event might suggest to any interested reader on such a thrice told, and to be repeated, expression of union, it would yet be a satisfaction to have them know "how it looks and seems" to one far off looker-on.

It "seems good" to read such concessions and acknowledgements as fell from the lips of "Rev. H. W. Beecher" in his "introductory address" respecting the spirit that concerned them, the "one-ness of true Christianity," etc., and it can readily be admitted that "variation is (admissible if not indispensable to the perfection of truth;" but the question occurs, are contradictions indispensable also? Here are met the representatives of a great number of professing Christians, (with one heaven the goal of all) who desire to find "a common center and bond of brotherhood;" a union "such as the world has long been waiting for," and (it might be added) "sought, but never found," though "such a union all Christians must feel was designed by the Divine Master." The words of this same Master, on a memorable occasion, seem appropriate here, viz.: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight," seeming to intimate that truth is near at hand. What thoughtful one among the multitude represented there, but what has been puzzled at the contradictory theories (petty though they be) based professedly on the same authority? producing such alienations and rivalries! And who of them is able to reconcile them, or set them aside, or even wishes to? Truly it is something to be willing to meet on the ground of "Common Loyalty to Christ;" but as long as "Divine Truth" is thought to be "100 sided," and each one thinks his is the right side, how can it be otherwise but that there will be pulling 100 different ways to correspond?

Why "Divine Truth" must needs be a hundred sided, does not appear; or why all Truths are not Divine, is a question worthy of consideration; and even if they are not, why the former should be 100 sided, while all other truths are one, though expressed differently, is mysterious, or would be, had not the mystery been solved in some cases, which leads to an explanation how the same may be done again. As Solomon says, "all things are easy when understood;" and as there is an A.B.C. in all sciences, I see not why theology may not be included.

And right here the thought occurs, how easy would the task be of "the Provisional Council of America," the proposed work of which, in the words of Rev. Dr. Cather, "will restore to Protestantism the unity of Apostolic times;" or in the language of one of the resolutions offered by "Dr. George L. Taylor, the creation and application of a science of Christian Morals," etc., could all the members of the Council be willing to lay aside all human teachings, and go back to what appears to be the A.B.C., or starting point in religious matters, viz., Gen. ii. 7, 8, 23, and there dwell till he comes to comprehend what human beings are, in reality, (and their relation to the lower animals) whence they sprung, and what their destiny, if they "die out of Christ," nor longer base his theology on an imaginary "immortal soul," or try to build any system, much less "a Science of Christian Morals" on any thing in itself so utterly baseless, and, reasoning from which, one is so soon lost in a field of conjecture, and every one, be he Catholic, Pagan, or "Evangelical," is left, with regard to the future, dark unknown, and the phenomena on every hand as well, without "chart or compass," and one's imaginations is as good as another's.

Could this simple plan be adopted, how would perplexities be dissipated, and grounds of differences disappear, as the astounding humiliating discovery of the entire mortality of the human race, "out of Christ" would burst upon the astonished, wondering, adoring view for the first time; and that but for Jesus' triumph over the grave all would return to the nothingness whence they came—perish. Then truth would be seen to be but one, and the only fitting companion for love, without which there can be no Christian union. "By one Spirit all are baptized into one body." This Spirit introduces no differences; but "immortal soul-ism" ever has, and ever will make irreconcilable differences and dissensions in the body. "No lie is of the truth." And it seems high time to choose which to believe, Him who has said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" or the one who said, "Ye shall not surely die."

May all those who so lately fraternized, with those they represented, be led to reject the latter; when all will as naturally commingle, as two drops of water, nor longer pull one hundred different ways to further the common purpose of glorifying God, and doing good, not to "immortal souls," assuredly, as no very extensive research will suffice to convince any candid, sincere inquirer, such souls are beyond human care, nor need human sympathies: as an immortal state can but be frought with all the blessings the highest intellect can aspire to; but, mortal, sinful, perishing "living souls" abound on every hand, to whom all, in Christ's stead, may minister and try to save from death. That this may be the result of the proposed "Mass Meeting," through the attainment of the desired Union, is the prayer of one who has (I trust) been nearly 40 years an humble member of Christ's Body.

BUTLER, MO., Jan. 19., 1871.

(Continued from last week.)

The Atonement.—A Review.

BY J. C. DAY.

THE principle which I set up is, that it did not comport with the honor of the law for God to issue a single positive good but out of respect to a perfect righteousness. It was as much a principle of the first covenant not to bestow a cup of cold water out of respect to anything but a perfect righteousness, for the time the subject had been in existence, as it was that Adam should not be confirmed in happiness without an obedience entire through the period of his probation; for the moment the first sin appeared he was brought under the condemnation of the law and allowed to suffer its penalty.

The following reasoning, therefore, will as much prove that every particle of positive good, ever destined to reach a sinful world, was granted as a reward to Christ, as that the blessings were, which constitute the reward of believers. The latter, however, I have chiefly in view. Man was not confirmed at first; and the issue is known to us all. The requisition of obedience, as an antecedent to the gift of eternal life, was not, indeed, so absolutely necessary as the punishment of sin without an atonement; but it answered the important purpose of honoring the law. It held this language in the ears of the universe: no creature shall receive eternal life till he has first done homage to my law.

There was, indeed, no other way of conferring immortality in a governmental form. In any other way it must have been a sovereign gift. Another plan, the gift to the possessor and the direct benevolence of God would be the same; but the method chose had the advantage of showing God's determination to honor his righteous statutes. This, then, must be considered the settled principle of the Divine law. And there was no reason why the principle should be given up under the Gospel. No necessity existed for the abandonment; for nothing was easier than to make over to Christ, as a legal reward, the whole inheritance for the benefit of the joint heirs. This indeed was not so necessary as an atonement in the matter of pardon; but it answered all the purposes of the original principle.

Atonement covered sin and placed us back where Adam stood the moment he was created, before he had either obeyed or transgressed. But how is eternal life to reach him? Upon the original principle it must be the reward of a perfect obedience. Well, you say, "when all the believer's sin is covered, the imperfections of his obedience are covered also; and that obedience, standing thus spotless, may be rewarded for its own sake." It may, indeed, without that utter prostration of government which would have resulted from pardon without an atonement; but not without departing from one of the great principles of the law. These were to punish sin, and to grant no reward but to a perfect, uninterrupted obedience. But your theory represents God as coming down from this high ground to reward an obedience which possesses neither of these attributes. That its imperfections are covered only takes away its sin; but it still wants something to make it valid. No covering of imperfection can add to it that standard weight and measure which the law requires. No washing can render it that thing to which the reward was originally promised.

Therefore, if the reward is dealt out upon this principle, more than half of the original demand of the law will be given up. This is the precise thing you have overlooked. Because God could daily bestow good upon Adam for his own works, it is inferred that he may on believers after their sin is covered; not considering that in the former instance he rewarded a perfect and uninterrupted obedience, and in the latter would reward one deficient in both these respects. This would certainly be a very material change in the Divine administration; and a change altogether at the expense of the law. So that your theory defeats the very thing you have labored so hard to establish; it would be an innovation wholly needless, and ought not to be believed without decisive evidence.

But it may be said, that, "to suppose God unwilling to reward the obedience of his people after their sin is covered, without calling in the aid of another's righteousness, would militate against his grace and benevolence." But why? If a certain amount of good is dispensed to the ill-deserving, which upon every principle is both benevolent and gracious, why should the qualities be deminished by any respect that may be paid, on account of the law, to the obedience of Christ? If the law refuses to deliver that good to any but a perfect obedience, and God, to save the honor of the law, continues to measure it out to Christ, with intent that it shall go through him to sinners, is it not as great an honor to the ill-deserving as though it had passed directly to them? And is not the benevolence as great, at least, as though it had rushed to the conclusion without respect to the law? The gift is the same to the sinner, and finds him as ill-deserving as though it had come to him the other way, while the method chosen subserves the further end of honoring a righteous law. The only difference is, that upon one plan the principle of the law is adhered to; on the other, it is given up. And why the benevolence or grace should be the greater for selecting the manner most injurious to the law, when no one is benefitted by it, would be hard to tell.

At any rate, upon this principle grace and benevolence are both excluded from pardon. It is admitted, generally, that this favor is granted to sinners out of respect to the atonement of Christ. You say, "Death of Christ." And did any one but an infidel ever dream that the grace or benevolence of pardon was the less on that account? And if without impairing the benevolence or grace of the gift, remission can be administered on account of the expiation of Christ, why not eternal life on account of his obedience?

The plan in question sends us to God for all positive good; not, indeed as sinners; for our sin is covered by the atonement; but as having nothing to offer but an imperfect obedience. All that Christ does is to cover the sin of that imperfection, leaving the imperfection still remaining; and after men are thus purged from guilt, with all the defect of positive righteousness, they are sent to God without a mediator for their whole positive salvation. After the sin of withholding ninety degrees of obedience is pardoned, then degrees are accepted without a Mediator where the law demanded a hundred.

This system takes away one half of a Saviour, and one half of his praise; according to its representation Christ procures our release from prison, and then leaves us to make our way through the world alone. We are left to fight the world, the flesh, and the devil, without the Captain of the Lord's host, and to conquer, not under his banner, but, in a separate warfare. Half of our dependence on Christ is thus taken away, and for all the positive good of both worlds we must rely on our own works! The Redeemer is turned out of one half of our religion, and the whole is left cold and gloomy; we no longer feel that every particle of food and every article of clothing was procured by our Divine friend, and turn him off with the frigid acknowledgment that he was the mere antecedent of these gifts. Our common comforts, upon this plan, are not half so sweet, nor the crown in prospect half so precious. How delightful to view all these things as Christ's, earned by his obedience, and laid up in him for our use.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS.

[To be Continued.]

The King of Siam, on hearing that the Pope had lost some valuable jewels, in consequence of a thief having got possession of his keys, remarked: "Ah! what a man! professing to keep the keys of heaven, and not able to guard those of his own bureau!"

PROUD hearts and lofty mountains are always barren.

THEY who are too poor to trade in the world, may buy abundantly in God's market.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
Leonard C. Thorne, New York, President.
Geo. K. Carroll, New York, Vice President.
Wm. H. H. McAllister, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
Wm. H. Thorne, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, Pa.
John Kemp, New York, | Wm. Roworth, New York,
Richard Martin, New York, | T. M. Redhead, Brooklyn, N.Y.

The Object of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 20.
WHOLE NUMBER 254.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 50 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, BOX 4,653, NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE MEANING OF THE WAR.

EIGHTEEN hundred and seventy has left its awful mark in history. We had no intention of taking the place of the newspapers, which, for many months contained little else than carnage, distress, and misery unpredented in modern times, and, in some respects, unparalleled in the dismal story of man. Our business was to point the moral of the dreadful fact now and then, to generalise and suggest, not to write the history of fire, agony, and famine with which the world's papers were making the world's inhabitants only too familiar. We keep to our sacred mission, and proclaim that the things which are shaken must pass away to make room for that which cannot be shaken, because it is founded in everlasting righteousness. We need not indulge in words of indignation against ambitious monarchs, because we understand, and have taught for many years, that all "the powers that be" are simply provisional, during the time that God permits the world-power of Gentilism, and will pass away for ever as soon as Christ, the Anointed Sovereign of universal empire, shall come to His throne. We leave it to the secular press to mete out praise or blame as it sees fit, to emperor, king, or republican, and to devise its own schemes to universal peace and brotherhood, for we know beforehand that all those schemes will fail, and that they are, like the very war which has given them birth, among those signs of the times, which speak of the nearness of a crisis, the naming of which only provokes the world's ridicule, and provides satire to the avowedly "religious" as well as the secular portion of the press.

We are not surprised at anything that has taken place during the last six months, because we know that the time of man's probation is fast coming to a close, and that in the face of the universe he must be pronounced a failure once more. That the doctrine of human perfectibility by human agency is utterly fallacious, though proclaimed by statesmen, philosophers, and divines, we are thoroughly convinced, and have been scorned and shunned for saying so, although the reason why we have spoken thus is simply because we prefer the word of God to that of men. There is a divine constitution prepared for the government of the nations, and they will be heaved, and tossed, and shattered, and broken until that be brought into actual operation. The government of the world will be a perfect and most beautiful thing some day, but not until the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven, is "KING over all the earth."

The thing that has pained us most of late, however,—i. e. apart from our deep sorrow on account of the poor men and helpless women and children who have been the victims of the insanity,—is the ignorance of men who ought to know better. Some amazingly foolish things have been said about "Christianity and the War Spirit." We cannot cease to wonder how it is that men who are in the habit of reading the words of our LORD and his apostles can possibly expect the era of universal peace before the Prince of Peace returns to set up his kingdom of truth and righteousness. The world would not have the Prince of Peace when he was here. It preferred the dominion of the Prince of Darkness to that of the Son of God, and what can it expect but upheavings, revolutions, trouble, war? For the divinely appointed Ruler has not given up his claim to the inheritance and the throne; and one of the worst things that could happen to humanity would be the enjoyment of undisturbed repose under "the ruler of the darkness of this world," who is a usurper, a murderer, and a liar. We have had leaflets, and tracts, and pamphlets sent us, denouncing the war,—as if any one approved it,—and intimating that ministers of the Gospel are to blame for not preventing its continuance, which is something too absurd for criticism.

How little some men know, even at this hour of the day, what the proper function of a minister of the Gospel is! The fallacy of this kind of reasoning arises from the inveterate idea that Christianity is destined to subdue the nations to the will of God—an idea which is not only without the slightest support in the Bible, but which is directly contradicted by its plainest teachings. People will have it that the dispensation of grace is the last dispensation which the divine programme of all time furnishes for mankind; and this radical error vitiates the frame-work of their logic, and hurries them to conclusions which are at once wild and worthless.

"But," we are asked, "is not war antichristian?" And as it is correctly assumed that there is only one reply to this pointed question, the querist congratulates himself that he has made out his entire case, that Christianity is "a failure," and that its advocates must be struck dumb by the horrible calamities which are desolating "Christian nations" in the latter end of the nineteenth century! But we are too old to be frightened by a logical superstructure whose foundation is a quagmire. We have but to touch the imposing erection and it sinks into ruin. We admit at once that war is antichristian, obviously, emphatically, flagrantly so; and that Christianity has not tamed the ferocity of the human animal, nor sheathed swords, nor subdued the ambition of tyrants, nor diffused the love of peace through the hearts of nations. "The nations have drunk of the wine of Babylon, therefore the nations are mad." The intoxication caused by the poisoned cup of apostasy from God has driven the human race into acts of insanity; and Christianity, though nominally embraced by the chief of nations, has not exorcised the delirious demon under whose influence they have been wounding and slaying each other from time immemorial. The nations are called Christian, but there is no magic in a name to change them into the likeness of him to whose name they have no right. There are "Children of God," saints and servants of Jesus Christ, in Germany and France, men who sigh and cry because of the abominations that surround them, and they are the living proof that Christianity has done the holy work she professes. She comes to "take a people out of the nations," and gladly welcomes all who submit to her gracious conditions, but she is not responsible for a task she never undertook, and must not be charged with failure in a religion where the unbelief of men would not permit her to act. The war, then, is another evidence that the boasted "civilization" of the day is only a more highly educated barbarism; another proof of the truth of our Lord's prophecy that wars should continue to the end of the age; another most manifest sign of the times, telling us that events are rapidly hastening to the great crisis; and another call upon believers to look for the coming of their blessed Lord, whose presence is so urgently needed in this sin-cursed and terribly distracted world. This is the lesson we draw from the tremendous conflict of 1870. May it be impressed upon many hearts, so as to lead to a more earnest waiting upon God!—Editor of the Rainbow.

A FRATERNAL GREETING.

IT is on our heart, brethren beloved in the Lord, to say a word in this closing number for the year, which may be kindly interpreted by you as at once a cordial salutation, our expression of gratitude for your valued help, and an encouragement to continue "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

SALUTATION.—There is much moral strength in sympathy, much comfort in that mutual esteem which springs up in minds united in the pursuit of a sacred object. Men who are clearly conscious that the honor of One who is unspeakably dear to them all is the supreme purpose of their hearts, whatever variety of opinion may exist among them, will regard each other with brotherly affection, and wish for each other the enjoyment of those blessings which the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ graciously bestows upon his children. It may be that, as in this case, some of them live far apart, separated by seas and continents, and placed amidst greatly varying circumstances, yet they can waft to each other in silence the feeling of esteem, and send up to heaven the believing prayer for increased light and love, and joy in the Holy Ghost. God has assigned their lot in different lands, and given to each of them the work he has to do in the service of his generation, but through Jesus they all have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Intervening space prevents them from seeing each other in the flesh, but distances and material measurements form no hindrance to fellowship with the Father and with the Son Jesus Christ. The brethren "scattered abroad" are one in their blessed Saviour; through him their prayers and thanksgivings are offered up; he is their LIFE, and they all meet in him. Without noise, or ceremony, or demonstration of any kind, the hearts of all the children of God in the world are habitually offering up the incense of adoration, through the High Priest of their profession, Christ Jesus, to him whom the Holy Spirit has taught them to call Abba, Father. This is true worship. Of it the outside world knows nothing, hears nothing. It is all perfectly noiseless, silently sublime, yet acceptable to God who hears it all, sees it all, as the fruit of his love in the Son of his love, by the consecrating Spirit. The booming organ, the lofty cathedral, the smoking incense, the robed choristers, the priestly procession, the imposing ritual, are not there; but consecrated hearts, living sacrifice, holy aspirations, devout thanksgiving, warm love, and the hope that maketh not ashamed are there; and God looks down well pleased with the issues of his eternal love and pours his blessing on the heads and hearts of his redeemed family. It is in such a scene as this that we delight; and to the brethren who compose this invisible congregation we send the salutation of brotherly love. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you: to the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

GRATITUDE.—John wrote thus to the well-beloved Gaius: "Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; who have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well: because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth." The love of the apostles to those who gave them willing co-operation in their honorable but arduous work is repeatedly expressed in language of remarkable tenderness. Thus Paul, also: "I commend unto you Phœbe our sister, who is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea, that ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succorer of many, and of myself also. Greet Priscilla and Aquila my helpers in Christ Jesus; who have for my life laid down their own necks; unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles." "Help those women who labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life." Gratitude for help in Christian work is thus not only an appropriate and becoming feeling, but one for which there is abundant and touching apostolic precedent. We do not talk about "apostolic succession" in the gross sense of mere officialism—a thing whose mysteriousness consists simply in the fact that it has no existence—but apostolic doctrine is very precious to us, and as far as we know it we wish to commend it to the faith and love of others. Those who purchase and circulate this publication are our "fellow-helpers" in this Christian labor, and we thank them. Those who contribute to the necessary expense of printing and publishing a magazine which never did and never will write for the multitude, but for the thoughtful and devout, the earnest and intelligent, are our "fellow-helpers," and we thank them. Those who merely tell their friends that there is such a magazine, and that it reverently deals with the holiest and highest matters of revelation without the slightest regard to church, creed, sect, or party, so that God be glorified, whilst men are enlightened and truth is diffused, are our "fellow-helpers" too, and we thank them. We cannot help thinking, feeling, hoping, nay, positively believing, that the day will come when every Christian who has helped to make known the doctrines of the Second Advent of the Lord, and Immortality only in Christ, will thank his Father in heaven for the privilege and honor. Not more certain are we that the sun shines at midday than we are of the truth of these doctrines; and once they are permitted to have their legitimate force upon the heart and understanding, the word of God becomes clearer and dearer than ever, faith is strengthened, hope is brightened, cares are lightened, existence itself acquires a new significance, and to live to Christ is found to be life indeed!

ENCOURAGEMENT.—If we are certain that we are engaged in the work of the Lord, we have his assurance that our labor shall not be in vain. Let us make sure then of the nature of our work, and of the spirit in which we pursue it. Having ascertained these two things, we can leave the issue with our Master, and calmly wait the harvest. We wish above all things that Christ may be honored; and for this purpose we feel that his truth in its own loving simplicity and peerless beauty, stripped of all human traditions and scholastic glosses, is the agent; whilst his Holy Spirit, by whom it is inspired, gives it saving and enlightening effect upon human consciences. The Bible, always precious, is increasingly so in proportion to our advancing knowledge of its doctrines, precepts, and promises. It is to us, and to many of you, in some respects a "new book" since we learned to take its leading terms in their natural, grammatical sense. By "death," it means death; by "life," life; and by "the coming of the Lord," the coming of the Lord. These and a hundred other expressions accepted in their strict and proper meaning, and in no mystical, secondary, or "theological sense," make the Book a revelation, a lamp to our feet and a light to our path in our journey to meet the Lord we love, and not an enigma, a riddle, a mystery, the supposed "meaning" of which takes twenty different forms in the hands of twenty different teachers, leaving the bewildered learner at his wit's end, and utterly unable to answer the question, "What is the thing that the Lord hath spoken?"

But we have encouragement also from results actually ascertained. Doubtless—at least, we hope so—there are cases of spiritual and intellectual benefit through this magazine of which we have never heard; but we have received intelligence of a sufficient number to gladden our heart, to convince us that the work is of the Lord, and to encourage us to continue that work in the Lord's name and strength. It is but a short time that any of us will have to work. This duty of witness-bearing for Christ will not last much longer. Let us do it while we can. He deserves this grateful service at our hands. Does he not?—Editor of the Rainbow, for Dec.

"THE PROVISIONAL COUNCIL OF AMERICA."

BY MRS. CATHARINE C. WILLIAMS.

BR. STORRS: I thought I would take occasion to copy a letter I have just finished and addressed "To the 70 enrolled (and those who may hereafter be enrolled) members of the Provisional Council of America," through Rev. H. W. Beecher: greeting. Without suspecting that the equanimity of the distinguished circle of clergymen, laymen, etc., who so lately fraternized by breakfasting together at the Astor House, (an account whereof is given in the "N. Y. Tribune" of Dec. 21, 1870) will in the least be disturbed by any reflections such a significant event might suggest to any interested reader on such a thrice told, and to be repeated, expression of union, it would yet be a satisfaction to have them know "how it looks and seems" to one far off looker-on.

It "seems good" to read such concessions and acknowledgements as fell from the lips of "Rev. H. W. Beecher" in his "introductory address" respecting the spirit that concerned them, the "one-ness of true Christianity," etc., and it can readily be admitted that "variation is (admissible if not indispensable to the perfection of truth;" but the question occurs, are contradictions indispensable also? Here are met the representatives of a great number of professing Christians, (with one heaven the goal of all) who desire to find "a common center and bond of brotherhood;" a union "such as the world has long been waiting for," and (it might be added) "sought, but never found," though "such a union all Christians must feel was designed by the Divine Master." The words of this same Master, on a memorable occasion, seem appropriate here, viz.: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight," seeming to intimate that truth is near at hand. What thoughtful one among the multitude represented there, but what has been puzzled at the contradictory theories (petty though they be) based professedly on the same authority? producing such alienations and rivalries! And who of them is able to reconcile them, or set them aside, or even wishes to? Truly it is something to be willing to meet on the ground of "Common Loyalty to Christ;" but as long as "Divine Truth" is thought to be "100 sided," and each one thinks his is the right side, how can it be otherwise but that there will be pulling 100 different ways to correspond?

Why "Divine Truth" must needs be a hundred sided, does not appear; or why all Truths are not Divine, is a question worthy of consideration; and even if they are not, why the former should be 100 sided, while all other truths are one, though expressed differently, is mysterious, or would be, had not the mystery been solved in some cases, which leads to an explanation how the same may be done again. As Solomon says, "all things are easy when understood;" and as there is an A.B.C. in all sciences, I see not why theology may not be included.

And right here the thought occurs, how easy would the task be of "the Provisional Council of America," the proposed work of which, in the words of Rev. Dr. Cather, "will restore to Protestantism the unity of Apostolic times;" or in the language of one of the resolutions offered by "Dr. George L. Taylor, the creation and application af a science of Christian Morals," etc., could all the members of the Council be willing to lay aside all human teachings, and go back to what appears to be the A.B.C., or starting point in religious matters, viz., Gen. ii. 7, 8, 23, and there dwell till he comes to comprehend what human beings are, in reality, (and their relation to the lower animals) whence they sprung, and what their destiny, if they "die out of Christ;" nor longer base his theology on an imaginary "immortal soul," or try to build any system, much less "a Science of Christian Morals" on any thing in itself so utterly baseless, and, reasoning from which, one is so soon lost in a field of conjecture, and every one, be he Catholic, Pagan, or "Evangelical," is left, with regard to the future, dark unknown, and, the phenomena on every hand as well, without "chart or compass," and one's imagination is as good as another's.

Could this simple plan be adopted, how would perplexities be dissipated, and grounds of differences disappear, as the astounding humiliating discovery of the entire mortality of the human race, "out of Christ" would burst upon the astonished, wondering, adoring view for the first time; and that but for Jesus' triumph over the grave all would return to the nothingness whence they came—perish. Then truth would be seen to be but one, and the only fitting companion for love, without which there can be no Christian union. "By one Spirit all are baptized into one body." This Spirit introduces no differences; but "immortal soul-ism" ever has, and ever will make irreconcilable differences and dissensions in the body. "No lie is of the truth." And it seems high time to choose which to believe, Him who has said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" or the one who said, "Ye shall not surely die."

May all those who so lately fraternized, with those they represented, be led to reject the latter; when all will as naturally commingle, as two drops of water, nor longer pull one hundred different ways to further the common purpose of glorifying God, and doing good, not to "immortal souls," assuredly, as no very extensive research will suffice to convince any candid, sincere inquirer, such souls are beyond human care, nor need human sympathies: as an immortal state can but be frought with all the blessings the highest intellect can aspire to; but, mortal, sinful, perishing "living souls" abound on every hand, to whom all, in Christ's stead, may minister and try to save from death. That this may be the result of the proposed "Mass Meeting," through the attainment of the desired Union, is the prayer of one who has (I trust) been nearly 40 years an humble member of Christ's Body.

BUTLER, MO., Jan. 19., 1871.

(Continued from last week.)

THE ATONEMENT.—A REVIEW.

BY J. C. DAY.

THE principle which I set up is, that it did not comport with the honor of the law for God to issue a single positive good but out of respect to a perfect righteousness. It was as much a principle of the first covenant not to bestow a cup of cold water out of respect to anything but a perfect righteousness, for the time the subject had been in existence, as it was that Adam should not be confirmed in happiness without an obedience entire through the period of his probation; for the moment the first sin appeared he was brought under the condemnation of the law and allowed to suffer its penalty.

The following reasoning, therefore, will as much prove that every particle of positive good, ever destined to reach a sinful world, was granted as a reward to Christ, as that the blessings were, which constitute the reward of believers. The latter, however, I have chiefly in view. Man was not confirmed at first; and the issue is known to us all. The requisition of obedience, as an antecedent to the gift of eternal life, was not, indeed, so absolutely necessary as the punishment of sin without an atonement; but it answered the important purpose of honoring the law. It held this language in the ears of the universe: no creature shall receive eternal life till he has first done homage to my law.

There was, indeed, no other way of conferring immortality in a governmental form. In any other way it must have been a sovereign gift. Another plan, the gift to the possessor and the direct benevolence of God would be the same; but the method chose had the advantage of showing God's determination to honor his righteous statutes. This, then, must be considered the settled principle of the Divine law. And there was no reason why the principle should be given up under the Gospel. No necessity existed for the abandonment; for nothing was easier than to make over to Christ, as a legal reward, the whole inheritance for the benefit of the joint heirs. This indeed was not so necessary as an atonement in the matter of pardon; but it answered all the purposes of the original principle.

Atonement covered sin and placed us back where Adam stood the moment he was created, before he had either obeyed or transgressed. But how is eternal life to reach him? Upon the original principle it must be the reward of a perfect obedience. Well, you say, "when all the believer's sin is covered, the imperfections of his obedience are covered also; and that obedience, standing thus spotless, may be rewarded for its own sake." It may, indeed, without that utter prostration of government which would have resulted from pardon without an atonement; but not without departing from one of the great principles of the law. These were to punish sin, and to grant no reward but to a perfect, uninterrupted obedience. But your theory represents God as coming down from this high ground to reward an obedience which possesses neither of these attributes. That its imperfections are covered only takes away its sin; but it still wants something to make it valid. No covering of imperfection can add to it that standard weight and measure which the law requires. No washing can render it that thing to which the reward was originally promised.

Therefore, if the reward is dealt out upon this principle, more than half of the original demand of the law will be given up. This is the precise thing you have overlooked. Because God could daily bestow good upon Adam for his own works, it is inferred that he may on believers after their sin is covered; not considering that in the former instance he rewarded a perfect and uninterrupted obedience, and in the latter would reward one deficient in both these respects. This would certainly be a very material change in the Divine administration; and a change altogether at the expense of the law. So that your theory defeats the very thing you have labored so hard to establish; it would be an innovation wholly needless, and ought not to be believed without decisive evidence.

But it may be said, that, "to suppose God unwilling to reward the obedience of his people after their sin is covered, without calling in the aid of another's righteousness, would militate against his grace and benevolence." But why? If a certain amount of good is dispensed to the ill-deserving, which upon every principle is both benevolent and gracious, why should the qualities be deminished by any respect that may be paid, on account of the law, to the obedience of Christ? If the law refuses to deliver that good to any but a perfect obedience, and God, to save the honor of the law, continues to measure it out to Christ, with intent that it shall go through him to sinners, is it not as great an honor to the ill-deserving as though it had passed directly to them? And is not the benevolence as great, at least, as though it had rushed to the conclusion without respect to the law? The gift is the same to the sinner, and finds him as ill-deserving as though it had come to him the other way, while the method chosen subserves the further end of honoring a righteous law. The only difference is, that upon one plan the principle of the law is adhered to; on the other, it is given up. And why the benevolence or grace should be the greater for selecting the manner most injurious to the law, when no one is benefitted by it, would be hard to tell.

At any rate, upon this principle grace and benevolence are both excluded from pardon. It is admitted, generally, that this favor is granted to sinners out of respect to the atonement of Christ. You say, "Death of Christ." And did any one but an infidel ever dream that the grace or benevolence of pardon was the less on that account? And if without impairing the benevolence or grace of the gift, remission can be administered on account of the expiation of Christ, why not eternal life on account of his obedience?

The plan in question sends us to God for all positive good; not, indeed as sinners; for our sin is covered by the atonement; but as having nothing to offer but an imperfect obedience. All that Christ does is to cover the sin of that imperfection, leaving the imperfection still remaining; and after men are thus purged from guilt, with all the defect of positive righteousness, they are sent to God without a mediator for their whole positive salvation. After the sin of withholding ninety degrees of obedience is pardoned, then degrees are accepted without a Mediator where the law demanded a hundred.

This system takes away one half of a Saviour, and one half of his praise; according to its representation Christ procures our release from prison, and then leaves us to make our way through the world alone. We are left to fight the world, the flesh, and the devil, without the Captain of the Lord's host, and to conquer, not under his banner, but in a separate warfare. Half of our dependence on Christ is thus taken away, and for all the positive good of both worlds we must rely on our own works! The Redeemer is turned out of one half of our religion, and the whole is left cold and gloomy; we no longer feel that every particle of food and every article of clothing was procured by our Divine friend, and turn him off with the frigid acknowledgment that he was the mere antecedent of these gifts. Our common comforts, upon this plan, are not half so sweet, nor the crown in prospect half so precious. How delightful to view all these things as Christ's, earned by his obedience, and laid up in him for our use.

SOUTH ABINGDON, MASS.

[To be Continued.]

THE King of Siam, on hearing that the Pope had lost some valuable jewels, in consequence of a thief having got possession of his keys, remarked: "Ah! what a man! professing to keep the keys of heaven, and not able to guard those of his own bureau!"

PROUD hearts and lofty mountains are always barren.

THEY who are too poor to trade in the world, may buy abundantly in God's market.

Our Work.

Now as to our future work. Brethren and friends look around you! What is the meaning of all these tremendous changes? Why this: "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—Ezek. xxi. 27. And this: "I will shake the heavens and the earth; and I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother."—Hag. ii. 21, 22. And this: "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire."—Heb. xii. 26-29. Surely this is not a time for silence on the part of men who have any power to show "that which is noted in the Scripture of truth." We must not keep silence, lest the great day come unaware upon any whom we might have instructed. Every thing is tending to and making ready for the great crisis of all time. Mortal men are not fit to rule this great world; imposter "priests" have long enough insulted heaven by pretending to rule the church of God; and the time is at hand when both shall be set aside forever, that the true "priest upon his throne" may realize God's ideal of government and godliness. All human governments are failures. All churches are failures. All men are failures. What then? Despair? No! Christ is coming, the perfect Ruler, the perfect Head of the church, the perfect Man, and then he whose name is Love will see his eternal purpose realized gloriously. Men and brethren, I have much to say on all these matters. Will you help me to say it without distraction? This is my programme for the future. Will you help me to fill it up peacefully in my study? The day that is coming will be bright and beautiful to the loving and the loyal, and the recollection that we did what we could to bring others to the knowledge of the truth will deepen the bliss of the kingdom.—Editor of the Rainbow.

A young lady having read about a man having invented a stove which will consume its own smoke, hopes he will next devise a method whereby tobacco smokers can be run on the same economical principle.

Do not mistake a tendency for a talent; nor conclude that what you dislike to do is not rightfully demanded of you.

There is a vast deal of good advice in the saying of the old Persian: "In all thy quarrels leave open the door of reconciliation."

Thos. Wilkins, Dorchester, Mass., writes: I cannot think of being deprived of the paper as I prize it highly. I do not know what my indebtedness for it is. I send two dollars, intending to send more soon. Would like to know to what number this pays, and will strive to keep the matter straight. I am thankful to our heavenly Father for the light that shines from his work also, for your improved health.

Note by Editor.

You have paid up to the end of volume viii.

Orin H. Merrill, Lewiston, Me., writes: One year has passed away since I began to read your valuable paper. I think I have emerged from the mists and fogs of theological stupor into the light of Bible truth, and this paper has done the work; it has done it well, I assure you. This doctrine of No Life out of Christ does satisfy the masses, even those that are well steeped in theological burning up. The unregenerate do say, it vindicates the Almighty and makes him a God of love and worthy of the love of his creatures.

Joshua Roberts, Strafford Corner, N. H., writes: I feel thankful the Lord has heard prayer and raised you up again, Br. Storrs. Your labors seem very much needed in holding up this last truth to the world, "No Life out of Christ." Your name and writings have been familiar to me for many years, and are dearer to me to-day than ever. I am one of the old 1843 veterans, and have been an invalid for many long weary years, and still the Lord keeps me alive; blessed be his great name.

Mrs. D. B. Stroper, Fort Wayne, Indiana, writes: You will pardon me, but I consider myself related to all Christ's followers in search of light and Life alone through Christ. Permit me, therefore, to call you brother. Through your paper I have found very much to help me from darkness to light, and to see more clearly into God's holy word: and my prayers, although feeble, are ever with you, hoping some day to be worthy of being one of your number.

Thomas Reed, Catskill, N. Y., writes: I thank God that I can congratulate you upon the prospect of your restoration to health and usefulness. With the exception of the last few weeks my own health has been better than for ten years previous. God has preserved me longer than my friends expected.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 22, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Promise and Oath to Abraham.

"If the blessings are 'consequent,' of course, it would be a probationary age, and, with my present light I do not believe that probation will continue after the resurrection—after Christ has ceased His mediatorial work. This conclusion I think is sustained by the parable of the wheat and tares, and many other portions of Scripture."

Thus writes a dear brother, in a private note to us, after our first reply to Br. Green. We are glad to see any objections which are made to elicit light. It may be proper to state that, in a previous note the brother had asked us the following question: "Are all the families of the earth to be blessed in Abraham unconditionally?" To this we replied—"Blessings are antecedent and consequent. Antecedent blessings are unconditional; consequent ones depend on the improvement made of the antecedent ones." Illustration: A benevolent man gives a poor man a thousand dollars to use as he pleases. This is an antecedent blessing, and is bestowed unconditionally: at the same time, the donor tells the poor man if he employs the money in a certain way, he will make the increase $10,000. This would be a consequent blessing; but if the poor man disregards the advice of the donar, he fails to secure the $10,000: he had the antecedent blessing unconditionally; but by his own negligence he fails to secure the consequent one.

God gave his Son, and gave him up unto death for us all: to be a "propitiation . . . for the sins of the whole world" (1 John ii. 2); this blessing was antecedent, not dependent upon any thing man had done or could do to procure it: but to come into possession of eternal life (the consequent blessing) there must be improvement, of this gift of God, by complying with the conditions specified in the Good news, or the Gospel. The Saviour's appearance among the Jews and His teaching among them was all an antecedent blessing—a pure gratuity, unsought by them. The misuse they made of his appearance and teaching caused them to fail of the consequent blessing—eternal life—which God offered them.

Blessings, then, are two-fold, viz., Blessings bestowed before any thing is done to merit them, and without which the recipient could do nothing, because he had no means to do with: and blessings bestowed in consequence of the improvement of the previous gratuity. The Jews were blessed with the Gospel, but they, as a people, did not improve it, and failed of the glories consequent on improvement. Christendom has been blessed with the Gospel; but multitudes have not improved it, and will lose the blessing of eternal life.

"If all the families of the earth are to be blessed," says our inquiring brother, then the future age "would be a probationary age, and, . . . I do not believe that probation will continue after the resurrection," etc. "Probation" has continued eighteen hundred years "after the resurrection" of the "Head of the Church." What shall hinder it from continuing "after the resurrection" of the "Body?" But, says our brother, that is, "after Christ has ceased His mediatorial work." Christ may have ceased his mediatorial work for those who have enjoyed the antecedent blessing of the Gospel and have not improved it: but He has commanded the Gospel to be preached "to every creature," and God has promised, and made oath to it, that "all the families of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham and his seed;" and that seed will not cease His, or their, "intercessions for all men," (1 Tim. ii. 1) till "every creature" has heard the glad tidings of God's love to "the world." But more on this subject when we come to write on the Priesthood of Christ, which we promised to do a few weeks since.

As to the parable of the tares and wheat, we were long since satisfied it relates only to professors of religion. The tares, Dr. A. Clarke says, means "bastard wheat;" so closely resembling pure wheat, in its early growth, that the servants were not to be trusted to root it up. It was to be left till its fruit was fully developed, or till the harvest. "The harvest is the end of the world"—aionos, the age: then will hypocrites and false professors of the religion of Jesus be destroyed. This certainly has nothing to do with those who never had the antecedent blessing of the gospel: it relates to such as have had that blessing and have abused it by their sins, corruptions, or hypocrisy, and dishonored the name of God and His Christ.

Baptized for the Dead.

"Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"—1 Cor. xv. 32.

Few passages of the Scripture have so much puzzled students of the Bible as has the above. Various opinions have been entertained and advanced by learned writers, but few of them have agreed, and it is doubtful if the exact meaning of the Apostle will ever be certainly known. But while this is so it may not be uninteresting nor uninstructive to know some of the views that have been held and expressed concerning it. Rev. Thomas Belsham, in his translation and exposition of the Epistles of Paul, renders the first clause thus: "Otherwise, what advantage will they who are baptized have above the other dead?" This agrees with Wakefield, who understands "baptize," in this connection, to mean to suffer for Christian religion. The language of Paul would thus be equivalent to the query, what advantage have virtuous and faithful believers above the rest of mankind, if there is to be no resurrection. The following is Mr. Wakefield's translation: "Besides, what advantage above the other dead will they have, who are submitting constantly to baptism? Why, indeed, are they thus baptized, if the dead will certainly live no more? Why should we, too, expose ourselves to the danger of this baptism every hour?" Mr. W., as we have remarked, takes baptism in the sense of suffering, and refers to Luke xii. 50, and elsewhere in support of his position.

Mr. Locke acknowledges that he does not understand the phrase, "baptized for the dead;" but thinks "it meant something by which they exposed themselves to danger." Bishop Pearce favors, we are informed, "baptized with regard to the dead," and understands it as signifying, "such as have been put to death for their belief in Christ;" which differs little from Mr. Wakefield's interpretation. Doddridge, Newcome, and others render it, "what shall they do who are baptized in the place of the dead, as if he should say, to supply the place of those who suffer in the cause of Christian truth?" The idea thus conveyed is somewhat nearly allied to that expressed by Wakefield and Locke.

Pyle's interpretation represents Paul, who is arguing a resurrection of the dead, as asking, "Who would be so weak as to be baptized into the faith of a resurrection, that give themselves up for eternally dead after this life? This," he says, "is the undoubted sense and design of the phrase." This view suggests the idea that people were baptized into Christ, or the Christian faith in order to obtain a resurrection from the dead, being in that sense baptized for the dead; and so Paul, used their custom of baptism as an argument against their denial of any resurrection whatever, by asking them, substantially, if the dead rise not, why are they thus baptized for the dead? Macknight explains the text as if Paul had said, "Who are immersed in sufferings for testifying the resurrection of the dead." Calmet reckons up twenty-four senses which have been given of the text.

That, however, which the passage most naturally suggests is the existence, to some extent, in the early church, of a custom of living persons submitting to baptism for the benefit of dead persons. That such a custom did exist we are assured by Tertullian and other ancient writers. It is not, however, absolutely certain that it existed in Paul's time, though Lange thinks it probable that it "sprung up so early." So Neander, who says: "We might imagine that many, having come to the exercise of faith, resolved to receive baptism, but died ere the rite could be performed. This was so much the more likely to have been the case, inasmuch as according to xi. 30, there was an epidemic prevalent. If, then, a relative had suffered himself to be baptized in the conviction that he was only doing what the deceased would have done had he survived, the proceeding would not have been quite so superstitious." The fact that the text indicates the existence of such a custom, and that there appears no good reason for supposing that it sprang up subsequently to the date of the epistle renders it, we think, safe to conclude that the text has reference to that custom. L. C. T.

The Jews in Rome.

In the sixteenth century, Pope Paul IV. assigned to the Jews in Rome what is called the Ghetto, a wretched, filthy part of the city. This was the only quarter of the city they were permitted to reside in, and every night they were locked in behind its iron gates. All this was done to preserve those of the Catholic faith from being contaminated by intercourse with them. Succeeding Pontiffs either instigated or tolerated the cruel persecution with which these poor people were constantly visited. It is only within the past few years that they have been permitted to reside in various parts of the city. Their testimony has not been received in courts of law; they have not been permitted to own real estate, and they have been denied the right to enter upon any profession, save that of medicine, and of attendance at public schools, etc. A Jewish physician was never under any circumstances permitted to prescribe for a Christian. No Jew was allowed in any of the charitable institutions, nor to establish any for themselves. In addition to being compelled to share with other people the payment of ordinary taxes, special ones were imposed upon them because they were Jews.

When Rome became the capital of Italy, one of the earliest acts of Victor Emanuel was the issuing a proclamation that all the citizens of the Roman provinces are entitled to the same civil rights. For this bestowal of civil and religious freedom the Jewish community expressed their gratitude in a hearty, tender and eloquent memorial addressed to the Italian Government.

Look abroad throughout all Christendom, and behold how the chains of persecution and bondage are being snapped by the light which just precedes the coming of the great King. L. C. T.

The Catholic Church.

The London "Tablet," a Catholic publication, concludes an editorial on the suffering of the church with the following remarks:

"From whence then is safety to the Head of the Church to come? From Austria? But the Government of Austria is irrevocably committed to an irreligious policy. From Prussia? But the Prussian Government will seek nothing but its own power and dominion. From England? But the Prime Minister has approved of the spoliation of the Sovereign Pontiff, and the people have been taught to reject the truth and believe a lie. From France? But the Government of France has placed the statue of Voltaire, in a site of higher honor, forbidden the Sisters of Charity to attend the ambulances in Paris; while its friends decry the Priesthood and religion, and trace the failure of D'Aurelles de Paladine to the fact that he had heard mass, and went with his staff to holy communion before he entered upon the campaign. At the present moment Paganism is dominant in France as it is in Rome. We behold the same phenomena in both. Paganism will contend for the mastery for a time in each.

"In every country then may be discerned the various forms of Paganism, Governments and princes are alike corrupt. Safety then to the Head of the Church and his restoration to independence must come from the quarter in which, humanly speaking, the strength of the Church will lie in her future period of combat and conquest; that is, with the people. It will be the Catholic people in every country, pressing upon their Governments, using all their rights, and putting forth all their power, as a man in his strength, that will restore the Pope to freedom. And it will then be this same Catholic people, schooled in suffering, exercised in faith, hope and charity, and united in their strength, that will in the name of Jesus Christ, as members of His church, and animated by His doctrines, enter upon a contest with those various errors of modern Paganism, with which the last struggle of the church will be. The people of Catholic Christendom are under training for their future work and mission."

Throughout the world they who have the "mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands," are notably steady and persistent in their efforts to accomplish what they once set about, even though the hope of final success be far in the future. There is little doubt that the securing of some sort of controlling influence in the various Governments is a very prominent object of their aspiration. They seek to press "upon their Governments, using all their rights" (arrogantly so-called) "putting forth all their power." And is there any probability of success? Take, for example, our own country. Should time continue, and should matters go on, politically, somewhat after the manner in which they are now and have long been going, the papal element will make demands which the party then in power will probably gladly and readily concede, and will not dare do otherwise were it so disposed.

We have weapon more potent in thwarting these designs of Papacy than any other possessed by either church or State. That weapon is the battle-axe of truth. Let us all be never so vigorous in the application of it to the root of the corrupt tree of inherent immortality, that it may be utterly "hewn down" (so far as respects its great power for evil) "and cast into the fire." It is only worthy of the fire, for its fruits are evil, only evil and that continually. This accomplished, Papacy will be as completely shorn of its indirect political power, as it has already been of its direct and positive political power. L. C. T.

Affairs in France.

The Assembly having met, the members have been hard at work in consideration of the two great questions, peace with Germany, and a Government for France. There have been so many speculative dispatches sent to this country from various points in Europe it is pretty hard to arrive at correct conclusions respecting the real prospects; we therefore give our readers those of them which have been proved to be most reliable. It will be seen that matters have turned out, thus far, better for the Republicans than was at one time believed, and though the hope of the establishment of a Republic cannot by any means be said to be bright, the prospects for the establishment of a liberal form of government in some shape is somewhat flattering. The first dispatch dated Bordeaux, Wednesday, Feb. 15, is as follows:

"The Assembly, to-day, was engaged in the verification of the elections of its members. The electoral reports from Alsace and Lorraine were read, and caused warm demonstrations of sympathy for those provinces.

"The President announced that to-morrow the Assembly would proceed to constitute a new Government.

"The Deputies, on leaving the Assembly Chamber, were greatly cheered by the populace. Victor Hugo received an enthusiastic ovation.

"Affairs are more promising for the Republicans. It is said that 481 Deputies have arrived. The majority manifest a disposition to confine the action of the Assembly to the ratification of the terms of peace, and to postpone other matters until the adjournment to Paris."

The following is from Berlin the same day:

"The 'Provinzial Correspondenz' says when the German leaders are satisfied that there is a probability of arriving at an understanding with France as to the basis on which peace may be concluded, the armistice will be prolonged, to admit of definite negotiations for a treaty and the transfer of the National Assembly from Borbeaux to Paris. On the contrary, if the war be resumed on the termination of the armistice, it will be prosecuted energetically to the end. But the 'Correspondenz' feels confident that this eventuality will not occur.

"It is reported in the diplomatic circles in Brussels that Germany has refused the request of the British Government to communicate the conditions upon which it is willing to make peace."

From London, the day following, the 16th inst., this is received:

"A dispatch from Bordeaux this evening announces that M. Grevy has been elected President of the Assembly. The total vote cast was 538, of which M. Grevy received 519.

"At a caucus held last night, and composed of a majority of the delegates, it was resolved to establish a Provisional Republic, with Thiers as President, Favre as Premier, and the Duke de Decazes as Minister of Foreign Affairs. The other Ministers are to be MM. Simon, Picard, Buffet, and Barthloy. On the conclusion of peace the Convention will adjourn to Paris, and will submit to a plebiscitum the future form of government.

"The 'Journal des Debats' says, Thiers is universally regarded in Paris as the future President of France, with Favre, Picard, and Buffet as the members of the Ministry.

"The special correspondent of the 'London Times' at Berlin telegraphs that the terms of peace proposed by Count Bismarck are comparatively moderate.

"In consequence of certain preparations made in the South of France, for calling into service the military class of 1872, Bismarck will consent to prolong the armistice only five days.

"The 'Echo du Parlement' says the Count of Chambord has arrived in Brussels."

Still another, dated 19th:

"'La Patrie thinks that the prospects of peace are improving. It is said that the armistice will be prolonged to the 1st of March. On the restoration of peace a bill will be presented in the Assembly organizing a provisional army, disbanding the present armies, and proposing a commission to inquire and report the best plan for a definitive reorganization of the entire military establishmant.

"Odo Russell, in his advices to the Government, states that peace is absolutely certain, but that a revolutionary warlike movement in the South is highly probable.

"A dispatch from Versailles to-day says that not the slightest doubt is entertained in high quarters, since Favre's return, concerning a final peace. Favre expresses the opinion that the Assembly can be relied on to make the terms. There is an evident disposition on the part of Prussia to yield a good deal of her demands except in matters of territory, and even this may undergo some modification. It also is probable that the Emperor will abandon the idea of entering Paris, and that the troops will quit Paris with all possible promptitude, and evacuate France as soon as practicable after a sufficient gurantee has been given for the payment of the indemnity of 150 million sterling. The German Crown Prince, Frederick William, is known to be opposed to the entry of the German Army into Paris."

Information from London on the 17th inst., is to the effect that M. Favre has again left Paris for Bordeaux, whence he will return with representatives of the Assembly, to negotiate a treaty of peace. On that day, 17th inst., the session of the Assembly was a stormy one. Different dispatches speak o the Germans having extended the armistice. Berlin papers state, in this connection, that preparations are being made to press military operations to the extreme should terms of peace not be agreed upon.

It may not be generally known among our readers that it has been proposed by the Germans to have a grand entry into Paris of the victo ious army. This, as might be reasonably supposed, has met with many protests on the part of the Paris press and people. A portion of the press speak of it in excited terms, even foreseeing a bloody encounter between the German soldiery and the citizens in the event of the entry. The majority of the journals, however, counsel the citizens to remain indoors, and to display mourning emblems from their residences during the passage of the troops. There are reasons for supposing the Germans will not press the matter, but should they do so the event will be regarded throughout France as one of deepest humiliation notwithstanding the fact that they have been so terribly beaten and humiliated already.

Much dissatisfaction, it is said, prevails in Paris at the meagerness with which provisions are distributed, but the distress and mortality are decreasing. A few days must determine the question of peace, at least.

L. C. T.

What We Have Learned.

We have learned from the holy record that God has appointed his Son, our blessed and beloved Saviour, "heir of all things," King of kings and Lord of lords, and that he is coming to glorify his church, to set up his world-wide kingdom, and to reign in righteousness and glory over the entire human family. We have learned that during the dispensation of grace, under which we live, God is taking out of the nations a people for himself who are to be the royal family of heaven in the ages to come; and that the subjugation of the world to Christ's sceptre, or the introduction of the Millennium by the ministry of the gospel, is quite a modern idea, without the slightest foundation in Scripture. We have learned that Israel and Judah will be gathered from all countries and re-united as one kingdom in the land of promise under "Messiah the Prince," but that before that blessed event takes place there will be an enormous manifestation of impiety in the man of sin, the lawless one, the son of perdition, who will declare himself the Messiah, and demand divine worship as God—the terrific judgments of the Apocalypse being God's sentence upon this wild beast and his atheistic and impious followers. We have learned that the church waiting and looking for the Lord will be taken away from the evil to come, and that her holy duty is to see that she be ready when the Bridegroom comes, putting no event whatever as necessary between the present moment and that glorious hour. We have learned that the divisions and distractions of the nominal church, and the corruption of doctrine which so widely prevails are so many evidences of the prophetic character of our Lord's parables, so many proofs that the poisonous leaven hid in the meal has done its work only too effectually; and that it is the duty and high privilege of those who see these things to use every effort in their power to call the attention of Christians to them that they may neither be ignorant of Satan's decrees, nor sleep when the Lord comes. And we have learned that the "everlasting punishment" of Scripture is by Scripture itself explained to mean "everlasting destruction," perdition, an utter and eternal cessation of being; and that man by nature is simply mortal—immortality being the wonderful gift of God in Christ to believers.

But vast as is the field of sacred thought covered by these things, we do not stop here. By the blessing of the Lord we have more to learn. The mine is not exhausted, neither is the will to work it, and as gem by gem comes to the hand of the willing worker, we shall show it to the readers of the "Rainbow" that they may share in our riches and be "partakers of our joy." A stereotyped theology is the bane of revelation. Divine truth is an expansive vitality; it is full of precious meaning, and the more we love it and submit to its authority, the more shall we get of its treasures. As there are many things supposed to be in the Bible which are not in it, so are there many things in the Bible which are not supposed to be there. The oracle is eloquently silent on points which theology has awfully amplified, and expresses words of love and beauty where theology has reported her dumb. We have been asked on alleged divine authority to believe the incredible, and assured that things for which sanctified hearts yearned had no place in the holy word.—The Rainbow.

What Does the World Need?

BY A. G. M.

Not to secure pleasures of wealth now, but as a security or preparation for a life to come. Right opinions and a correct appreciation of our relations to God are of great importance as a means, if they lead to a personal trust in Christ and to good works. But if right opinions do not make, or tend to make men better Christians, and to lead the faithless to Christ, they are of comparatively little value. The world needs intelligent Christians.

We have an abundance of theology, and it is discussed and explained like astronomy, or any other department of science, not as if an eternity of existence were at stake. These discussions seem to be too little a personal matter. They are too abstract and have too little effect upon the life and conduct. There seems to be, after all, a dimness of faith in Jesus. In the multiplicity of arguments and intricacies of theological studies, men have too often lost sight of the great central truth, that Christ is the life of the world. The tendency is to look at the wisdom and learning with which men support their various theories, and to lose sight of the wiser simplicity of the gospel in its personal applications. Many have faith in Christ for the heathen, for the world at large, but have no faith in him for themselves. What we need is strong personal faith in Christ. Not less knowledge, not less looking for truth but more faith. We, all who profess to be Christians, need that faith which can co-exist alike with the highest knowledge and the deepest ignorance, that spirit of Christ without which we are none of his. First, the right spirit, then knowledge, and, finally, action or good deeds; for the Spirit moves us to action; knowledge directs us how to act and what to do, and the result is work intelligently done.

The world needs, then, not less science and invention; not less control over all the physical force, but more living personal faith in Christ, lest the world presuming upon its own wisdom forget God the Saviour.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb., 1871.

"THE BLESSED."

BY E. C. M. B.

"The blessed are they who but live to bless—"
"They read the hereafter by the here:
A beautiful Now, and a better To Be:
In life is all sweetness, in death no fear."

As I read these lines this morning, they seemed to me a beautiful, poetic utterance of truth. They who "live to bless" are blessed indeed, though poor or rich; though lonely, have many friends; though unattractive, draw to them by strongest cords all hearts; rich and poor, lofty and lowly, all alike bring to them their meed of sympathy and love. And to the heart full of love for others, no greater boon can be given than love. The prayers of the poor are all coveted benedictions; "the blessing of him that is ready to perish," more valued than the loudest applause of the uncertain crowd.

Well may "they read the hereafter by the here;" a "Now," full of faith, and hope, and love in exercise brings a glorious future—"a better To Be." Faith in the promise of an eternal inheritance, swallowed up in its blessed possession; hope of "a city that hath foundations," changed for the joy of dwelling there forever; while love of "Him we have not seen" is increased and heightened as we gaze with unclouded vision on "the Lamb who is the light thereof" forever.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan., 1871.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

FROM H. Rockwell to our well-beloved Br. Storrs, greeting: Grace, mercy and peace be multiplied. May the choice blessings of our kind heavenly Father rest and remain on you with your dear wife and precious daughter, together with our ever to be respected Sister H. Robertson, not forgetting Dr. Miller in his labor of love; nor dear Br. Thorne in his untiring energy, in so nobly sustaining the double duty of editor and assistant editor of our blessed paper, together with his mercantile business. O may he find a full recompence at the resurrection of the just.

O come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms. O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker. For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies; who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagles. Glory and honor, thanksgiving and praise be unto God and the Lamb forever. O I am glad; my heart doth greatly rejoice in God our Saviour.

Through the conflict of sorrow and anxiety that I endured, while our editor was passing through the ordeal of his great sickness, my faith remained unshaken in the promise of Christ, for he has said, John xiv. 14, If ye shall ask any thing in my name I will do it. But in the time when Br. Thorne's reports represented Br. Storrs to be in a very critical and dangerous condition, all at once it occurred to my mind that I had for a long time lost the track of Sister Helen Robertson; but though singular as it appeared to me, in the HERALD of that week I found her reporting herself at the bedside of Br. Storrs; from that moment all was clear to my mind that the hand of God was being made more visibly manifested for the recovery of Br. Storrs; and I did rejoice and I will rejoice, though it be with trembling and godly fear.

Please say to all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE that I am struggling on against the powers of evil; and although the tempest of opposition rages on every side, and the battle waxes warm; yet I am not discouraged. O brothers and sisters, the prospects were never more cheering; the true light now shineth; and the spirit of inquiry is abroad in our land, the cords of old tradition are being broken asunder, and many of the honest hearted are going out free. So, let us do our work kindly, yet faithfully, trust the results in the hands of him that doeth all things well.

WOODSTOCK VALLEY, CONN., Feb. 3, 1871.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. STORRS: I often reason in my mind on many points of doctrine, i. e., disputed points between those called orthodox and the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. This morning the penalty of the law (death) as believed by many, even in the church of God, came into my mind, and I reasoned thus, If the penalty of the law, i. e., the wages of sin, is two deaths, where is our atonement? Christ did not die twice, and as justice only demands the blood of life, the life we now live, can the blood of Jesus Christ cleanse us from all sin? Can He be the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth? and if the penalty is to die twice, is the plaster as big as the sore?

Again I reasoned on what Br. Miles Grant acknowledged long ago, that the most ungodly men might not have a resurrection; and again I reasoned thus, If the penalty is to die twice, or as they say, the second death, then the most ungodly that do not have a resurrection, escape it; so the Adamic death is a finality to them; is it not so? Then, on the other hand, if the most ungodly do not have a resurrection, it must carry conviction to the candid mind, that there is some benefit in the resurrection of the unjust that the most wicked are unworthy of. Now, I ask brother G. what benefit there would be in a resurrection to die again? I should say it would look more reasonable to me, if there was any reason in it, for the most ungodly sinners to die twice, than for the common sinner to. I read in the Scriptures of truth, "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." Is not this reaping a finality? for corruption cannot inherit incorruption. For he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. Surely this is final. Bless the Lord.

I read again that, "He that believeth not, is condemned already." Now, as we have but one state of probation or trial, and no one is condemned until he is tried, and as another has said, No man can be pardoned until he is condemned, so it is plain that a sinner under condemnation must have repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ to be pardoned.

So you see that condemnation is passed already upon the sinner that believeth not; he shall not see life; that is, all unpardoned sinners. O when I think of the awful inconsistencies that are preached now in these days, and how much of the glorious, blessed truth of God's everlasting Gospel is thrown aside as useless lumber, I groan within myself, and like Daniel I am astonished? Yes, astonished again! Can it be, with all the light that is spreading in the world, and the increase of knowledge, that men, yes, preachers can be so ignorant of the true gospel, that they suppose they are preaching truth? O, I awfully fear that the curse that is pronounced against those that preach another gospel, will come upon many preachers of the day. That it will be said of them, "Let them be Anathema, Maranatha."

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Feb., 1871.

FROM ELD. R. V. LYON.

BRETHREN STORRS AND THORNE: I am out in this Western country for the purpose of winning a bride for Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, by presenting the truth as revealed to us in the LIVING ORACLES.

I have given seven discourses since last first day, upon the theme of Life only in Christ. And that this life is made to depend upon a resurrection out from among the dead ones: and this resurrection is made to depend upon a union being formed with Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER; and that union to be sustained by a close and holy walk with him. Although we are out on the broad prairie, our house is filled to overflowing. And the best attention is given to the word spoken; and when I am through with my sermon, I give the congregation an opportunity to ask me any question connected with the subject discussed; all of which have been answered to the satisfaction of the lovers of truth.

Last evening I gave a discourse on the judgment, which silenced the opposers to the truth, and satisfied the brethren.

Since my meeting commenced, I have immersed two into Christ for the remission of sins.

I send you two new subscribers for the HERALD OF LIFE.

As ever, yours in love, and hope of life in Jesus our LIFE-GIVER.

FROM DAVID J. ELLSWORTH.

BR. STORRS: It is with devout thankfulness to our kind heavenly Father that I once more have the opportunity of addressing you by letter, in the land of the living. You seem to me almost like one raised from the dead, so near to that state have you been brought, in your late sickness.

It was hard to be reconciled at first to your apparent swift descent into the cold embrace and silence of death, but we knew your faith and hope, and that you was perfectly resigned in the hands of a loving God, who was too kind and good to err.

Very soon we felt resigned, and could pray that the will of the Lord might be done. While week after week passed and it seemed that death was to triumph, the feeling came upon us that the enemy was hindered in his work, that the minds of the dear saints scattered abroad might be prepared and reconciled to give you up, and bow in humble submission to the will of God. Yet it hath pleased the great Father of mercies to raise you up, and we rejoice in once more hearing your voice through the HERALD OF LIFE, and that you are again able to bear aloft the glorious standard of truth, in the front ranks in this great warfare against error and the fearful apostasy of these last days.

I will close the letter with an Apostolic benediction, and praying, "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation, in the knowledge of Him. Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

From your brother longing for the "Restitution," and consummation of the Christian hope.

WINDSOR, CONN., Jan., 1871.

IN PHILADELPHIA.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

ON Sunday, Jan. 29th, I went with "Br. Frank" to Camden, over the Delaware. Arrived at the hall corner of Third and Federal streets we found a very fine place for worship, and a good audience, to whom Br. Burbank, in a very happy manner administered the word of life.

I was very much interested in the discourse which he gave upon "Inherent Immortality," the first of a series of sermons on the subject of "Life in Christ." How long I have believed in the "sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked," ever since 1842 (the last part of it). How much I have preached upon that subject, first and last, and yet the interest in it never ceases. There is something ever new, because it exhibits Christ as the true source of immortality. The sermon was a clear, plain, philosophical view of man; made especially forcible by the testimony of distinguished writers, some of the more prominent of whom did not favor this position in their conclusion, but reasoned in a way to support it.

It was an argument adapted to the conviction of every candid mind.

In the evening, I was enabled to address a very respectable number in the same place, upon Paul's "desire to depart." I was blessed with freedom; yet suffered somewhat from the fatigue of the effort, but, more especially from the cold of the journey in returning. I find I cannot well endure the inclement weather. We shared the hospitality of Br. Adam Hare, who is an old subscriber to the HERALD OF LIFE.

The storm, and after that the cold, kept me in doors much last week, yet I visited several of my old friends and brethren, and was visited by some with whom I held sweet counsel.

Among the things to be noted is, the death of our Sister Ashman, wife of Elder Ashman, who were numbered among the oldest and most substantial Advent believers in this city. She was an amiable, excellent Christian lady; and Br. Ashman and family sustain a great loss. The funeral was attended on Thursday; Br. Burbank officiating. May God sustain the bereaved. I was present; but not able to take part.

On Sunday, Feb. 5th, I was again with the friends at 9th and Spring Garden, listening to Br. B. in the morning, who gave us a very thorough and sound scriptural view of man in death in a funeral discourse for Sister Ashman.

A very large and appreciative audience heard the words that instructed in the way of eternal life. In the evening, by a very cordial invitation of the church, I spoke to a full house, who manifested an absorbing interest in my reasoning.

My subject was the fulfilment of the Apocalyptic Prophecy in the present war in Europe. Many of our old friends were there, and we have some ground of hope for the union of all the brethren in the city. May they all stand in harmony with God, in his great truth, for the time and as fully as possible in love with one another, with "pure hearts fervently." Thanks for their kind remembrance of the lame, who hopes soon to see the time when "The lame man shall leap as an heart; and the tongue of the dumb shall sing."

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb. 6, 1871.

FROM MRS. J. A. GOODRICH.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS: As my health is very poor, and I am able to do scarcely any work, it is impressed on my mind to write to you once more. I wish you all a Happy New Year. Happy will it be if we love God as we ought, and are in all things submissive to his will. It ought to be the prayer of every Christian's heart to say, Thy will, not mine be done.

When I read of Br. Storrs' health improving, I was led to say, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name. May the Lord still continue to bless him and his family with power from on high.

O how sweet is communion with God and with his Son Jesus Christ. With what unswerving confidence in the promises may we, in time of need, approach the mercy seat. O may the Lord help us; for vain is the help of man. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever. O that we may all have patience to endure. I know the Lord is not weary. His arm is not shortened nor his ear heavy. I am glad of this. I often ask my Father to help me in the furnace just as long as he sees it is needful for me, nor heed my crying or complaints. He knows what I need to purify and perfect me, and he cannot err. It is a great attainment to be able to say from the heart, Not my will, but thine be done; and also feel willing to let the Lord choose our trials for us. Why should we not look up and rejoice, for we know our redemption draweth nigh. I am glad that there remaineth a rest for the people of God; and we know it is soon to be realized. It is this hope that enables us to endure. O how good the Lord is. May he keep us all in this dark and trying hour, in which we live, and give all needed grace, and permit us to finally enter the better land, is the prayer of your sister.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., Jan. 10, 1871.

FROM MRS. HELEN M. WOOD.

EDITORS OF HERALD, AND FRIENDS OF CHRIST: I have been a reader of your paper for some time, and think it the best religious paper printed; for I believe it advocates more Bible truth: and firmly believe that none will live again from the dead except those who have a union with Christ our LIFE-GIVER. With regret I read of the illness of Br. Storrs, and feel grateful to our Father that he is still spared, for we are living in an age when every lover of the truth is needed to sustain it; for error has put on the garb of truth, and many are his followers. But Christ, who is our life, has given us the example, in the word, after which his children should follow; and in him we have a perfect character in all things: we are never at a loss how to do, or what to do, if we only study closely his life as given to us in the Word. "Be ye therefore perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect," is the position we need to attain, in character and in the knowledge of the truth, in order to be fitted for the work which he will call us to do.

"Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ."—1 Pet. i. 13. May many be brought to the knowledge of the truth through the labors of his servants, and may we all be ready to welcome him at his coming; for the night is far spent, and the day is at hand.

Yours, in hope of life when Christ shall come.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Jan. 23, 1871.

FROM MATILDA C. HILLSTREAM.

BR. STORRS: The dear HERALD, laden with its precious truths, is ever a very welcome messenger at my humble abode. The letters from the dear saints, scattered abroad, that are weekly in the HERALD, cheers me in my lonely pilgrimage. It has been my privilege to read them for the last six or seven years, as my husband was a subscriber to the HERALD for that length of time.

I can praise God for his goodness to me. I, in my frailty, have been trying to serve him for more than twenty-five years. I loved to praise him, and thought that when I died, if faithful I should "soar to mansions in the skies." Yet when I thought of the wicked, of their misery and anguish through eternity, I often wondered how our heavenly Father could permit his erring creatures to remain in torment forever.

About seven years ago we embraced the advent faith, and, O, what joy and peace it is my lot to enjoy. I can now see a harmony in the Bible; no jarring discord. Although death, the cruel monster, has taken my dear husband as his prey, yet thank God his rule will be short. Soon my dear husband, with all the sleeping saints, will shout, "Oh death where is thy sting? Oh grave where is thy victory?" Thanks be to God who giveth us—yes, dear brethren—us, the "victory;" not the wicked who die in their sins. I can now praise God without reserve, believing that God in his love and mercy to sinful man will permit him to remain in the grave, if he cannot welcome Christ our LIFE-GIVER at his coming and kingdom. There are a few Life believers in this place, who, with me, rejoice that God in his mercy has prolonged the life of our dear Editor. If it be the Lord's will, we pray he may live till the Saviour comes.

From your sister in Christ.

MANCHESTER, IOWA, Jan. 26, 1871.

FROM W. F. GARDNER.

BR. STORRS: I am thankful to learn you are so far restored to health and strength as to be again at work: hope you may be kept to the end.

When Br. Matthias was here last winter, he said he was asking God to be kept till Christ comes, and suggested that course to me. I have made such petition, but have not much desire that way. But if I should be kept, I would be only 93. By looking at the weekly report of deaths, we see there are more than one in a hundred who live beyond that age.

I am thankful for the insertion in the HERALD, of my article of last month: thankful, though the compositor made two mistakes, which I hope will be corrected this week. The first is in line 5; for corrects, read "counts." The second, 4 lines from the close of the first paragraph, it now reads, "and Rev. xiv. 7 is given: it should read, "so Rev. xiv. 7 it is given."

Dear brother, the hour time, as stated at the close of this letter, must be true; and every succeeding year makes assurance more sure.

As you published my last article, I am encouraged to try again. We think we have more light than we have seen published.

In much love, yours, waiting for '83.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 30, 1871. }
Advent era, 28: 12 years to come. }

Z. MCLESTER, Paris, Tenn., writes: I send $1 for the HERALD OF LIFE. I cannot willingly do without it, though I can't get others interested in its perusal. I am frowned down as a heretic. I have distributed many papers and tracts, still if there is a single person except myself that has ever written you from our county, I have not found it out.

With great joy at the prospect of your returning health, I remain your devoted friend and well-wisher.

P. S. If you have the work entitled, "A Bible View of Hell," by E. Wolcott, send me a copy. Is Thorne's Five Tracts, "A Bible View of Hell," the same as E. Wolcott's?

Note by Editor.

We have no such tracts, as you speak of, by "Thorne." We have none of E. Wolcott's tract. Apply to him, Keyport, N. J., or Wm. H. Spencer, Rochester, N. Y. We suggest to Br. Wolcott, or Spencer, to send our aged friend a parcel of the tracts for gratuitous circulation. They will do good there. His address is Paris, Henry Co., Tenn.

FROM L. H. ROWE.

BR. STORRS: By reading in the HERALD OF LIFE the notice of "Delinquent Subscribers," I am again reminded of my indebtedness for the paper, and herewith enclose $2 which continues my subscription to the end of the present volume.

With the exception of the Bible, I prize the HERALD above every other instrumentality, which I have seen used, for promulgating the Divine truths brought to view in the Scriptures, as regards the nature of man, and the plan of redemption; and especially the doctrine of future life.

I am thankful that the good Lord has in answer to prayer raised up our veteran leader again to stand in defense of God's truth, and cheer the hearts of Israel on to victory. Thank God, there is a people in these "last days," on earth who, in spite of all opposition dare to take God at his word, not doubting that He who has promised is also able to fulfil the same in his own good time and order.

Dear saints, take courage; and while probation's hour (days of trial or examination) lasts, continue to "fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life" when the LIFE-GIVER comes. Our sorrows, trials and affections will soon end, and we will enter upon a new life of joy and bliss in the kingdom of God, which will be eternal. Who can comprehend its magnitude! how great is the gift which is to be bestowed upon those who "endure unto the end." We can well afford to be poor and despised, and be called the offscouring of all God's creation for Jesus' sake. "When he was reviled he reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not."

May the "Spirit of Him that raised up Christ from the dead" abide in us to that extent that we may be able to "endure all things," and be overcomers at last. Let us count all things but dross that we may win the prize ahead; that we may attain unto a resurrection, if dead, or a change if living. Amen.

Yours, looking for the blessed hope.

LEWISTON, ME., Feb., 1871.

FROM B. H. COUCH.

BR. STORRS: We are living under the seven thunders of Rev. x. God deals with his people through the order of sevens very much. God thundered in Mount Sinai once in giving the perpetual law to Moses; that law which was unalterable; more so than the law of the Medes and Persians. It could not be revoked, inasmuch as it had a Law-giver, perfect in all His works.

By the order of sevens the world was created. The order of the last warning to the Antedeluvians was on this, for He said, "Yet seven days and I will open the windows of heaven." I think it was in thunder tones to them. Gideon warned the city by this order. There have been six thundering sevens, or voices to this world through God's church: sounding the alarm of judgment and the coming of our Lord. One more mighty voice is to come, in which the Bride will make herself ready.

O my brethren, you that hold the crown truth, the cap-stone of the mystery of the Gospel, awake to the time and the voice of those thunders. There were events which John saw, and were sealed for the benefit of the church in their time. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

Yours, in hope.

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 10, 1871.

ROSELLE GLASS, Hinesburg, Vt., writes: My heart has been greatly cheered at the thought that kind Providence is about to restore you to us again. I must not tell you how anxiously I have watched for the coming of our dear HERALD OF LIFE of late to learn of your situation, and I have been led truly to feel that the arm of the Lord is not shortened toward those who call upon him for mercy. I think we can but feel grateful to Br. Thorne for filling your place so faithfully. I trust the good Lord will reward him. That you may be fully restored to health is the sincere prayer of your sister in Christ.

S. COOPER, Woodstock Valley, Conn., writes: It appears almost superfluous to say that my heart rejoiceth in the goodness of the Lord to you, and to us all; and, especially, in raising you from sickness to fill the station so much desired by all the readers of the HERALD, notwithstanding the editorial was most admirably conducted by our beloved Br. THORNE during your confinement. Yet I can hardly doubt that every Christian reader of the HERALD lifted their heart to God for your restoration; for the realization of which we feel truly thankful to our heavenly Father. May the Lord sustain and lead you to do all his will. Amen.

I enclose $3 as pay for the HERALD OF LIFE. I can hardly doubt but that I shall be able to pay more before the year expires, which I wish to do.

REV. T. R. LAWRENCE, Columbia, N. C., writes: The first number of your excellent paper that I have ever seen is before me, and it is the very thing I have been looking for ever since I have placed my destiny in the hands of the great Master. Although my means for the present are very limited, I cannot do without it. Inclosed please find one dollar, for six months, for which you will please send me the HERALD OF LIFE for that length of time, and when it expires do not stop the paper, but let me know when the time is out, and I will have another dollar or two for you. I must have the paper.

MARRIED.

RHODES—ANDREWS.—Married, at the residence of the bride's father, in Hartford, Conn., Feb. 15, by Elder S. W. Bishop, Mr. HENRY E. RHODES, of Boston, Mass., to Miss IDA G. ANDREWS, of Hartford.

OBITUARY.

CLAPP.—FELL ASLEEP IN CHRIST, in Hartford, Conn., Jan. 30, SAMUEL F. CLAPP, aged 50 years.

Br. Clapp was converted and became a member of the Baptist church in 1838. In 1841 he embraced the doctrine of the speedy advent of Christ, and for thirty years has been waiting "for the Son of God from heaven." About ten years ago he embraced the doctrine of "future life only in Christ," of which he was a sincere and ardent advocate. He died as he lived, a devoted follower of Jesus, and awaits the coming of Him who is "the resurrection and the life."

He leaves a wife, two sons, and the church to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband, a tender father, and a faithful member.

Sister Clapp is upheld in her bereavement by the "blessed hope" of a speedy reunion, where death shall not exist. The gospel hope was presented at the funeral by the writer.

WM. N. PILE.

"Crisis" and "Advent Christian Times" please copy.

REED.—Died in Beadley, Me., Feb. 4, Sister EMELINE REED, wife of Br. Henry Reed, and daughter of Olive Hall, of Hermon, aged 38 years and 8 months. Third time that the enemy death, has entered this family; two children and our beloved sister Emeline have fallen victims to the grim monster. Our sister leaves a husband and two children, besides a large circle of friends to mourn her loss; but not as those that have no hope. Words of comfort were selected for the occasion from John xi. 25, "I am the resurrection," by the writer.

LIBERTY WETHERBEE.

BANGOR, ME., Feb. 14, 1871.

GOOD HEALTH.—The February number of this popular Monthly Medical Journal has been received.

CONTENTS.—Means of Preserving Health; Cough; How to Rest the Mind; Singular Case of Resuscitation; An Artificial Pupil; The Science of Sleep; Rice; Artificial Teeth; Early History of Surgeons; Consumption; Skates, Skating and Skaters; Furs; The Origin of Soils; The Theory of a Glacial Epoch at the Equator; Technical Education.

Published by Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield street, Boston.

TERMS $2 a year.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., (Richmond Hall), Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

CONCORD, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

MANCHESTER, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

WEST MERIDEN, Sunday, April 30.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

WM. STUART.

NORTHFIELD, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 26.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sunday, March 5.

MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, March 12.

GEO. W. BROWN.

HARTFROD, CONN., Sunday, Feb. 26.

WEST MERIDEN, CONN., Sunday, March 5.

S. W. BISHOP.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

B. H. COUCH.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—J. Gregg, Lory Goodrich, R. M. Cooper, Henry Golding, Walter Sanders, Elder Hough.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Joseph Burkeitt, Dr. John Billings, A. Pennell, C. C. Pennell, Joseph Bates, R. H. Goodwin, G. S. Wise, W. N. Pile, H. Beatty, T. Pattison, George U. Lewis, Roselle Glass (on pledge), Samuel Castle, Russel B. Wells, Dwight J. Smith, John R. Green, Walter McDonald, Persis O. Ingalls, J. W. Brown, Daniel Busbee, John Snyder.

VARIOUS SUMS—Samuel Wetherstine, $5; E. M. Curtis, $4; T. M. Redhead, $25 on pledge; Aaron Veeder, $1 50; S. Cooper, $3; E. Binns, $5; Henry F. Johnson, $10; Richard Martin, $150 (on pledge.)

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

John Westover, M. W. Young (two parcels), J. W. Smith, J. F. Whitney.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. F. GARDNER.—You say, "A part of the money sent is credited to the wrong party;" but you do not tell us who the right "party" is. We will transfer it when informed to whom it should be credited.

"CAST THY BURDEN ON THE LORD."

LINES BY MRS. E. B.

SEEING a child with burden bent,
I hastened to his side,
And proffered help, but "Thank you, no,"
The sturdy lad replied.

I watched him toil with lingering steps
Until with panting breast
And wistful gleaming of the eye
He seemed to ask for rest.

At last with quivering lips he said,
"I scorned your proffered aid."
I took the burden with a smile
And said, "Be not afraid."

"And learn hereby this truth divine,
That One our burden bears,
Our toils, perplexities, and cares
His love unwearied shares.

"Since then through scenes of life's unrest,
He yearns to give relief,
Yield gratefully your cares and sins,
Your fears and unbelief.

"And gladly take the Master's hand,
His lamp to guide your way,
Till earthly pilgrimage shall merge
In heaven's eternal day."

RICEVILLE, IOWA.

IS PARIS "THE GREAT CITY?"

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

IT might be well, in the first place, to state that the Word of God, in the book of Revelation, symbolizes the Papal power by a city—a great city. Again, that a literal city is contemplated in the Apocaliptic description. While the system of Romanism may answer to the city, as a symbol, the city of Rome cannot fill the description, or meet the lineaments of the picture. Rome has indeed been the mistress of the world; the seven-hilled city has occupied a very important place in history, and prophetic fulfilment, and I suppose the importance of the city to the authority of the system is the reason the system is symbolized by a city—a great city. But what Rome was once, is not the necessary condition of the city now, nor is it a great city now because it was the great city of the world once.

Again: The fact that a city was necessary to the establishment of mystical Babylon, is no proof that the same locality is essential for the representative city in the continuance of the wonderful wickedness, which is set forth as the "Mother of Harlots." The system is the essential thing; and whether the old city or the new be the point, the power is the same. The fact is, that Rome, as the capital of the Papal dominion, has been a dependency of France—of Paris—because as Paris is, so France must be. It was united to France by the shrewdness of Louis Napoleon. The Pope was away from Rome; and, mark you, a power was installed in Europe that, in its elemental character, is revolutionary. A revolution was indicated everywhere by the accession of Louis Napoleon to the throne of France—the restoration of the Bonapartean dynasty—"the Beast that was, and is not, and yet is," which assumed more power than the Bourbons, who claim to reign by divine right, and had more power, because it lived by the sword. It was a military rule. It came in by strategy, by lying, by broken oaths, by murder, by rivers of blood. It ruled by the army. It trusted to its own dragon nature, for it was of that ilk.

Napoleon I. came to the throne of France by wars, by the army, by the great military power which arose at that time. He retained that throne by the same means. He seemed to be aware that if he lost that means of support to his throne he would fail. This was the cause of his great blunder—the Russian campaign, which became the sure ruin of the empire. M. Thiers, in his "Consulate and Empire," complains that Napoleon could never be satisfied with what he calls the "dictates of fortune;" but we should, I suppose, call the same the indications of Providence. He refers to his attempt to extend the territory of France. His not being satisfied with the ancient boundaries. He had a splendid empire. A brilliant government; but he could never be satisfied. The sword had brought him the rule; he concluded the sword should extend and perpetuate it; but here the word seems very plain, "He that taketh the sword shall perish with the sword; and he that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity." Such was the fate of the sword-empire and of the sword-man. When, again, he undertook the work by diplomacy, and by alliance, he failed. He took to wife an Austrian princess to secure the friendship of the Bourbons and the Papal princes, and to establish the throne by an heir which should have "the blood of the Cæsars," for he wished to exhibit the old kingdom of the Cæsars as did also Louis Napoleon; though he did not attempt it by the pen, as did Napoleon III., so much as by the sword and by marriage. His son, who was like a prisoner all his days (called after Rome) died at Rome, aged 18 years. A sprig of the house of Austria and Corsica, which could never ripen, which must ever be an abortion.

Under the reign of Napoleon I. France had Italy and the Pope under control. Under Napoleon III. France virtually conquered Rome and the Pope, and the French army kept the Pope on his throne. The same power kept Paris. It was by the army that Louis Napoleon reigned in Paris or Rome. His army occupied elsewhere, he lost both.

Napoleon I., as a force to overthrow the Papal power in Europe, sent aid in the beginning of the judgment (the first great instalment) upon the "Great Harlot"—had Spain, as well as Italy, held Austria in check and fear, and Germany and Holland were also either under his rule or in fear of him. So the recent Emperor designed and attempted a control of these States. He concluded he was the arbiter of the throne of Spain. To some extent he had such control. God designed, by means of him, to bring about the punishment of the Pope and France, the same as in the other case. It was, then, French power (Catholic France), that finally brought the Pope to grief by taking control of Italy; and it was anti-Catholic England, Prussia and Russia that humbled France, which had been so long the servant of the Papacy. Now it is Catholic Italy, by means of France, leaving the Pope to his fate, and Italy to her own action, which takes away the temporal power of the Infallible Pope; and it is a great Protestant power that destroys Paris and France. It is striking that there should be such a resemblance, and that the Word of God should be so distinctly fulfilled, and at such a time.

If you suppose France to be the great leading power, at this point, symbolized by the beast that comes up out of the "bottomless pit," and goes "to perdition," the Napoleon France, and that the "ten kingdoms" of Italy "agree and give their power unto the beast, till the words of God be fulfilled," even to the "eating her flesh, making her naked (the "Harlot" power) and burning her with fire," you have a still stronger argument. Places change and names change, but the character of the action remains the same. To illustrate, and bring before our minds the city that is, at the present time, more "like a cage of unclean birds" than any other, I will quote:

"The city which, spiritually, called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." Our Lord was crucified at Jerusalem, and Sodom and Egypt were the most wicked and abominable places in Scripture account, yet this city was Paris.

I. I claim that the city is Paris, being the capital of France, and connected with Rome by the Catholic power of France, under Bonapartean rule (Infidel) or under the Bourbon kings, who professed faith in the Church of Rome.

II. As we have shown in previous remarks, France has been counted the eldest son of the Church from the days of Constantine, who was of Gaul (France), and down through Clovis, Pepin, Charlemagne and the Carlovingian provinces. You may, at this point, consult what is said by Spalding, Archbishop of Baltimore, in New York on his return from the Ecumenical, and Williams, Bishop of Massachusetts, in his speech at the great meeting, Music Hall, Boston.

We see by the first of these propositions, that in modern times the French power, whether under Bonapartean or Bourbon rule, has been the most important supporter of the Papacy, yet has been made the means of the infliction of punishment—the judgment—upon her. As this system is said to be Babylon, and requires a Capital city, why is not Paris, the capital city of France, that city? If any other city answers more fully, then she should not be. But Paris is the great Capital, not of France only, but of the world, called and mourned as such now. We see by the second proposition, that the ancient status of France was essential to the existence of the Papal authority. It was the leader in persecution, and, first and last, was the great persecutor. One of the first and most remarkable persecutions of the early Christians, ending in death by fire, was at Lyons, in the South of France. In one word, France has been connected with Rome in persecution; and more martyrs of Jesus have fallen in France than in any other country.

Instance: The Massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve, which was the culmination of the persecution of the Huguenots. The persecution of the Protestants of Savoy, as late as 1815, in which all the "horrors of the old inquisition were enacted." And the persecution on the restoration of Papacy up to 1821, in which the Protestants were hunted down and killed in cold blood, and torture was resorted to. An Edict, in 1824, put a stop to it, which is the reason for that being called, by French Protestants, the year of jubilee.

Thus, the Beast that had the wound by the sword and did live, was alive, aye, so much alive that he could kill and devour as before. Has the Papacy ever changed in character or purpose? Nay, verily. The Congress of Vienna, where three great anti-Catholic powers, and two of them Protestant, united to restore the status (in 1815) of Europe, gave the Pope his "three States," and hence in preserving the balance of power, kept up the "temporal power" of the Pope. The Powers united in this movement for the religious government of their subjects. Thus they said, and thus they spake like the Papal powers. The same old story with the Catholics. Did Papacy make any return in kind to the anti-Catholic powers? Not at all. Did the State religion assume a milder character? No. Did Papacy popularize itself, i. e., did it become the religion of the people? Never. Did persecution stop? No. It began anew. As we have before seen that Church and State cannot prevail with a republic, so the Princes of Europe want a State religion, that they may preclude republics. Papacy enacts any and every horror, political and social, that men or devils can invent to compass its purpose. It goes backward and forward, that it may prevail. It does what may be expedient to keep the people in their religion, under the control, politically, of the men who have, by the position of families, been thrown upon the crest wave of society.

By the way, it looks exceedingly like Jesuit action, that an effort is now being made to recognize God, by name, in the United States Constitution. It is all wrong. It is one step toward a State religion. It will soon be required by these exceedingly political religious people to insert the "Trinity." Indeed, one of the speakers, at the recent convention, proposed to insert "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." This Constitution allows every man to worship as he pleases. Amen.

It is now about seventy years since the successors of Napoleon I.,—doing after his own will—overrunning Germany. The French complain of the destruction of the works of art, and splendid architectural wonders by the Germans. The Germans reply, that the French did the same by them in the beginning of this century.

The threat of Louis Napoleon was, that he would be in Berlin soon. Foolish man! He little thought how great a military power Prussia had become. Wilhelm replied, "take care of your Paris. I will see to Berlin." And if Napoleon had gained any successes, and Austria, foreseeing how great Prussia would become by this war; if she had dared to have interfered, would have found Russia ready to aid Prussia with at least 100,000 men for a first instalment, and Berlin would have been as safe as St. Petersburgh.

Now we have an Emperor of Germany who crushes out the Catholic government of France, as if God designed to give the ancient empire into his hands. He follows the tactics of Frederick the Great, who made for Prussia her position as a grand military Power. Mark, the blow tells on the Catholic interest of France. It kills the Priesthood. It will kill the Gallican (French Catholic) church. A republic in France signifies, at least, enmity to, and alienation from the Papal Hierarchy. Now, we see one great arm running through the whole action of the Papal Princes. Not so the Protestant England assisted in the restoration of the Pope in 1815. Not so now. She neither interferes at Rome or at Paris. Russia—another power at Vienna—does nothing to prevent Italy and Prussia from desolating the former dominions of the Pope; while Austria dare not. Yet Papists, in their wail, tell us what William will do, and England may.

It will amount to about as much as does the threat, perhaps, of a crusade of three millions of Catholics at Rome, to place the Pope on his throne again. Some things are predestined, even in the statement. Russia says to the London Conference, that "it is not to work on the problem of her purpose, as to the Black Sea; that is foregone.

Paris has now capitulated. There is also an armistice of three weeks, and this Babylon is fallen under the reward or punishment given her.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb., 1871.

[To be continued.]

"A GREATER THAN SOLOMON."

BY ELD. J. B. COOK.

PSALM lxxii. may present Solomon, the son of David, in verse 1; but from that point we find Him who said, "A greater than Solomon is here." In Psa. cx. we find that "David in spirit called Him Lord," though he was his son. Matt. xxii. 42, David and Solomon belonged to the ancestral line of the Messiah. But Jesus, the only begotten of God, the second Adam, the first-born from the dead, hath in all things the pre-eminence. HE is LORD of all. His name is above every name, v. 17, to which every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that He is LORD (or King) to the glory of GOD, the Father."—Phil. ii. 9–11.

The reason given why all kings and nations serve and obey Him, as "THE KING (of kings, v. 11) is, "For—because—He shall deliver, save, redeem, and be the Immortal "King;" with this ever-enduring "Name, above every other name."

HE will reign in righteousness, in these TIMES of giving life again. Acts iii. 19. These TIMES of Restitution of all things spoken—the "times of the blessed and only Potentate." His reign is symbolized by the genial sunshine and showers to refresh, restore and "fill the face of the world with fruit."—Isa. lx. 16–20.

This beneficence will be made the theme of praise perpetually. This royalty—this bountifulness to earth—this abounding blessing to the nations, to fill out "The promise and oath to Abraham," which is the ground-work of all this glory that will fill the WHOLE EARTH.

"How gently in night's silent hours
The dew distils upon the flowers;
How softly on the grass new mown
The genial drops of rain are strewn,
But gentler, softer falls thy word
On our obedient hearts, O Lord;
Causing the germs of grace to appear,
Like snow drops on the opening year,
Its light revealed to infant eyes
Tho' darkness to the worldly wise,
Doth demonstrate the doctrine true
Because it moulds our hearts anew."

These lines slightly altered to suit the occasion, express the gracious power of Gospel truth in our age. It is "the glad tidings of the kingdom" that this blessed King shall set up and administer "with His saints, who shall reign with Him."—Matt. xix. 28; Luke xix. 17–19; 1 Cor. vi. 2; Rev. xx. 5, 6; Dan. vii. 18.

This royal Psalm closes: "Blessed be the LORD God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be His glorious Name forever; and let the whole Earth be filled with His glory. Amen, and amen. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended."

This Divine kingdom—these days of heaven upon earth—this full measure of New Covenant favor to all nations, is the answer to all inspired prayer.

Who, then, that is prompted to "pray in the Holy Ghost," can venture to "withdraw" Christ from this kingdom, or assume to end his Mediatorial reign before it can begin, as here set to the Prophet's music of God's sanctuary? The Lord's prayer is but the revised edition of the "prayer of David."

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb., 1871.

THE WORK DONE INSIDE.

ONE of my friends is a very earnest, shrewd man, who seems to always know how to do the best thing at the right time. One day he was passing a gin-shop in Manchester, England, when he saw a drunken man lying on the ground. The poor fellow had evidently been turned out of doors when all his money was gone. In a moment my friend hastened across the street, and, entering a grocer's shop, addressing the master, said:

"Will you oblige me with the largest sheet of paper you have?"

"What for, my friend? What's the matter?"

"Oh! you shall see in a minute or two. Please let it be the very largest sheet you have."

The sheet of paper was soon procured.

"Now, will you lend me a piece of chalk?" said my friend.

"Why, whatever are you going to do?"

"You shall see presently."

He then quickly printed in large letters, Specimen of the work done inside.

He then fastened the paper over the drunken man, and retired a short distance. In a few moments several passers-by stopped and read aloud, "Specimen of the work done inside."

In a very short time a crowd assembled, and the publican, hearing the noise and laughter outside, came out to see what it was all about. He eagerly bent down, and read the inscription on the paper, and then demanded, in angry voice, "Who did that?"

"Which?" asked my friend, who now joined the crowd. "If you mean what is on the paper, I did that; but if you mean the MAN, you did that! This morning, when he arose, he was sober—when he walked down this street on his way to work, he was sober—when he went into your gin-shop he was sober, and now he is what you made him. Is he not a true specimen of the work done inside?"—Rev. Charles Garret.

THE FATE OF THE APOSTLES.

ALL the Apostles were insulted by the enemies of their Master. They were called to seal their doctrines with their blood, and nobly did they bear the trial. Schumacher says:

St. Matthew suffered martyrdom by being slain with a sword at a distant city of Ethiopia.

St. Mark expired at Alexandria, after having been cruelly dragged through the streets of that city.

St. Luke was hanged upon an olive-tree in the classic land of Greece.

St. John was put in a cauldron of boiling oil, but escaped death in a miraculous manner, and was afterwards banished to Patmos.

St. Peter was crucified at Rome, with his head downward.

St. James the Greater was beheaded at Jerusalem.

St. James the Less was thrown from a lofty pinnacle of the temple, and then beaten to death with a fuller's club.

St. Bartholomew was flayed alive.

St. Andrew was bound to a cross, whence he preached to his persecutors until he died.

St. Thomas was run through the body with a lance at Coromandel, in the East Indies.

St. Jude was shot to death with arrows.

St. Matthias was first stoned and then beheaded.

St. Barnabas of the Gentiles was stoned to death by the Jews at Salonica.

St. Paul, after various tortures and persecutions, was at length beheaded at Rome by the Emperor Nero.

Such was the fate of the Apostles, according to traditional statements.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

HOW LOTTIE MANAGED HER LITTLE BROTHER.

LOTTIE'S mother had a letter saying that her mother (Lottie's grandmother) was sick and wished to see her.

"Mother, you go," cried Lottie. "It is my vacation, and I will keep house; and I will keep house beautifully."

"And take good care of Ashton," said Mrs. May.

"I will do my best," said Lottie; "and take good care of father, and pour out tea, and—oh, I will do ever so many things. It will be so nice to be real housekeeper."

"Looking after Ashton will be the chief thing," said her mother, smiling. Ashton was Lottie's little brother, five years old; Lottie was twelve. Two baby sisters died between Lottie and Ashton, so that Ashton was loved and treated as if God only lent him. Lottie always took a great deal of care of him, and good care too.

The day after mother left, the little fellow was not very well; he had a headache, and did not incline to play. "You know, Ashton dear, that you must not eat any thing but dry toast to-day," said Lottie; "father said so."

"I don't want any thing," said Ashton; "you will tell me story all day, won't you, Lottie?"

"I'll read you one first," said Lottie, "all about the pictures in my new story-book."

"Oh, do!" cried Ashton. Lottie sat down on the sofa. Ashton sat down close beside her, with his head on her shoulder, so that he could see the pictures; and Lottie began to read. "You will read story all day, won't you Lottie?"

"I will read just as long as you will listen," said Lottie.

"I listen all day," said the little boy.

But Lottie had not gone very far before his head felt heavy on her shoulder, and sure enough he was fast asleep. Lottie stopped, quietly disengaged herself, and laid the little fellow in a more comfortable position on the sofa. She then covered him over with a large red handkerchief, and left him to his nap.

This gave Lottie time to make her bed, to feed her bird, and sew a button on father's Sunday pants. Then she began to think whether Ashton had finished his nap, and went down stairs to look after him. Lottie went on tiptoe, for fear of waking him up; but there was no Ashton on the sofa, no Ashton in the room. She found him in the kitchen, standing beside a plate of cranberry tarts. "O bubby, you must not for the world eat a tart!" cried Lottie. "I never!" growled Ashton; "I never, never! You sha'n't plague me. I never!" Lottie saw, both by his hands and mouth, that he had helped himself. She took up his little fat hand, and looked sorry. But Ashton twitched it away, looking as cross as could be; so she knew it was no time to scold at him. Scold! no, not that; but no time to tell him what a naughty boy he was to tell a lie. It was no time. It is never the time to tell people their faults when they are out of humor, or feel guilty or ashamed. Nothing you can say then will reach the heart or make an impression. Lottie seemed to know it, so she only looked very sorry.

The next day, or the next day after, Ashton wanted to drink, and instead of asking for some water, he tried to reach a goblet from the closet to help himself. But his fingers were too fat, or too small, or too weak; the goblet slipped, and down it fell on the floor in three pieces. "Oh," said Ashton, "I didn't break it; it broke itself."

"It did not break without hands," said Lottie. "Father is in the sitting-room. Run and tell father you broke a goblet."

"I will," said Ashton; "I will run myself."

Ashton told his father. "I did not know but it broke its own self," said he; "but Lottie said it never broke without hands."

"I am glad you told me, sonny," said Mr. May, stroking the little boy's head. "Be more careful the next time."

"I will," said Ashton, running back to Lottie.

"I told father, Lottie! Lottie, I told father!"

"Yes," said Lottie, "and to-night, when you go to bed, I will tell you a story."

"Good for you, Lottie," cried the little fellow, jumping up and down.

When Lottie put Ashton to bed, she told him about Ananias and Sapphira, how God struck them down stone dead for telling Peter a lie, first one and then the other; Ananias for telling the lie, and his wife for sticking to it.

"Oh, dear," said Ashton, his eyes wide open, "is good God so angry with lying as that, Lottie?"

"Yes, Ashton," said Lottie; "and Effie Mann's verse last Sunday was, 'Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord.'"

"And 'bomination is orful hateful," said Ashton.

Ashton listened with a great deal of interest. His conscience being at rest, he was ready to receive all that his sister said, and to enjoy it. He had just avoided the sin himself, and therefore he loved to hear about it; and as the little boy was falling asleep, he said, "Lottie, I never mean to tell a wrong story as long as ever I live in my life;" and nobody can say but it is an excellent resolution to go to sleep on.—The Child's Paper.

TRUE RICHES.

"I DON'T understand this, papa," said Harry Ray, looking up from the page he was reading to his bed-ridden father.

"What is it?" asked Mr. Ray.

Harry read: "You must put your hand into a person's heart to find out how much he is worth—not into his pocket."

"O, that is what we call a figure of speech," said Mr. Ray, smiling, "and it means that if we wish to know a man's true worth, we must find out how good he is. Yesterday I heard a man say of young Mr. Wharton, whose father died last winter and left him very rich, that he was a poor, miserable fellow; meaning that he had neither a wise head nor a good heart. There are two kinds of riches, you know—one made up of gold and silver, and houses and lands."

"What is the other made up of?" asked Harry.

"There are riches of the mind and heart," answered Mr. Ray. "Don't you remember this verse of a beautiful hymn—

"Riches divine! who tells the price
Of wisdom's costly merchandise?
Wisdom to silver we prefer,
And gold is dross compared to her."

"O, yes," said Harry, his eyes and face brightening with interest; "and I wonder, now, that I never thought what it meant."

"The wise and good man," replied the father, "he who has the costly merchandise of wisdom in his heart, is the truly rich man, for he has the heavenly treasure that neither moth nor rust can corrupt. You must look into his heart, not into his pocket, to know how much he is worth."—Children's Hour.

A BIBLE VIEW OF HELL:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

WM. H. SPENCER, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 364 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	3 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2 "
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "
21.	LIFE AND DEATH REAL,	2 "
22.	MAN'S DESTINY; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	THE LIFE VIEWS,	2 "
24.	HOW READEST THOU?	2 "
25.	WHAT A FARMER HAS TO SAY: OR, AN INSTRUCTIVE LETTER. Also, THE WRATH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?	2 "
26.	SOUL SURVIVANCE IN DEATH: NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE BIBLE,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 21.
WHOLE NUMBER 355.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,) NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. H. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

"My Kingdom is not of this world—Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom; preach the word." "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." "For, behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth." "According to his promise, we look for new heavens and a new earth." "The meek shall inherit the earth. Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." "Those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." "The meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." "Their inheritance shall be forever." "They shall inherit the earth." "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land."

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you . . . ready to be revealed in the last time." "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

THE TEN TOES OF THE IMAGE.

To W. H. HANFORD: Although I have no acquaintance with you, aside from what your too infrequent letters to the HERALD OF LIFE would give me, and a casual meeting at Wilbraham, a few years since, yet permit me to avail myself of your locality in New York to get some assistance, not easily obtained here. I would like to trace out what countries now occupy what was the eastern division of the Roman Empire at and subsequent to the days of Constantine the Great. The great image with the head of gold is traced by all writers, as far as I know, down to the complete establishment of the Roman or Iron Kingdom. From that time every writer, to use a homely phrase, seems to be muddled. They forgot that the image was to be completed in just proportions. They seem to forget that it represents political governments. From the the time of the division of the Roman Empire into the eastern and western parts, the eastern has been almost lost sight of. The ten horns are rightly placed on the western division, but when they ask us to believe they are the same as the ten toes of the image, they ask too much for any man's credulity. To have the toes all come out, not on one foot, but one leg, and that above the the knee, is absurd.

Would it not be better to let EACH FOOT have five toes? Would it not be better to let the feet come out at the end of the leg? Has not the eastern division of the Roman Empire run an equal race, at least in point of time, with the western? Has not the western been Papal and the eastern Pagan or Mohamedan?

I believe the toes are now forming, and that the union of Spain and Portugal will form the little toe of the western division. The eastern division we know less about, that is, its present divisions and governments.

In New York you can ascertain that, and see if the five toes are as well developed as on the western, Let the western be Austria, Italy, Germany, France and Spain with Portugal annexed. Will the eastern match it? It should. It must. The toes must not come out all on one side, and out of the leg above the knee, at that. I do not think the toes ought to be 800 or 1000 years long. The image ought, in the main outlines, to be the perfect image of a man. When the toes are complete and the image fully developed, then the stone is to smite it on the feet. Bear in mind, the image represents governments, not religions.

Are we not on the eve of tremendous events? Is not the great council at Rome getting ready for the doom foretold by the Seer of Patmos? So it seems to me, and the image is the main prophecy to carry us down by 1867.

We should watch its complete development. Read John Wilson's book on the ten lost tribes and I think you will be convinced that Britain and the northern nations of Europe do not belong to the image. God's people escape the smiting. I submit these crude thoughts for your examination if they should interest you enough for thought.

If not too much occupied, will you be kind enough to answer a stranger in the wilds of northern New York?

I remain, fraternally and truly yours,
GEO. T. COLLINS.

CHATEAUGAY, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1870.

THE BOUNDARY OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

RESPONSE BY W. H. HANFORD.

WE will commence at the Atlantic Ocean and run a line through the northern part of Africa, taking in Egypt, the tongue of the Red Sea, and Mt. Sinai. From the head of the Gulf of Acaba we run a line northeast until we strike the Euphrates, east of the confluence of the river Chabbrac, taking in Palestine, Syria, and a part of Mesopotamia. From thence a more easterly course almost to the Lake Van. Then westerly, again crossing the Euphrates in Armenia, debouching to the right it encircles the eastern extremity of the Black Sea, taking in Colchis. If from this place we draw a line a little north of west it will strike the river Danube, crossing to the south of the Crimea; that stronghold of Russia not having been a part of ancient Rome. We will now follow the Danube to the city of Augsburgh; west of the city we leave this mighty river and strike the Rhine east of Basil, following it to the German Ocean. From thence we strike the Frith of Scotland at the wall of Antoninus, taking in Glasgow and Edinburgh. From this point we run down the Atlantic until we touch the northern coast of Africa, taking in England, a part of Scotland, France, Spain and Portugal. It is worthy of note that the boundary between Prussia and France is the same as between Rome and the Barbarians.

The completion of the image of Daniel requires the division of this part of the world into ten kingdoms; no more, no less. If they are developed, then expect the destruction of the image. The toes are to be developed in the extreme end of Gentile rule. They are in fact the last development. They are not developed before the feet. They are not developed before the legs are complete. They will not all appear on one foot. That is a monstrous absurdity. There are two legs and two feet, eastern and western Rome; five toes must appear on each foot. Then, and not till then, will the stone smite the image. Have those kingdoms arisen? We think not. Are they in process of formation? Yes. We have upon the western foot, 1, France. 2, England. 3, Italy. 4, Spain. 5, Portugal. Upon the eastern foot, we have, 1, Austria. 2, Turkey. 3, Greece, with a prospect of a speedy revision of that position of the old Roman world. Egypt will soon free herself from Turkey and form the fourth. Then there remains a large tract of country between Austria and the Black Sea, nominally ruled by the Turks, who are ready to revolt on the first opportunity. We expect that the fifth kingdom will be carved from this territory at no distant day. The forces outside of the old Roman world which are working for its destruction are Prussia and Russia. The staff in their hand is the rod of God's anger to punish the stout looks of the tyrant of Rome.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19, 1871.

(Continued from last week.)

IS PARIS "THE GREAT CITY?"

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

III. I shall now proceed to show that the specified description in the Apocalypse, refers to Paris and sets it forth more fully than it can apply to Rome. We have said that Paris is held as the Capital of the world. Victor Hugo said, "Paris is the heart of the world; as beats the heart, (Paris) so beats the world. As goes Paris so goes the world." He is very bombastic, but what what has set the world into such an excitement? Was ever anything like it?

Rev. 16, 19, "The great city was divided into three parts," etc. The three were in answer to the three grand influences that went forth from the mouth of the Dragon, the mouth of the Beast, and the mouth of the False Prophet, which, I suppose, were respectively, 1, Dragon; the revived dragon—Imperialism.

2. Beast, the civil power that has especially sustained the Papacy; and perhaps including all State religion.

3. The Papacy itself.

The great city divided into three parts.

I. The Infallibility party.

II. The Anti-Infallibility party; and III. The power which takes control of the Papal power, represented by Victor Emanuel.

Now if the city is the same, in either case, why does he say, (after having told us what befel the city (symbolical), "the city of the nations fell.") It should be read in the singular number. The reading of "city" makes some good sense and propriety, "The city of nations" is Paris; for it is called the capital of the world, or nations, by common consent.

"There was a great earthquake," revolution, convulsion "so mighty and so great" as to exceed all others. "The fierceness of his wrath," or "drinking to the dregs" of the cup, signifies that the suffering is at the very bottom depth. "Island and mountain," signify great and small governments overthrown. "The hail," "every stone the weight of a talent." Was anything ever more suggestive? The description does not apply to Rome. Did you ever read of, or imagine anything to compare with the simple matter of Bombardment in this war in France, one city after another being taken in this way, but especially Paris, receiving the "hail or shot and shell;" "iron hail," "every stone about the weight of a tatent." A Hebrew talent is 94 lbs. Avordupois. The prophet says, "about." He did not exceed the limits of fact.

A letter from Paris of January 8th thus reports the effects of the bombardmentat that time: Since the Prussians have added to the bombardment of the east forts that of the south, they have sent us daily about 20,000 shells, of which 400 or 500 fall within the enciente of Paris.

These shells are 22 centimetres in diameter, 55 centimetres long, and weigh 80 killogrammes.

The fort of Nogent, which has received in its interior 10,000 shells (within two or three hundred, a marine having been told off specially to count them,) has none killed and only two wounded. The number of shells which fell within the approaches to the fort may be estimated at from 20,000 to 25,000. In the interior of Fort Vanves, about 6000 shells have struck since Thursday, and outside from 10,000 to 12,000.

I believe 80 killogrammes make 167 lbs.

The hail continued till men "blasphemed God, but repented not." The prophet in chap. xviii. in describing the fall of Babylon, takes just such a view as we find in Paris. Therefore, we shall suppose that the great capital, now fallen, is the city here specified, so far as a literal city comes in, and one must come in while Papal Rome is the power.

"And great Babylon came in remembrance before God." Now if great Babylon is a system yet requiring a literal great city, then Paris must be that one; for the crimes and enormities of which she has been guilty, especially with regard to the people of God. France was prominent in receiving the first judgment upon Babylon. Confusion was everywhere seen. Look at the reign of terror, the overthrow of religion and government, as well as all the interests of the country. Paris was the centre of all this. From '93 to '98 we notice "the city of confusion" was under the control of leaders who ignored law and authority. We may notice loss of all titles of the nobility and clergy. 7,000 names of men fell.

Confiscation of property; destruction of the Bible by cartloads; the Sabbath abolished; worship of the Goddess of Reason; abrogation of marriage. "Republican baptism," which by drowning multitudes of men and women by sinking them in boats in the Seine; the change of the Calender to ten months for the year, and change of name; the overthrow of all law and custom. All was confusion. Since then, while other nations, like England, Prussia, Russia, and even Austria, have gone along steadily, France has had the empire—revolutionary and military—the Bourbon kings; revolution again. (1830.) Louis Phillippe; Orleans House. Revolution 1848. Republic—Empire of Louis Napoleon, 1852; military power again. Then, in 1870, revolution and a Republic, with a war which devastates the land and humbles to dust the nation that had said, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." It is full of confusion now. Bad as the Empire was, there is a worse condition at present. Wilhelm has said there is no responsible government to treat with. Who will be responsible for the performance of treaty obligations? Bismarck declares that he must treat with the people, or with the Empire. Who shall say which? Confusion!

The duality of the French Government leads to confusion. Where is it? At Bordeaux or Paris? "Favre says he will second the decrees of Gambetta. The confusion is, however, probably removable, by the adjournment of the elections." (Feb. 12th, 1871.] The elections show a majority for the Monarchists. Confusion again! Napoleon, though his star has gone down forever, will attempt to recover the sceptre.

We notice, more particularly, chap. xviii. "Babylon fallen, fallen," "habitation of Devils"—"hold of every foul spirit." The real wickedness of the system and "all nations drinking of the wine of the wrath of her fornication"—the connection of the Apostolic church with the governments of the world. "Her sins have reached unto heaven." The time of judgment has come, and the city (implying government, as cities do). Instance, London, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Berlin, Washington, especially Paris; for as Paris has stood, so the French Government has stood, and, consequently, so the Papacy has stood. Twice fallen—one and again judged—"Double unto her double."

So much torment and sorrow give her; as she "hath glorified herself and lived deliciously," rioting on the blood of the saints. She now has in retribution, "blood to drink."

To gratify a foreign king (the Pope) France has often been suicidal to herself. She expelled and murdered the Huguenots to please the papal government. But she thus killed and drove away the best artizans and mechanics, with workmen in manufactures of all kinds that that country or any other could produce in that day.

In expatriating the Germans, she is doing herself a vast injury at the present time. The glory of the French has been their shame. Charlemagne went to Rome to be crowned by the Pope in 800. He gave his great kingdom to the See of Rome thus. Napoleon I. took the Pope to Paris 1000 years afterward, to attend his coronation, (though the Pope did not touch the crown) his presence being necessary to the force of the thing. Thus the glory of France for a thousand years was the Papacy. Shame! Shame!

To return to the comment. When is all this to take place? Just when she vaunts herself of her power and glory, splendor, safety, Infallibility, "Plague came in order," almost the very day that the Pope was declared Infallible the war broke out between France and Germany, which was to secure her plagues and the "smoke of her burning;" "For strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

Kings and great men wailing, "standing afar off," even in America, and mourning. The wail of the Pope himself, (his letters to Spaulding, Archbishop of Baltimore, "the meetings in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Buffalo, Boston, New York; the great men of that church mourn and lament. Prelacy groans and is in mortal agony, because the authority of the throne which it adores is gone, "there is no throne." "Alas! That great city." The general cry is, Alas! that great city, Paris! What city is like unto it? What system was so great and ancient? What city was so renowned? but the dainty and goodly things that their soul lusted after are gone. Think of the enslavement, the traffic, the wealth, and how many were made rich by her. How glorious only last July! The most splendid and fashionable people in the world! Where are they to-day? and how have they lived in the "straitness of the siege," which her enemies have brought upon her? The details are too disgusting to repeat. That mighty city of two millions of people, of boulevards, avenues lined with trees, miles and miles in extent, of galleries of art, palaces, sculpture, architecture unequaled, of institutions of science and learning, libraries and mathematical talent, of churches; Notre Dame, (our mother) and St. Denis, the sepulchre of the Bourbon kings; against which the great "hail storm" was particularly directed; this city of unexampled magnificence, of ancient and modern wonders, adornment and grandeur; this Babylon is fallen "like a great millstone cast into the sea." "And in her was found the blood of prophets, and saints, and all that were slain upon the earth." Every class of persecution, every kind of crime, all methods of murder were done in her.

[To be continued.]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb., 1871.

(Continued from last week.)

THE ATONEMENT.—A REVIEW.

BY J. C. DAY.

I HAVE been accustomed to suppose that the intercession of Christ is for more than pardon, and have even heard him say, "I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter." And again: "Holy Father keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are. I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. Sanctify them through thy truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they also may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they may be one in us. Father I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me."

His intercession for pardon we know is founded on his death; for had not this been offered, that could not have been made. By a parity of reasoning if he pleads for any thing more than pardon, this part of his intercession must be founded upon his positive righteousness. The church is called the bride, the Lamb's wife; and believers are denominated his seed. The principal idea suggested by these figures is not that they are pardoned on his account, but that they inherit from him or for his sake. A wife or child is not generally pardoned on account of the husband or father; but they uniformly inherit with or from them.

I am sensible that these names are applied for other reasons; but so far as they suggest the treatment which believers receive on Christ's account they point us to the inheritance, rather than to pardon. It would seem reasonable to suppose that all the good which is suspended on faith in Christ, and especially on trust in him, and that faith and trust, when they take hold of that offer and promise, rely on him as the procurer of all that is there suggested; otherwise it is difficult to see how faith and trust in that promise is faith and trust in Christ any more than in Gabriel or Adam. Are they so called because he procured pardon, and thus opened the way for eternal life to be bestowed without further respect to him? This certainly has the appearance of being far-fetched. To talk of a son's depending on a father for an estate which he is to earn himself, or receive as a present from another, merely because the father pays his debt and sets him at liberty to work for himself, or apply to another, is manifestly using language in a manner calculated to deceive.

But it is still more difficult to see, upon this plan, why eternal life should be promised, and promised exclusively, to a trust in Christ for salvation. I can see a good reason for connecting pardon with a reliance on him for that discharge; but why a trust in the word and agency of a mere instrument should be the all in all, in the condition of eternal life—why a bare agent appointed to utter the words and distribute the goods of another should fill the whole field of vision and occupy the place which would seem better to befit the Being who employed him, is not so easy to explain.

That eternal life is promised to faith and trust in Christ, and suspended on no other condition, the Scriptures abundantly teach. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 40. "Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."—John vi. 68. "For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first, Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting."—1 Tim., i. 16.

But, how is this, according to the common understanding of Christians? It is because the life is in Christ, as the vine, and is derived from him to the branches, and because faith is the very bond which so unites us to him that we can draw life from him. And this accords with the representation of the Scripture. "This is the record, that God has given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life: and he that hath not the Son hath not life. These things have I written unto you, that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God."—1 John, v. 11, 13.

This then was the reason why faith in Christ was urged, and why eternal life was suspended. This life is in His Son. Christ is the fountain of eternal life, the only life promised after we lose this we now have; and faith is a coming to him for supplies. "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life."—John v. 40. Accordingly, the life promised to faith is received through his name. "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God: and that believing ye might have life throuhh his name."—John xx. 36.

I draw another argument from what in Scripture is called, "The fulness of Christ;" particularly, from his fulness of grace. This fulness is spoken of in the first chapter of John, and again in the Epistle to the Colossians; and in both places it is a plentitude of grace and truth. The passage in John is as follows: "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." "And of his fulness have we all received, and grace for grace. For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

Let us examine what these two parts of his fulness mean. His fulness of truth. When it is said that truth came by Jesus Christ, we are to understand, not only that he was the reality of what was shadowed forth in the Old Testament, but that the whole revelation of God was made by him. By the fulness of truth in him, we are to understand: First, that he had a perfect knowledge of the mind and will of God, as it is said in the very next verse, "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." Secondly, that the whole amount of truth was made known by him, and that the spirit of revelation was his subordinate agent: "When he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you in to all truth; for he shall not speak of himself, (at his own suggestion) but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak. He shall glorify me, for he shall receive of mine and shall show it unto you." Thirdly, that the revelation made by him was an ample disclosure of the eternal mind; sufficient for all the purposes of faith and practice without any supplement drawn from human reason, or modern visions. "He whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." Hence, to reach the perfection of revealed knowledge, is to come unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

This idea is plainly illustrated in the passage in Colossians, as we shall presently see. His fulness of grace. By grace is plainly meant all besides truth that came by Jesus Christ, in contradistinction to the law given by Moses. All grace is asserted to have come by Christ. If then it is any grace to bestow the Spirit and eternal life on sinners, these also came by him. If it was not so, or if any part of grace was not found in him, how could there be in him a fulness of grace? and how could we read of the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ? To talk of a fulness from which we all receive, when there is nothing but a sort of negative influence to prevent punishment, would seem to be an extraordinary dialect.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS.

THE BIBLE OUR STANDARD, AND NOT MEN.

BY DR. J. F. LEE.

"BUT I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." "That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of the world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"

There is a balmy freshness, a lively glow, a holy influence as well as absence of constraint about those authors who have loved to be taught by no authority besides the Divine word. Too many are immersed in the study rather of what is human about theology, than what is divine, taking but the survey of other men's opinions, and not acquainting themselves with its substance; and were all removed which is of man, what would they have left behind? As many, however, think it very much the same whether they imbibe their views of truth from the word, or from a gifted spiritual author, we would sound an earnest warning against so dire a sin and error. Having to do with the direct authority of God, his express word, his presence reigning in Scripture, we may not, without sin, enthrone another Lord upon the conscience, and to take the truth from man's lips at the expense of the wisdom from above, and with the necessity of foregoing spiritual communion with the word, is an error leading only to increase of ignorance. The mind takes in Divine truth, but cannot fully contain or hold it; and a human author, therefore, reproduces it, not in its untainted purity and manifold adaptations, but with such a lack of its original taste and power, so much impregnated and mixed that it is given forth in a few transmissions, little better than undiluted poison. For this reason, and from the fact that there is a stronger affinity in fallen nature for any impurity than for the truth itself, we should only, it is clear, lose life and impoverish ourselves, were we to sift out from human treatises the truths of religion. "Do not trouble your heads," says Bunyan, "that you have not commentators and expositors; pray and read, and read and pray; for a little from God is better than a great deal from man. Also, what is from man is uncertain, and tumbled over and over by man; but what is from God is fixed as a nail in a sure place." There is nothing that so abides with us as what we receive from God; and the reason why Christians, at this day, are at such a loss for some things, is, because they are content with what comes from men's mouths, without searching and kneeling before God to know the truth of things. Things that we receive at God's hand, are as things from the minting-house, though old in themselves, yet new to us. "Old truths are always new to us, if they come to us with the smell of heaven upon them. There belongs to every true notion of truth a power: the notion is the shell; the power, kernel of life. Without this last, truth doth me no good, nor those to whom I communicate it. Hence Paul said to the Corinthians, "When I come to you again, I will not know the speech of them that are puffed up; but the power."

Search after the power of what thou knowest, for it is the power that will do thee good. Now this will not be got but by earnest prayer, and much attending on God. An earnest and abiding love of truth, a pure conscience and ardent desire to know the will of God. Search the Scriptures. The future state you will there find plainly stated.

Our Lord himself has taught us in our prayers to expect such felicity. In heaven? No; on the earth. "Thy will be done in, on earth as in heaven." The inheritance is now reserved in heaven, and ready to be revealed at the last time, at the appearing of our Lord. Then his kingdom will appear. Thy kingdom come. In the selection of the blessings which he condescends to make the subject of our prayer to God, the consummation of his own work of mercy finds a distinguished place. He has concentrated a prayer for the completion of his own work in the remarkable expressions, "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." It is your "Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." At present we are surrounded with a scene of rebellion, anarchy, labor, grief, sorrow, and suffering, while the will of God is done already in Heaven, in the other regions of His universe. Does he teach us to pray for a translation from this unquiet land of sorrow to another and distant orb? He puts no such requests within our lips; he directs us to pray for the establishment of his kingdom, and this kingdom appears to belong exclusively to this earth. "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." Is not the inference twofold: 1st. That the earth is the theatre of his kingdom; and 2ndly, that conformity to his will is the absolute enjoyment of heaven? and that no loftier supplication can be associated with our thoughts than that the hallowed sceptre should be replaced in human hands, even in the hands of the Mighty Antitype, "the Second Adam, the Lord from Heaven." I ask then the Christian, if it be not desirable to call away our minds from human opinions; from the influence even of great names; from popular belief, however ancient; from theories, however venerable; from the prescriptive applause of centuries; from the vague and indistinct ritual of education; and to take our firm, courageous and patient stand upon the plain, grammatical and unwarped text of Scripture?

MONROE, NORTH CAROLINA, Feb., 1871.

IF we observe the many familiar creatures around us in our daily paths, we shall surely in these find something new, something that will repay us, something to teach us love and wisdom of the Great Creator—their Creator and ours. But we are better off than they are. He is their Creator; but He is our Father.

HOW much do they lose who are strangers to serious meditation on the wonders and beauty of nature! How gloriously the God of creation shines in his works! Not a tree or leaf or flower, not a bird or insect, but proclaims in glorious language, "God made me."—Legh Richmond.

ELD. H. ROCKWELL, at Woodstock Valley, Conn., writes: I have been stopping for two or three weeks in this part of this valley of death, both spiritual and temporal. There is a pleasant little class of Advent believers in this place. I preached two discourses here last August; and was greeted with much cordiality at my return, and have shared amply in their kind hospitalities: have had opportunity to preach four discourses since I came, and the seed sown has taken root; the spirit of inquiry is abroad, and my last discourse set the ball in motion, and fully developed an unusual amount of the opposing element: but the love of God, accompanied with a spirit of kindness, will overcome every spirit that opposeth the truth of the Lord, so I have no fear; but as I grow back into a state of second childhood I find the promise sure, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." Praise the Lord. May the blessing of the Lord ever be with you, and preserve and strengthen you for the residue of your arduous labor; so will I ever pray. Unless our LIFE-GIVER comes soon your labors and mine must come to a close. Mine are very inferior to yours, but they are all that I can do. I believe that as long as the church need your labors, and the Lord has anything for you to do, that he will sustain you. I cannot climb the mountains, and tread the snows of winter with the ease I once could, but the Lord helps me still to go; and he will until my poor work is all done.

FROM JANETT A. MAYO.

BR. STORRS: I, with the rest of "our family," are feeling very thankful to God that you are raised from a bed of sickness, and restored so as to attend to your editorial duties. It seems quite like a miracle, for a man of your age, to be so soon restored to active service, after being brought so near your final sleeping time. But, I rejoice to see that your bump of combativeness is not in the least diminished. Stronger than ever, you fight against Immortal-soul-ism, and conditional prophecy. Fight on, dear Br.; the work is not yours but the Lord's. This one thing, I know. "The word of the Lord is sure;" and He will accomplish all that He has promised. Praise his holy name!

I expect to meet all the scattered ones in the kingdom. May our Father in heaven bless them all, is the daily prayer of your sister.

NORTH AMHERST, MASS., Feb. 17, 1871.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 1, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

THE EDITOR of this paper was surprised, astonished, and overwhelmed by an unsought and unexpected presentation of Dr. Miller's bill, for services rendered during his late sickness, receipted in full, paid by a few brethren and sisters, from the promptings of their generous hearts. Words are too feeble to express either our surprise or gratitude. May the Lord reward each and all of you for thus spontaneously relieving us from an expense which we intended to meet ourself without soliciting aid from any one, though it might have taken us a year or two. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD.

SOME of our good friends seem quite alarmed at some of our words on this subject. A Br. writes us a "private" note as follows:

"DEAR BR. STORRS: Permit me to say that I do fear that our enemies will take advantage of the expression of assurance, in the last number of the paper [Feb. 15] as to the 'promise of God and his oath.' Is not the doctrine of 'No Life out of Christ' fully sustained by the word, as 'Thus saith the Lord?' If so, that amounts to 'the promise of God' to raise the righteous only! The truth is too precious to expose it unnecessarily to the attacks of our enemies, and I am confident that the opposing papers and individuals who believe in and publish the mortal resurrection will rejoice, and at once announce that under given conditions, we believe that all men may be raised from the dead. God has told us that the wicked will not live again. No 'Promise' or 'oath' can conflict with that. The 'non-resurrection doctrine' might 'go to the winds'—the truth never."

We are sorry to cause any of our friends alarm; but if they will have a little patience their fears may be dissipated and blown away by "the winds" of truth. We do not develop all our thoughts at once on the subject which has so much alarmed our good brother. We have waited to have our full view drawn out by brother Green, if he chooses to go on in the discussion. If he prefers not to do so, we shall develop our views, in due time, directly. We have published nothing so far but what we have thoroughly considered and duly weighed. We know where the subject strikes, and are prepared to see strong opposition, and, at first, much misapprehension of our position. But if our friends can hold their breath long enough to think before they take alarm, we apprehend they will find no cause of fear for "the truth," though their old traditions may be somewhat disturbed.

No fear of what "our enemies" may say, or do, will in the least deter us from proclaiming what is embraced in God's "promise and oath to Abraham." Any doctrine or system of belief that makes that promise and oath void, or cuts it down in its full import, can never pass with us as from God. When our views are fully brought out "our enemies" will find, if our friends do not, that their scheme of a "mortal resurrection" will find no support from it, and that "No Life out of Christ" and the "Non-resurrection of the wicked dead" stand as firm and unmovable as ever. So, please do not be too much frightened till you know more perfectly where we come out. We have seen "the end from the beginning." We think we understand where our views lead and what pet theories they "upset;" and we presume some others see it, and therefore dread their promulgation; nevertheless they will be promulgated, if the Lord prolongs our life and helps our infirmities; and we have no doubt thousands will yet rejoice that we have been enabled to stand in this "battle," as we have been in many previous ones. We wait patiently for proof, if it is to be had, that the promise and oath of God to Abraham has ever been fulfilled, or that it is made void by any other doctrine of the Bible. Let all remember, God's promise and oath are "two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie;" and let us take heed that we do not treat that promise and oath to Abraham as if it were unmeaning.

"I AM GOD AND NOT MAN."

IF God is as good as man, then the doctrine of raising dead men to life to kill again, or that of endless torture must both be false and a libel on our MAKER. Where can a man of any sensibility, to say nothing of special goodness, be found, who, if he had power to make and people a world, would deliberately so constitute his arrangement as to make it certain that a large portion of that people would be eternally miserable, or that they should be made alive by him, after being dead, to torture and kill them again? Where could an intelligent being be found, who had a spark of kindness left in him, or any sense of justice, that would not pronounce such a proceeding or administration, an outrage, fit only for such tyrants as Nero, or the imaginary devil? How then can any be guilty of charging God with such an unnatural and diabolical administration? Especially, when He challenges all such, saying, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Yet there are men, professing to be Christians, who virtually charge the blessed God with an administration over the work of His own hand that involves falsehood and the most outrageous cruelty; and they think to stop our mouths by crying out, "Who art thou, O man, that repliest against God?" Let such know, it is not against God we reply, but against their blasphemous assumptions of what God will do. We vindicate God's government. They blaspheme it: ignorantly we wish we could say.

Prove that God is as good and wise as a respectable man, and their theories of torment, in a life to come, whether temporary or eternal, not designed for any good to the tormented, are shown to have originated somewhere else than with the God who made heaven and earth. Woe to theories which cannot stand without proving the God of love and wisdom to be worse than one of his frail, erring creatures.

Ask one of the advocates of a future, hopeless torture, either temporal or eternal: Is God as good as a decent man? Is he as kind as a respectable human being? and when they have answered these questions the dispute is ended. If they answer affirmatively, they overthrow their theory of hopeless torment. If they answer negatively, it is folly to spend breath to dispute with them. "Let them alone." "They are joined to their idol." Let them continue to bow down to it, if they will. "Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges . . . their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter: their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps."—Deut. xxxii. 31–33.

HAS THE KINGDOM OF GOD BEEN SET UP?

A GOOD brother, in the West, has several times solicited us to insert articles advocating the idea that the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ was established at the first advent, though still invisible. We have thought, and still think that such a view is a disregard of the plainest prophecies of the Bible, and hence have declined discussion on the subject. Daniel ii. gives us, in the Image, a history of this world down to the setting up of the kingdom of God. That history locates the setting up of the kingdom of God in the divided state of the last, or Roman empire. It carries us down to and in to the "toes" of the Image, and tells us, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," etc, not in the days of the undivided Roman empire, as our brother's theory would have it.

Again. Dan. vii. teaches the same fact as to the time when the kingdom of God is set up. It was not till "the Ancient of days did sit." Then Daniel says, "I beheld till the beast [the 4th beast, or kingdom] was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Then it was he "saw one like the Son of man come with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days . . . and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom," etc. This is further stated to be after the fourth beast, which "is the fourth kingdom upon earth," had finished his reign, and "ten kings" had arisen out of the ruins of the fourth kingdom; after which "the judgment shall sit," which is to take away the "dominion" of the "little horn"—Papacy—"to consume and destroy it unto the end." Then, and not till then, was "The kingdom and dominion . . . given to the people of the saints of the Most High," etc. How any one, with such a clear statement of the time when the kingdom of God is to be set up, can throw that event eighteen hundred years behind us, and several hundred years before the 4th kingdom was even divided, and before the "kings" had appeared, "in the days" of which the prophecy says, "the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom," to us appears mysterious; and we think no good can arise from the discussion of a subject so clearly at war with the plainest prophecies of the Bible.

If our brother's position of the kingdom's being set up eighteen hundred years ago be true, the Lord's prayer has been out of date that length of time, and we all should stop using it, or alter it to suit the changed position, as he would have it yet to be developed, or made manifest, though set up hundreds of years since. No, brother, we cannot accept any such interpretation of the words of truth. "Thy kingdom come" is still our prayer; and when it does come, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" will surely be fulfilled also.

THE TRACT FUNDS AND TRACTS.

IT is desirable that those who have made pledges to the Tract fund should remit the amount as early as possible, as some of our tracts are nearly exhausted, and we wish to issue four new ones in a short time; some of which were commenced last October, but have been delayed in their completion by our sickness.

We have no funds on hand to do the work intended.

PUT NOT YOUR TRUST, ETC.

A FEW weeks since Mr. Beecher, in speaking of Paul, used language which was understood by many who heard him as highly disrespectful of that faithful servant of Christ. It is said that he characterized Paul as "an insignificant, blear-eyed Jew." Of course it is somewhat difficult to imagine the existence of circumstances under which such a remark would be eminently proper, but we can hardly think Mr. B. guilty of so far offending the good sense of his intelligent and otherwise cultivated hearers as to use the language attributed to him except in such connection as would rob it of very much of the disrespect it necessarily imports as an isolated expression.

A person writing in the columns of one of our city daily journals, and signing himself "AN ANXIOUS ENQUIRER," takes Mr. B. to task for the use of the offensive words. This is replied to by one signing himself "Plymouth Rock." The writer says: "I will say for the benefit of the 'Anxious Enquirer' that if he would read more of Mr. Beecher's religious novels his mind and thoughts would be changed for the better; and as he quotes much from the Bible I think, as Mr. Frothingham said in a sermon last spring to his congregation, there are many passages in the Bible which would be as well stricken out and some of the writings of Confucius or the Koran substituted. If a minister of our day does not keep to the old beaten paths there are always many to raise their hands in holy horror. The earth moves, and strong meat is not fit for babes; hence they cry. There is only one true path, and that must be found by progressive aid.

"Many of the members of Mr. Beecher's church are tired of this public prejudice and are determined to sustain Mr. Beecher, even though he called Christ 'an insignificant, blear-eyed Jew.'"

What Mr. F. is made to say about expunging certain passages in the Bible, is true enough respecting such expressions as are there only by virtue of the prejudice or ignorance of the translators. That there are such no well informed Bible student will deny; but the avowal that the Bible would be improved by the substitution of some of the writings of Confucius or Mahomet for such or any Scripture passage strongly suggests a somewhat damaging lack of confidence in the sacred Book.

They who go out of the "beaten paths" of present-day theology are denounced and maligned by many who think, or pretend to think they thereby do God service, but the maligned ones should not lay it to heart if only they are careful to draw more closely to the old, old "beaten path" of revealed truth. Let them cling firmly to that and all will be well. That true path can hardly be "found by progressive aid," in the ordinary sense of that phrase; it can only be found by going right to the Bible in earnest studiousness, faith and prayer. "Plymouth Rock" says Mr. B.'s admirers "are determined to sustain" him "even though he called Christ an insignificant, blear-eyed Jew."

If this correctly represents the views and feelings of any considerable number of Mr. Beecher's flock we know not whether it reflects more severely upon pastor or congregation. That it witnesses overwhelmingly against the latter is, of course, undeniable; but if such a state of mind has been induced by the labors of the pastor the fact witnesses still more overwhelmingly against him. When a congregation has become possessed of such blind confidence in the pastor that they are willing to follow him and sustain him in whatever he may assert, they have fallen into a condition where either a different course on the part of pastor or a separation of the two is an imperative necessity in order to an averting of impending ruin to all parties concerned. What the language of "Plymouth Rock" bespeaks respecting that one church is true, to some extent, of thousands of others, and incalculable mischief is being worked thereby. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help." L. C. T.

THE LENTEN FAST.

FAR be it from us to make light of any religious observance which people enter into intelligently, heartily and conscientiously, but at this time, when a large portion of the religious community of this country are engaged in the above-named exercise, and when the religious prejudices of England are so deeply moved by the approaching marriage of Princess Louise, daughter of Queen Victoria, to a youthful Marquis, the nuptial celebration to take place during Lent, that many protests against the royal family thus offending the feelings of many loyal subjects are being made, it even being stated that should the event take place, as proposed, numerous churches will hold especial penitential service at the same hour, we doubt not all, whatever may be their views respecting outward observances, will agree with the sentiments of the following, addressed, professedly, to a lady in this city:

"As you are one of the most fashionable women in the city, there is no need of reminding you that this is Lent; for I know of no fashion which is more rigorously observed in the circles which you adorn. I am sure that Mrs. M. would be as much shocked not to know the date of Ash-Wednesday as to be ignorant of the latest form and material of trimming. Indeed nothing is more observable than the important part which Lent plays in all fashionable projects. I should like to know the circumstances under which Mrs. M. would give a party of more than sixty persons in Lent, or to have dancing to any other instrument than a piano during the same sacred season. Her religious scruples upon such subjects are most edifying. I happen to know that she has entertained very grave doubts whether she ought to wear at dinner a robe more than semi-decollete; and I know few things more touching in the religion of the fashionable circles than to see Mrs. M., upon the evening before Lent, dancing the German in a dress so conspicuously short at the top that old-fashioned gentlemen like me are fairly driven from the room; and on Ash-Wednesday evening the same lady, keenly sensible to her higher duties, and singing at a small musical gathering in a toilette which suggests the austere fast upon which she has entered.

"The other evening when I betrayed that I did not know it was Lent, Mrs. M. looked at me with simple amazement, evidently shocked, and said, as she saw me smiling:

"'Religion is no joke, Mr. B. If you were a pagan in a heathen land you might be forgiven for not knowing that it was Lent; but I must say that, for a Christian in a Christian city, it is shameful!'

"'I beg your pardon, my dear madame,' answered I, 'but what is Lent?'

"'What is Lent?' said Mrs. W., 'why it is the time when it is not proper to go to large balls nor to give them: when society confines itself to dinner-parties, and small evening-parties, when you ought to eat fish on Fridays, and when some of the first ladies in town go to church every morning.'

"'Lent ends with Easter-Sunday, doesn't it?'

"Certainly it does,' replied Mrs. M.

"And Easter-Sunday is a day when you ought to wear a new bonnet to church, and to see what new bonnets your neighbors wear, isn't it?'

"'Mr. B.,' said she, 'it is very bad taste to jest upon serious subjects:' and so saying, Mrs. M. laid her arm upon young Mr. L.'s shoulder, and he put his arm around her waist, and away they slid into a delightful waltz, but a truly Lenten waltz, for there was only a piano, and it was the most informal gathering.

"Jest upon serious subjects! Do you suppose, Laura, that that poor woman does not know what a ghastly jest her Lent is? When I see her come into church, glistening and rustling, and move to her pew and kneel on the luxurious cushions, and I behold that enormous chignon of dead women's hair or horse hair, or whatever it is, covered with shreds of lace and ribbon, and the delicate spray of tinted plumes, and hear from the front of it, where her mouth is, the words that she reads from that gold and velvet prayer-book, and which declare that she is a miserable sinner, and know all the time that she thinks she is doing a highly proper and religious act in saying so, I have a sudden vision of another temple and of a majestic figure that scourges the money-changers cowering out, exclaiming in Divine wrath: 'Ye have made my Father's house a den of thieves.'

"I met young S. the other day in a very extraordinary part of the city to find him, and he seemed qnite chagrined at encountering me. When I accosted him I stopped and looked grave and said: 'S. I am sorry to find you here. Now tell me frankly, what are you doing in this place?'

"The young man's face cleared in a moment, and he laughed pleasantly as he said, 'I am keeping Lent.'

"'Keeping Lent?' said I, in amazement, for his church was certainly two miles away.

"'I have been to carry some kind of comfort to these horrible rookeries.'

"I begged his pardon; I felt abashed. I understand that his shame was that of being detected upon an errand of charity, as if it were there seen of men. Ah, said I, 'Tis a fast to dole thy sheaf of wheat and meat unto a hungry soul.' The next Sunday I did not go to Saint R. I went to a little church where there was no especial allusion to the season, but I heard a sermon which I think did us all good. As I came from the little church I met Mrs. M. driving from her Lenten confessions of miserable sinner at Saint R. to her Lenten dinner.

"And why, if Lent is so good a thing, do we limit it to six weeks? If we are to keep a Lenten fast of abstaining from drunkenness and swearing, and ill-humor, and greed and meanness, why let it end at Easter? If we are to live temperately and moderately until, as they say in Naples, 'the Lord is risen,' why not live moderately and temperately afterward? Why ought we not to keep a Lent all the year round?"

Nothing is more manifest than that we should. L. C. T.

FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR.

EUROPE and the world are permitted to rejoice over the establishment of peace between Germany and impoverished, humiliated, suffering France. Almost countless thousands of homes in those two countries are filled to-day with mingled joy and mourning; joy because of the prospect of a soon return of absent loved ones, mourning because the places of so many equally loved ones have been made forever vacant by the fiery breath of cruel, relentless war. In the following dispatches will be found the terms of peace so far as yet made known:

LONDON, Friday, Feb. 24, 1871.

"'The Standard' has a special dispatch from Versailles which announces that a treaty of peace was signed to-day by M. Thiers and Count Von Bismarck. Some of the details are yet unarranged, but all will be finally settled to-morrow.

"France pays to Germany 320,000,000 thalers ($240,000,000). Alsace and Lorraine, including the cities of Metz and Nancy, are ceded to the Germans. The German army will not enter Paris. The Emperor William leaves Versailles on Monday for Berlin.

"'The Telegraph' has a dispatch from Paris which states that all the conditions of peace are now settled except that of money. The Germans demand two milliards of thalers ($1,500,000,000), while France has offered to pay one milliard. The Germans have allowed 750,000,000 for requisitions and fines and the debts of Alsace and Lorraine, but hold out for one and a quarter milliards. A friendly arrangement is anticipated.

"'The Daily News says that M. Thiers and his colleagues were to leave Paris for Bordeaux on Thursday, confer with the Assembly on Friday, and return to Paris on Saturday, when they will have a decisive interview with Count Von Bismarck.

Another dispatch from Paris states that Count Heukel and the banker Blanche Schroove have arrived there from Versailles to discuss the financial question with M. Thiers. Count Von Bismarck, it is said, demands an indemnity of six milliards, deducting therefrom, however, all the contributions which have been levied. This proposition, it is said, is vigorously opposed by M. Thiers."

The following from Paris contradicts, in some respects, the preceding one. It is dated Feb. 26, 1871:

"The conclusion of peace is now certain. Thiers and Favre and the Consultation Commission of the Constituent Assembly have accepted the following conditions:

"First: The cession of Alsace and Metz, but Belfort to be restored to France.

"Second: The payment of a war indemnity of five milliards of francs.

"Third: A portion of French territory, with some fortified towns like Sedan, to remain in possession of the Germans until the conditions of the treaty are fulfilled.

"Fourth: The German army to enter Paris on Monday and occupy the Champs Elysees.

"Fifth: Peace to be proclaimed when the French Assembly ratifies these conditions.

"M. Thiers and the Delegation returned to Bordeaux to-day, to submit the terms to the Assembly. It is believed that the treaty will be immediately ratified, and that a further extension of the Armistice will not be necessary."

That the Armistice would result in peace was generally believed the world over, and yet there existed a lingering doubt because of fear lest the pride or blindness of France would prevent the happy consummation. Bismarck has contributed somewhat to this end by making concessions which while they render the terms less harsh and objectionable to France do not disturb the main features of the demands which it was long since understood Germany would make. Since the occupation of France, the conquering powers have become more than ever impressed that the possession of the fortresses of the ceded territory are essential to the proper protection of South Germany. The fact that those provinces were formerly wrested from Germany, and that even now they are in language and customs more German than French, adds largly to the feeling of the Germans that they have a right to them, a point to which few outside of France would take exception.

One of the most pleasing conditions of peace (as contained in the first dispatch, but which is unfortunately rendered uncertain by the last foregoing one), and which brings Prussia of the present and France of the past into a contrast strikingly unfavorable to the latter, is the abandonment of the German intention of marching the army through Paris. The victory over the French now is no less whom I communicate it. Hence Paul said to the Corinthians, "When I come to you again, I will not know the speech of them that are puffed up; but the power."

Search after the power of what thou knowest, for it is the power that will do thee good. Now this will not be got but by earnest prayer, and much attending on God. An earnest and abiding love of truth, a pure conscience and ardent desire to know the will of God. Search the Scriptures. The future state you will there find plainly stated.

Our Lord himself has taught us in our prayers to expect such felicity. In heaven? No; on the earth. "Thy will be done in, on earth as in heaven." The inheritance is now reserved in heaven, and ready to be revealed at the last time, at the appearing of our Lord. Then his kingdom will appear. Thy kingdom come. In the selection of the blessings which he condescends to make the subject of our prayer to God, the consummation of his own work of mercy finds a distinguished place. He has concentrated a prayer for the completion of his own work in the remarkable expressions, "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." It is your "Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." At present we are surrounded with a scene of rebellion, anarchy, labor, grief, sorrow, and suffering, while the will of God is done already in Heaven, in the other regions of His universe. Does he teach us to pray for a translation from this unquiet land of sorrow to another and distant orb? He puts no such requests within our lips; he directs us to pray for the establishment of his kingdom, and this kingdom appears to belong exclusively to this earth. "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." Is not the inference twofold: 1st. That the earth is the theatre of his kingdom; and 2ndly, that conformity to his will is the absolute enjoyment of heaven? and that no loftier supplication can be associated with our thoughts than that the hallowed sceptre should be replaced in human hands, even in the hands of the Mighty Antitype, "the Second Adam, the Lord from Heaven." I ask then the Christian, if it be not desirable to call away our minds from human opinions; from the influence even of great names; from popular belief, however ancient; from theories, however venerable; from the prescriptive applause of centuries; from the vague and indistinct ritual of education; and to take our firm, courageous and patient stand upon the plain, grammatical and unwarped text of Scripture?

MONROE, NORTH CAROLINA, Feb., 1871.

IF we observe the many familiar creatures around us in our daily paths, we shall surely in these find something new, something that will repay us, something to teach us love and wisdom of the Great Creator—their Creator and ours. But we are better off than they are. He is their Creator; but He is our Father.

How much do they lose who are strangers to serious meditation on the wonders and beauty of nature! How gloriously the God of creation shines in his works! Not a tree or leaf or flower, not a bird or insect, but proclaims in glorious language, "God made me."—Legh Richmond.

ELD. H. ROCKWELL, at Woodstock Valley, Conn., writes: I have been stopping for two or three weeks in this part of this valley of death, both spiritual and temporal. There is a pleasant little class of Advent believers in this place. I preached two discourses here last August; and was greeted with much cordiality at my return, and have shared amply in their kind hospitalities: have had opportunity to preach four discourses since I came, and the seed sown has taken root; the spirit of inquiry is abroad, and my last discourse set the ball in motion, and fully developed an unusual amount of the opposing element: but the love of God, accompanied with a spirit of kindness, will overcome every spirit that opposeth the truth of the Lord, so I have no fear; but as I grow back into a state of second childhood I find the promise sure, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." Praise the Lord. May the blessing of the Lord ever be with you, and preserve and strengthen you for the residue of your arduous labor; so will I ever pray. Unless our LIFE-GIVER comes soon your labors and mine must come to a close. Mine are very inferior to yours, but they are all that I can do. I believe that as long as the church need your labors, and the Lord has anything for you to do, that he will sustain you. I cannot climb the mountains, and tread the snows of winter with the ease I once could, but the Lord helps me still to go; and he will until my poor work is all done.

FROM JANETT A. MAYO.

BR. STORRS: I, with the rest of "our family," are feeling very thankful to God that you are raised from a bed of sickness, and restored so as to attend to your editorial duties. It seems quite like a miracle, for a man of your age, to be so soon restored to active service, after being brought so near your final sleeping time. But, I rejoice to see that your bump of combativeness is not in the least diminished. Stronger than ever, you fight against Immortal-soul-ism, and conditional prophecy. Fight on, dear Br.; the work is not yours but the Lord's. This one thing, I know, "The word of the Lord is sure;" and He will accomplish all that He has promised. Praise his holy name!

I expect to meet all the scattered ones in the kingdom. May our Father in heaven bless them all, is the daily prayer of your sister.

NORTH AMHERST, MASS., Feb. 17, 1871.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 1, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

THE EDITOR of this paper was surprised, astonished, and overwhelmed by an unsought and unexpected presentation of Dr. Miller's bill, for services rendered during his late sickness, receipted in full, paid by a few brethren and sisters, from the promptings of their generous hearts. Words are too feeble to express either our surprise or gratitude. May the Lord reward each and all of you for thus spontaneously relieving us from an expense which we intended to meet ourself without soliciting aid from any one, though it might have taken us a year or two. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD.

SOME of our good friends seem quite alarmed at some of our words on this subject. A Br. writes us a "private" note as follows:

"DEAR BR. STORRS: Permit me to say that I do fear that our enemies will take advantage of the expression of assurance, in the last number of the paper [Feb. 15] as to the 'promise of God and his oath.' Is not the doctrine of 'No Life out of Christ' fully sustained by the word, as 'Thus saith the Lord?' If so, that amounts to 'the promise of God' to raise the righteous only! The truth is too precious to expose it unnecessarily to the attacks of our enemies, and I am confident that the opposing papers and individuals who believe in and publish the mortal resurrection will rejoice, and at once announce that under given conditions, we believe that all men may be raised from the dead. God has told us that the wicked will not live again. No 'Promise' or 'oath' can conflict with that. The 'non-resurrection doctrine' might 'go to the winds'—the truth never."

We are sorry to cause any of our friends alarm; but if they will have a little patience their fears may be dissipated and blown away by "the winds" of truth. We do not develop all our thoughts at once on the subject which has so much alarmed our good brother. We have waited to have our full view drawn out by brother Green, if he chooses to go on in the discussion. If he prefers not to do so, we shall develop our views, in due time, directly. We have published nothing so far but what we have thoroughly considered and duly weighed. We know where the subject strikes, and are prepared to see strong opposition, and, at first, much misapprehension of our position. But if our friends can hold their breath long enough to think before they take alarm, we apprehend they will find no cause of fear for "the truth," though their old traditions may be somewhat disturbed.

No fear of what "our enemies" may say, or do, will in the least deter us from proclaiming what is embraced in God's "promise and oath to Abraham." Any doctrine or system of belief that makes that promise and oath void, or cuts it down in its full import, can never pass with us as from God. When our views are fully brought out "our enemies" will find, if our friends do not, that their scheme of a "mortal resurrection" will find no support from it, and that "No Life out of Christ" and the "Non-resurrection of the wicked dead" stand as firm and unmovable as ever. So, please do not be too much frightened till you know more perfectly where we come out. We have seen "the end from the beginning." We think we understand where our views lead and what pet theories they "upset;" and we presume some others see it, and therefore dread their promulgation; nevertheless they will be promulgated, if the Lord prolongs our life and helps our infirmities; and we have no doubt thousands will yet rejoice that we have been enabled to stand in this "battle," as we have been in many previous ones. We wait patiently for proof, if it is to be had, that the promise and oath of God to Abraham has ever been fulfilled, or that it is made void by any other doctrine of the Bible. Let all remember, God's promise and oath are "two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie;" and let us take heed that we do not treat that promise and oath to Abraham as if it were unmeaning.

"I AM GOD AND NOT MAN."

IF God is as good as man, then the doctrine of raising dead men to life to kill again, or that of endless torture must both be false and a libel on our MAKER. Where can a man of any sensibility, to say nothing of special goodness, be found, who, if he had power to make and people a world, would deliberately so constitute his arrangement as to make it certain that a large portion of that people would be eternally miserable, or that they should be made alive by him, after being dead, to torture and kill them again? Where could an intelligent being be found, who had a spark of kindness left in him, or any sense of justice, that would not pronounce such a proceeding or administration, an outrage, fit only for such tyrants as Nero, or the imaginary devil? How then can any be guilty of charging God with such an unnatural and diabolical administration? Especially, when He challenges all such, saying, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Yet there are men, professing to be Christians, who virtually charge the blessed God with an administration over the work of His own hand that involves falsehood and the most outrageous cruelty; and they think to stop our mouths by crying out, "Who art thou, O man, that repliest against God?" Let such know, it is not against God we reply, but against their blasphemous assumptions of what God will do. We vindicate God's government. They blaspheme it: ignorantly we wish we could say.

Prove that God is as good and wise as a respectable man, and their theories of torment, in a life to come, whether temporary or eternal, not designed for any good to the tormented, are shown to have originated somewhere else than with the God who made heaven and earth. Woe to theories which cannot stand without proving the God of love and wisdom to be worse than one of his frail, erring creatures.

Ask one of the advocates of a future, hopeless torture, either temporal or eternal: Is God as good as a decent man? Is he as kind as a respectable human being? and when they have answered these questions the dispute is ended. If they answer affirmatively, they overthrow their theory of hopeless torment. If they answer negatively, it is folly to spend breath to dispute with them. "Let them alone." "They are joined to their idol." Let them continue to bow down to it, if they will. "Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges . . . their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter: their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps."—Deut. xxxii. 31–33.

HAS THE KINGDOM OF GOD BEEN SET UP?

A GOOD brother, in the West, has several times solicited us to insert articles advocating the idea that the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ was established at the first advent, though still invisible. We have thought, and still think that such a view is a disregard of the plainest prophecies of the Bible, and hence have declined discussion on the subject. Daniel ii. gives us, in the Image, a history of this world down to the setting up of the kingdom of God. That history locates the setting up of the kingdom of God in the divided state of the last, or Roman empire. It carries us down to and in to the "toes" of the Image, and tells us, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," etc, not in the days of the undivided Roman empire, as our brother's theory would have it.

Again. Dan. vii. teaches the same fact as to the time when the kingdom of God is set up. It was not till "the Ancient of days did sit." Then Daniel says, "I beheld till the beast [the 4th beast, or kingdom] was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Then it was he "saw one like the Son of man come with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days . . . and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom," etc. This is further stated to be after the fourth beast, which "is the fourth kingdom upon earth," had finished his reign, and "ten kings" had arisen out of the ruins of the fourth kingdom; after which "the judgment shall sit," which is to take away the "dominion" of the "little horn"—Papacy—"to consume and destroy it unto the end." Then, and not till then, was "The kingdom and dominion . . . given to the people of the saints of the Most High," etc. How any one, with such a clear statement of the time when the kingdom of God is to be set up, can throw that event eighteen hundred years behind us, and several hundred years before the 4th kingdom was even divided, and before the "kings" had appeared, "in the days" of which the prophecy says, "the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom," to us appears mysterious; and we think no good can arise from the discussion of a subject so clearly at war with the plainest prophecies of the Bible.

If our brother's position of the kingdom's being set up eighteen hundred years ago be true, the Lord's prayer has been out of date that length of time, and we all should stop using it, or alter it to suit the changed position, as he would have it yet to be developed, or made manifest, though set up hundreds of years since. No, brother, we cannot accept any such interpretation of the words of truth. "Thy kingdom come" is still our prayer; and when it does come, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" will surely be fulfilled also.

THE TRACT FUNDS AND TRACTS.

IT is desirable that those who have made pledges to the Tract fund should remit the amount as early as possible, as some of our tracts are nearly exhausted, and we wish to issue four new ones in a short time; some of which were commenced last October, but have been delayed in their completion by our sickness.

We have no funds on hand to do the work intended.

PUT NOT YOUR TRUST, ETC.

A FEW weeks since Mr. Beecher, in speaking of Paul, used language which was understood by many who heard him as highly disrespectful of that faithful servant of Christ. It is said that he characterized Paul as "an insignificant, blear-eyed Jew." Of course it is somewhat difficult to imagine the existence of circumstances under which such a remark would be eminently proper, but we can hardly think Mr. B. guilty of so far offending the good sense of his intelligent and otherwise cultivated hearers as to use the language attributed to him except in such connection as would rob it of very much of the disrespect it necessarily imports as an isolated expression.

A person writing in the columns of one of our city daily journals, and signing himself "AN ANXIOUS ENQUIRER," takes Mr. B. to task for the use of the offensive words. This is replied to by one signing himself "Plymouth Rock." The writer says: "I will say for the benefit of the 'Anxious Enquirer' that if he would read more of Mr. Beecher's religious novels his mind and thoughts would be changed for the better; and as he quotes much from the Bible I think, as Mr. Frothingham said in a sermon last spring to his congregation, there are many passages in the Bible which would be as well stricken out and some of the writings of Confucius or the Koran substituted. If a minister of our day does not keep to the old beaten paths there are always many to raise their hands in holy horror. The earth moves, and strong meat is not fit for babes; hence they cry. There is only one true path, and that must be found by progressive aid.

"Many of the members of Mr. Beecher's church are tired of this public prejudice and are determined to sustain Mr. Beecher, even though he called Christ 'an insignificant, blear-eyed Jew.'"

What Mr. F. is made to say about expunging certain passages in the Bible, is true enough respecting such expressions as are there only by virtue of the prejudice or ignorance of the translators. That there are such no well informed Bible student will deny; but the avowal that the Bible would be improved by the substitution of some of the writings of Confucius or Mahomet for such or any Scripture passage strongly suggests a somewhat damaging lack of confidence in the sacred Book.

They who go out of the "beaten paths" of present-day theology are denounced and maligned by many who think, or pretend to think they thereby do God service, but the maligned ones should not lay it to heart if only they are careful to draw more closely to the old, old "beaten path" of revealed truth. Let them cling firmly to that and all will be well. That true path can hardly be "found by progressive aid," in the ordinary sense of that phrase; it can only be found by going right to the Bible in earnest studiousness, faith and prayer. "Plymouth Rock" says Mr. B.'s admirers "are determined to sustain" him "even though he called Christ an insignificant, blear-eyed Jew."

If this correctly represents the views and feelings of any considerable number of Mr. Beecher's flock we know not whether it reflects more severely upon pastor or congregation. That it witnesses overwhelmingly against the latter is, of course, undeniable; but if such a state of mind has been induced by the labors of the pastor the fact witnesses still more overwhelmingly against him. When a congregation has become possessed of such blind confidence in the pastor that they are willing to follow him and sustain him in whatever he may assert, they have fallen into a condition where either a different course on the part of pastor or a separation of the two is an imperative necessity in order to an averting of impending ruin to all parties concerned. What the language of "Plymouth Rock" bespeaks respecting that one church is true, to some extent, of thousands of others, and incalculable mischief is being worked thereby. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help." L. C. T.

THE LENTEN FAST.

FAR be it from us to make light of any religious observance which people enter into intelligently, heartily and conscientiously, but at this time, when a large portion of the religious community of this country are engaged in the above-named exercise, and when the religious prejudices of England are so deeply moved by the approaching marriage of Princess Louise, daughter of Queen Victoria, to a youthful Marquis, the nuptial celebration to take place during Lent, that many protests against the royal family thus offending the feelings of many loyal subjects are being made, it even being stated that should the event take place, as proposed, numerous churches will hold especial penitential service at the same hour, we doubt not all, whatever may be their views respecting outward observances, will agree with the sentiments of the following, addressed, professedly, to a lady in this city:

"As you are one of the most fashionable women in the city, there is no need of reminding you that this is Lent; for I know of no fashion which is more rigorously observed in the circles which you adorn. I am sure that Mrs. M. would be as much shocked not to know the date of Ash-Wednesday as to be ignorant of the latest form and material of trimming. Indeed nothing is more observable than the important part which Lent plays in all fashionable projects. I should like to know the circumstances under which Mrs. M. would give a party of more than sixty persons in Lent, or to have dancing to any other instrument than a piano during the same sacred season. Her religious scruples upon such subjects are most edifying. I happen to know that she has entertained very grave doubts whether she ought to wear at dinner a robe more than semi-decollete; and I know few things more touching in the religion of the fashionable circles than to see Mrs. M., upon the evening before Lent, dancing the German in a dress so conspicuously short at the top that old-fashioned gentlemen like me are fairly driven from the room; and on Ash-Wednesday evening the same lady, keenly sensible to her higher duties, and singing at a small musical gathering in a toilette which suggests the austere fast upon which she has entered.

"The other evening when I betrayed that I did not know it was Lent, Mrs. M. looked at me with simple amazement, evidently shocked, and said, as she saw me smiling:

"'Religion is no joke, Mr. B. If you were a pagan in a heathen land you might be forgiven for not knowing that it was Lent; but I must say that, for a Christian in a Christian city, it is shameful!'

"'I beg your pardon, my dear madame,' answered I, 'but what is Lent?'

"'What is Lent?' said Mrs. W., 'why it is the time when it is not proper to go to large balls nor to give them: when society confines itself to dinner-parties, and small evening-parties, when you ought to eat fish on Fridays, and when some of the first ladies in town go to church every morning.'

"'Lent ends with Easter-Sunday, doesn't it?'

"Certainly it does,' replied Mrs. M.

"And Easter-Sunday is a day when you ought to wear a new bonnet to church, and to see what new bonnets your neighbors wear, isn't it?'

"'Mr. B.,' said she, 'it is very bad taste to jest upon serious subjects:' and so saying, Mrs. M. laid her arm upon young Mr. L.'s shoulder, and he put his arm around her waist, and away they slid into a delightful waltz, but a truly Lenten waltz, for there was only a piano, and it was the most informal gathering.

"Jest upon serious subjects! Do you suppose, Laura, that that poor woman does not know what a ghastly jest her Lent is? When I see her come into church, glistening and rustling, and move to her pew and kneel on the luxurious cushions, and I behold that enormous chignon of dead women's hair or horse hair, or whatever it is, covered with shreds of lace and ribbon, and the delicate spray of tinted plumes, and hear from the front of it, where her mouth is, the words that she reads from that gold and velvet prayer-book, and which declare that she is a miserable sinner, and know all the time that she thinks she is doing a highly proper and religious act in saying so, I have a sudden vision of another temple and of a majestic figure that scourges the money-changers cowering out, exclaiming in Divine wrath: 'Ye have made my Father's house a den of thieves.'

"I met young S. the other day in a very extraordinary part of the city to find him, and he seemed qnite chagrined at encountering me. When I accosted him I stopped and looked grave and said: 'S. I am sorry to find you here. Now tell me frankly, what are you doing in this place?'

"The young man's face cleared in a moment, and he laughed pleasantly as he said, 'I am keeping Lent.'

"'Keeping Lent?' said I, in amazement, for his church was certainly two miles away.

"'I have been to carry some kind of comfort to these horrible rookeries.'

"I begged his pardon; I felt abashed. I understood that his shame was that of being detected upon an errand of charity, as if it were there seen of men. Ah, said I, ''Tis a fast to dole thy sheaf of wheat and meat unto a hungry soul.' The next Sunday I did not go to Saint R. I went to a little church where there was no especial allusion to the season, but I heard a sermon which I think did us all good. As I came from the little church I met Mrs. M. driving from her Lenten confessions of miserable sinner at Saint R. to her Lenten dinner.

"And why, if Lent is so good a thing, do we limit it to six weeks? If we are to keep a Lenten fast of abstaining from drunkenness and swearing, and ill-humor, and greed and meanness, why let it end at Easter? If we are to live temperately and moderately until, as they say in Naples, 'the Lord is risen,' why not live moderately and temperately afterward? Why ought we not to keep a Lent all the year round?"

Nothing is more manifest than that we should. L. C. T.

FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR.

EUROPE and the world are permitted to rejoice over the establishment of peace between Germany and impoverished, humiliated, suffering France. Almost countless thousands of homes in those two countries are filled to-day with mingled joy and mourning; joy because of the prospect of a soon return of absent loved ones, mourning because the places of so many equally loved ones have been made forever vacant by the fiery breath of cruel, relentless war. In the following dispatches will be found the terms of peace so far as yet made known:

LONDON, Friday, Feb. 24, 1871.

"'The Standard' has a special dispatch from Versailles which announces that a treaty of peace was signed to-day by M. Thiers and Count Von Bismarck. Some of the details are yet unarranged, but all will be finally settled to-morrow.

"France pays to Germany 320,000,000 thalers ($240,000,000). Alsace and Lorraine, including the cities of Metz and Nancy, are ceded to the Germans. The German army will not enter Paris. The Emperor William leaves Versailles on Monday for Berlin.

"'The Telegraph' has a dispatch from Paris which states that all the conditions of peace are now settled except that of money. The Germans demand two milliards of thalers ($1,500,000,000), while France has offered to pay one milliard. The Germans have allowed 750,000,000 for requisitions and fines and the debts of Alsace and Lorraine, but hold out for one and a quarter milliards. A friendly arrangement is anticipated.

"'The Daily News says that M. Thiers and his colleagues were to leave Paris for Bordeaux on Thursday, confer with the Assembly on Friday, and return to Paris on Saturday, when they will have a decisive interview with Count Von Bismarck.

Another dispatch from Paris states that Count Heukel and the banker Blanche Schroove have arrived there from Versailles to discuss the financial question with M. Thiers. Count Von Bismarck, it is said, demands an indemnity of six milliards, deducting therefrom, however, all the contributions which have been levied. This proposition, it is said, is vigorously opposed by M. Thiers."

The following from Paris contradicts, in some respects, the preceding one. It is dated Feb. 26, 1871:

"The conclusion of peace is now certain. Thiers and Favre and the Consultation Commission of the Constituent Assembly have accepted the following conditions:

"First: The cession of Alsace and Metz, but Belfort to be restored to France.

"Second: The payment of a war indemnity of five milliards of francs.

"Third: A portion of French territory, with some fortified towns like Sedan, to remain in possession of the Germans until the conditions of the treaty are fulfilled.

"Fourth: The German army to enter Paris on Monday and occupy the Champs Elysees.

"Fifth: Peace to be proclaimed when the French Assembly ratifies these conditions.

"M. Thiers and the Delegation returned to Bordeaux to-day, to submit the terms to the Assembly. It is believed that the treaty will be immediately ratified, and that a further extension of the Armistice will not be necessary."

That the Armistice would result in peace was generally believed the world over, and yet there existed a lingering doubt because of fear lest the pride or blindness of France would prevent the happy consummation. Bismarck has contributed somewhat to this end by making concessions which while they render the terms less harsh and objectionable to France do not disturb the main features of the demands which it was long since understood Germany would make. Since the occupation of France, the conquering powers have become more than ever impressed that the possession of the fortresses of the ceded territory are essential to the proper protection of South Germany. The fact that those provinces were formerly wrested from Germany, and that even now they are in language and customs more German than French, adds largely to the feeling of the Germans that they have a right to them, a point to which few outside of France would take exception.

One of the most pleasing conditions of peace (as contained in the first dispatch, but which is unfortunately rendered uncertain by the last foregoing one), and which brings Prussia of the present and France of the past into a contrast strikingly unfavorable to the latter, is the abandonment of the German intention of marching the army through Paris. The victory over the French now is no less complete and decisive than was the victory of the French, under Napoleon Bonaparte, over the Prussians in the short but ever-memorable campaign of 1806. While Napoleon was winning his famous victory over one half of the Prussian army at Jena, Davoust was gaining a more glorious one over the other half at Auerstadt. The power of Prussia was for the time destroyed and herself humiliated. The victory was complete without any thing more, but Napoleon could not be satisfied without the occupation of Berlin. Davoust first entered, and when the keys of the capital were offered him he barely took them, and, handing them back, said, substantially, they belong to a greater than I—to the Emperor. France is abject to-day, and a successor of the humbled Frederick is the conquering hero, but if he will only spare Paris this unnecessary humiliation, he will put into the crown of his blood-bought glory a gem of thousand fold more brilliancy than the mere empty name of having occupied Europe's great capital.

Alsace has an area of 3,360 square miles, and its population numbers 1,200,000, of whom about 1,000,000, it is said, speak German exclusively, or French and German, as their ordinary languages. Their province contains the cities of Strasbourg, Colmar, and Mulhouse. Lorraine has an area of 9,529 square miles, and its population numbers over 1,200,000. Metz is its most important fortified town. It will be seen that the exact extent of territory ceded to Germany is not yet certainly known, but t together with the money indemnity will go far toward repaying that power what it has cost her in dollars and cents.

The following dispatch from Emperor William to Empress Augusta, announcing the arrangement of terms of peace, is the very latest:

"With a deeply moved heart in gratitude to God, I inform you that the preliminaries of peace have been signed. The Bordeaux Assembly must yet ratify them.

WILHELM."

L. C. T.

RIGHTLY DIVIDE THE WORD.

BY JACOB GRIM.

IN an article under the above heading we find the following words, which fully meet our approbation:

"Thus we may all feel more than justified in making some points of truth more prominent than others, in our endeavors to bring our fellow-beings to that more perfect knowledge of the Gospel to which we feel God has led us. The subject of man's nature and destiny, together with such prominent attending subjects as the work of Christ at his first appearing, the nearness of his second coming, and the deliverance then to be effected, etc., etc., are certainly possessed of an immediate value and importance that cannot be properly claimed in behalf of certain more advanced questions, it may be, which, by reason of being more advanced, may not unfairly be regarded, for the present, as secondary, or as 'side issues.'"

To the above quotation we are willing to give our assent. What then is the great question? "Man's nature and destiny." And what is that? Is he wholly and purely animal? and is his destiny to the dust of the earth: as Moses declares in his testimony, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return?"

With us this is the vital question, and has interested our attention since 1844, when our mind was first called to examine it; and we have come to the conclusion that all future life from the dust, depends upon a union with Jesus Christ, for in him is life; and we consider it is based upon the promises of God as one of the "immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie." "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life." Now if there is any future life from the dust, or from the dead, to any individuals in the flesh, even to fulfil what some suppose to be the promise of God, I am anxious to know it, and in what way it is to be accomplished. I am aware that some men think that the justice of God to the heathen demands such an event, in order that they may have an opportunity to receive or reject the blessing of life. There are many things in the dispensations of the past that we find it extremely difficult to harmonize with what we, as individuals, consider justice. Then again how God can save a man and give him a resurrection unto life, who has never heard of Jesus Christ, the great author of life, may not be plain to our mind. But that such is the case is made plain by the language of the apostle John, in Rev. vii., after beholding the sealing of the 144,000 of the children of Israel. "After this (says John) I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues, stood before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. . . . And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?" [Has the gospel been given to all the world?] "And I [John] said unto him, Sir thou knowest (whence they came). And he (the angel) said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore (because they have done so) are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them."

Now, there are several facts brought to our mind in this chapter. First, John, or the angel, locates this event as taking place in this Gospel dispensation: For these are they which come out of great tribulation. Second, they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Third, John has a vision of it as taking place during the dispensation in which he lived. And fourth, the question was put to him as one of astonishment, Whence came all this multitude, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people? John answered as one who did not know: and the Angel gave him the information as to one who was ignorant of the fact: "These are they which have come out of great tribulation;" which locates it in the present dispensation.

Now it may be incomprehensible to me, and I may be unable to answer the question, how God can save an individual through Jesus Christ, and yet the individual never heard of Christ; but that such must be the fact seems evident from the language of the angel to the inspired apostle. I may be unable to give the history of the facts of all nations or families of the earth being blessed in Abraham and his seed, and yet the angel records the fact, nevertheless, that a great multitude which no man can number, of all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples, are saved through the Lamb. For Christ is Abraham's seed, and all these saved families have been blessed in Christ the seed of Abraham.

Now then to the question, the nature and destiny of man. He was made of the dust of the earth an animal man, and his tendency is back to the earth, perishing. But God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life." Now whoever attains unto a resurrection of life, attains it through Jesus Christ. It matters not whether he be Jew, or Gentile, bond or free, heathen or pagan; for there are some of all the families of the world that John saw, and our benevolence is large enough to take them all in, for they are all blessed in Christ.

Paul could see how God could judge the world in righteousness, although all men had not received either the law or the Gospel. For there is no respect of persons with God, "For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law. (For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.) For when the Gentiles which have not the law, (of the Gospel) do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law, are a law unto themselves; which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile (when they have no law) accusing (or else excusing one another) in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my Gospel."—Rom. ii.

The whole destiny of man is changed by Jesus Christ, and all future life depends upon him; hence all who are blessed with future life receive it through Jesus Christ, for in him is life, and the light of men. I may not be able to explain the hour or the moment in which the Infinite can, or will work out this blessing; neither can I understand how Paul could say, So all Israel shall be saved, when I know that Jesus said, your fathers ate manna in the wilderness and are dead; they were a part of all Israel, unless God has an Israel of which they were no part of. Of one thing I am certain, we may think we are right in certain interpretations of what we call prophecies, and be altogether mistaken, and in the end cry out, in the language of the apostle, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out; or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things; to whom be glory forever. Amen."—Rom. xi. 33–36.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Feb., 1871.

A GEM FROM JOHN.

AMONG his sparkling words of truth and grace, the large-hearted, Christ-like John has this: "We love him, because he first loved us." Love for love! Beautiful thought! That is John's motto, his text, his theology, his every-day conscious Christian life. Love for love—how natural it is, how simple it seems, and yet it is at once supernatural and wondrously sublime. It is not a creed, something believed; or a doctrine, something taught; but a life-power, a constraining motive, a joy unspeakable, heaven in essence, glory in foretaste, and it is cause and consequence in happy and beautiful harmony.

I. "We love him"—a fact. Consciousness speaks. The Christian man knows that he loves. It is not a wish, a hope, or a declaration that such a state of heart is desirable, and every way in harmony with union to Christ the great lover; but it is the positive utterance of an indisputable fact of which the speaker is personally certain. It is a very blessed fact that the purest and best emotions of the child of God are matters of subjective consciousness of which no logical process can deprive him, and which remain as the consolation of his heart even when the Christian path is very rough, and Christian brethren not very brotherly. And it is only the child of God, the man born from above, the partaker of the divine nature, who can say this. The man who is only born of the flesh, however correct his deportment, and orthodox his creed, and respectable his church, cannot say it. "We love him" is the family word which can be truthfully uttered only by the children. It is the children's test. "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." The "him" is obvious as a truth, for the child of God loves his Father; but what would be the consequence of dropping the pronoun from 1 John iv. 19, and reading it, "We love, because he first loved us?" It would be to give the comprehensive thought of love to the Father and all his family, the Son and all his followers, the Holy Spirit and all whom he has quickened. And the very next words suggest that this was the broadly blessed fact before the apostle's mind, for he writes, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." But are we at liberty to drop the pronoun? The best Greek critics are agreed that the original text did not contain it. So we have the grand distinguishing characteristic of God's family—love. They are the men who can say—"WE LOVE."

II. It is the consequence of another fact. "We love," there is a consequence; "because he first loved us;" there is its cause. The cause is adequate to produce this result, notwithstanding the fact that the human heart is enmity against God. Priority in time is affirmed of it; "he first loved us." Here is a lesson in theology: in everything that is good, God first, man afterwards. We originate nothing that will live in a holy eternity. All that we are and do as natural men must perish; all that God does in us, for us, and through us, as subjects of the new creation in Christ, will live. The results of the Divine lover's love will continue. But the priority in time, whether it was the hour before we loved in return, or the dateless eternity before the world was, is only in harmony with the superior strength of the love which produced ours. Why, what shall we say about the love of God?

HE loved us!
He loved us!
He loved us!
He first LOVED US!

Put it how you will, ring the changes as you may, the effect is altogether wonderful. But we had better hold back from the overwhelming contemplation, so far as pen and ink are concerned, that each of us may take it to his closet and think over it there. There are some things in the Christian's treasury too sacred for either press or pulpit. But, O happy, happy one, who can say with the beloved disciple:—

"I love, because he first loved me;"
and,
"I know that when HE shall appear, I shall be like him!"

—EDITOR of the Rainbow.

AGE TO COME.

BY ELD. ABRAHAM PENNELL.

IN order to any intelligent discussion upon this subject, it is necessary that we fully understand what is meant by the phrase.

I suppose it will generally be allowed to be a dispensation to come, or to succeed the present one. I understand a dispensation to mean, the order or regulations introduced or established by God himself, made known to his people for any length of time he may think proper, and then a change to another may take place.

We are living under or in the gospel dispensation; that is, the gospel of the kingdom, which will be the next in order. I can hardly see how there should be any chance for difference of opinion amongst Advent believers, if they believe at all in the kingdom of God, or coming and reign of Christ. To say that the kingdom was established or set up at the first advent, and all the prophecies fulfilled at that time, upon that subject, is to confound the distinction between the babe of Bethlehem, and the Melchisedec Priest and triumphant King, descending from heaven with all the holy angels with him, to sit upon the throne of his glory.

Failing to apprehend the distinction between the two advents of Christ, and the order of things under each, in my humble opinion, is the principal cause of disagreement: or failing to apprehend the second advent produces the same disagreement, or confusion, deranging or disordering the Divine plan of human redemption.

We can see some of the disastrous effects of this by looking to the past history of the Jews. Here is where they failed. Christ was a stumbling-block to them; and how so? simply because they overlooked or stumbled at the first advent or next dispensation; they would have no suffering Christ; he must be a kingly one or they would have none.

The good news of the kingdom they rejected. They must have the kingdom at once, or would blindly persecute and murder their own king. And who supposes their delusion did not lead them to think they were doing God service? How much have the Gentiles profited by this sad history of the Jews? With all the Jewish Scriptures before their eyes, and all the teaching of Christ and the apostles, they have stumbled exactly in the opposite direction. They will have only one advent, and that the first. They will have a suffering Christ without the glory which is to follow.

Talk to them of a second coming of Christ, to raise the dead saints, and they will tell you, many of them were in heaven before Christ was born; and that others go just as soon as their soul is separated from the body.

Talk to them of Christ coming to set up a kingdom and reigning upon the throne of his father David, in Mt. Zion, and they will tell you the kingdom was set up eighteen hundred years ago. Their Christ will never sit upon the throne of David, no more than the Jews would have Christ suffer. To the Jews the kingdom was literal. To the Gentile it is spiritual. The Jew was right only in time. The Gentile is wrong in time and in character.

One other thing about this matter is, that the details or order of the age to come cannot be altogether accurately described. One question about this subject of the kingdom, perhaps, gives as much trouble or more than any other. That is, whether there is, or will be a state of trial or probation? An appeal to Scripture alone must decide this. I shall not go into the scripture proof now, though I think it very clear. What reason is there for the belief that this age closes up all trial or probation to mortal beings? The change from the law to the gospel certainly produced no such effect: that change was connected with judgments and mercies; and we have reason to believe that the change from the gospel to the kingdom, will also be attended with greater judgments and mercies. It would be arguing backwards to try to prove that a dispensation to come would not increase the facilities and advantages of life, as much at least as the change of the law to the gospel. Paul says, the gospel reveals what was hid in other ages. And is the world not to be blessed with the light of the gospel, or kingdom, half as long as it was cursed with ignorance and darkness? Is the light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of Israel to cease forever at the close of this dispensation? Is it true that all the nations of the earth are to be blessed in Abraham's seed? If so, then there is an age to come, and in that age will be probation.

HONEOYE, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1871.

THE EARNEST OF OUR INHERITANCE.

ONE may be contented without being satisfied—grateful for what God has given, and yet anxious to press forward to better things, nobler attainment, a higher position. How much there is in daily experience to teach the necessity of this earnest pressing forward! Every one who knows any thing of himself must say, "I have not yet attained, neither am already perfect." Trials and difficulties within, trials and difficulties without, remind us constantly that we are yet in the wilderness, yet in the land of storms, and trouble, and sorrow, and unrest. Sometimes our sun shines brightly for a brief period; our communion with God is a conscious reality; every difficulty in religion vanishes before the supernatural light, and every burden of life is lifted as if by an invisible hand. We fondly think we have conquered the world, the flesh, and the devil. Our mountain stands strong; we are on the hill of transfiguration; have visions of the glory that fadeth not away; wonder at our past miserable unbeliefs; and feel quite sure that henceforth, happen what may, we shall walk with God as Enoch did! Nothing shall in future make us doubt the Father's faithfulness, or the Son's love, or the Spirit's gracious presence. We will be "strong in faith, giving glory to God." We will keep our garments clean, our heads up in the serene atmosphere of "heaven upon earth," and our hearts full of the peace that passeth understanding. No more shall we be tossed on a tempestuous ocean, or driven to and fro by the dark blasts of the adversary; but we will illustrate the joy of salvation by our constant happiness, and recommend the gospel by our holy consistency. We shall be, even now, more than conquerors through Him that loves us, and we shall prove to all with whom we are surrounded, that we are "the epistles of Christ written, not with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God," so that they beholding the evidence of our sonship, may glorify our Father and long for the sacred privilege we so manifestly enjoy.

Alas! how brief these periods of refreshing are! How soon we find ourselves at the foot of the mountain, grovelling in the dust, groping in the dark, and tempted by a demon! We have lost those things that we had gained; the shekinah has departed; a blast from the wilderness has extinguished the torch with which we went joyously forth to meet the Bridegroom; all is over with us now; it was only a beautiful illusion, a delicious dream, which makes the bitter reality of disappointment and sorrow almost unendurable!

"Unendurable," said you? Then something has been "gained" after all! Everything is not lost. You have at least this salvage from the wreck to remind you how precious that argosy was—a memory of the holy wealth which seems to have been engulfed in the dark sea. Look at it! unendurable? It is well. You cannot now rest where you are. Up again! That scene was too beautiful to be shut out of sight forever, that enjoyment too sweet to be henceforth denied the man that loves it. Our God is too fatherly to give only foretastes of the milk and honey; He means these foretastes to create the desire for the goodly land itself. The education of the moral taste is one of the chief objects of Christian discipline. To admire what he esteems, to value what he calls "of great price," and to strive for the rewards that he holds out to the victor, are among the lessons which the disciple has to learn in the school of his master, Christ. Let us up again, then! True, we are vexed with ourselves, and disappointed in our dearest friends, our families, and our Christian fellowship; in short, in everything about us—all is vanity and vexation of spirit! Well, if God says "Go forward," let us obey, though there be frowning mountains on either hand, the sea in front, and Pharaoh and his host close behind. It seems madness; there is neither bridge nor boats, and the furious adversary is in hot pursuit. Well, we must just find out God's meaning by doing what He commands. Obedience is, in fact, only another word for victory. Let us therefore press on—trying, painful as it is; for, beyond controversy, the "prize" is worth it all.

Has He not given his children an earnest of that prize? and will He refuse the inheritance to those upon whom the earnest has been bestowed? The first sheaf heralds the harvest; the earnest implies the full reward; the foretaste is a pledge of the bliss ineffable. Let us not misunderstand our God on this important matter. He certainly means what he says; and if he has said that believers are sealed by the Holy Spirit as the earnest of their inheritance, the words must be accepted as the declaration of a truth not to be disputed, and a purpose not to be set aside. The authorised version gives this sublime revelation with substantial accuracy thus: "In whom (Christ) ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."—Eph. i. 13, 14. Elsewhere, also, the fidelity of God to his purpose and promise is thus declared: "But as God is true, our word towards you was not yea and nay. For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us. Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts."—2 Cor. i. 18–22. The word "earnest," which had its origin in mercantile transactions, clearly means the pledge or deposit guaranteeing the rest. The Spirit is the Divine pledge to the child of God, that all the promises shall be fulfilled at the proper time. The inheritance is kept back, reserved, until the day of Christ, the glorious Heir; but the believer is sure to enter on possession then, seeing that he has the earnest now. The counsel to practical holiness, therefore, founded upon this fact, is full of significance: "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Eph. iv. 30.

The day of redemption, or resurrection (Rom. xiii. 23), is the time of the inheritance. The Lamb alone can open and read the sealed title deeds (Rev. v.) of that glorious inheritance, and it will be given to the sealed people. How sublimely simple and coherent all this! Compared with the mysterious, far-off "sky-kingdom" to which common theology sends the souls of believers at death, it is mid-day sunlight! The Bible knows nothing of glorification at death; that takes place only when the Lord of glory comes; and the Bible knows nothing of "going to heaven," but a great deal about Christ coming to give his people "glory, honor, and immortality" with himself. His reward is with him. Infallibly he will recognise, and right royally he will reward his friends who dared all for his truth, and remained faithful to him amidst trial, desertion, and persecution. Let us be sure that we have the "earnest," the enlightening, guiding, and sanctifying Spirit, and all will be well when the beloved Master returns. Nay, all is well now. If "led by the Spirit" we can well afford cold looks and hard speeches. Is He not the Comforter? and does he not prove his right to that beautiful name, by filling our hearts with peace, and joy, and hope? Yes, it is all well, even now! O for more of that constraining love to Jesus which makes service pleasant, and burdens light, and turns sorrow into songs of gladness, as we bear witness for and journey on to meet Him—our Redeemer, our Example, our Lord, our Life, our All!—EDITOR of the Rainbow.

LETTER TO A CHRISTIAN IN TROUBLE.

MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST: You have been much in my heart since I saw you yesterday, and I have felt sweetly how much the Lord loves you, and how tender is the compassion of "the Man of Sorrows." Read, I pray you, in the xxii. and lxix. and other Psalms what He suffered, and it will help you, as it has done me, to bear your own.

I have a soul-agony known to no human being, that sometimes threatens my health, and even my reason; one that holds my life at intervals as in a vice, an interior paralysis, so that I cannot move. Christ has enabled me to bear it, and to repress impatience of suffering, but this morning, as I lay awake in the dark, after long tossing, I seemed to have power to hand the whole thing over to Christ. It was a wonderful effort, and it is a sore struggle at first to keep it there. Strange that it should be so; but nature will strive before grace conquers.

I often thank the Lord for all his dealings with me, and—

"Most for the severe;"

but I think that I have this morning as never before transferred the whole over to Him.

And now you ask, "Is the suffering gone?" No: but it is laid on Christ, and my will, which, after all was one large element of suffering, seems quite gone, and I lie in the arms of Jesus. In a hospital, those who fully resign themselves to their position escape much that the restless ones have to bear. I am satisfied with his will, whether I suffer thus all my life, or whether the weight of suffering be removed. I feel now that I have done all that I can do, committed it all to Jesus. Now it is my Lord's concern and ordering—

"And when it seems no chance or change
From grief can set me free,
Hope finds its strength in helplessness,
And patiently waits on Thee.
Man's weakness waiting upon God,
Its end can never miss,
For men on earth no work can do,
More angel-like than this."

I know, after your sleepless nights and agonizing days, what an effort this act of trust will be, and I commend you to "the Spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind," for the ability thus to cast your all upon Christ. A delay may only increase the disorder of your nerves and health, and make it harder to do. I urge you on receiving this, to go alone, and at once and definitely to lay your sorrow wholly upon the Lord. Then, having laid it there, keep it there. You will thus find the Lord pledged to order it to your own largest blessing, and to his own glory in you.

I could weep with you, my brother; my very soul bears your agony with you; yet it is not human sympathy that you need, but rather entire trust in God. "Commit thy way unto the Lord," and then he is engaged to surely "bring it to pass."

Yours, in the love of Jesus Christ.

January, 1871.

—The Christian, London, England.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

BR. STORRS: I am glad that in answer to prayer our heavenly Father has lifted you up from a sick bed, so that we can have something from your pen again. Not that we have not been well fed through your long sickness; no, no; for God has some noble workmen that rightly divide the word of truth, whereby the household of faith have been well fed. We judge thus from the fact that we have had good food, whereby we have profited and have an increasing faith and growth in grace and knowledge of the truth. Here the question comes up, What is truth? Ans.: Thy word is truth; and with our present light, I cannot see but what that word teaches the doctrine of the age to come more clearly than the non-resurrection of the wicked dead; and we have thought for some time that God had a work for some one to do in establishing and confirming that, to us, absorbing truth; and we hope to see more on both sides of the question. As for myself, I have had no doubts on the subject, for more than twenty years, but that there will be some left of the nations in a mortal state.

What I wish to say further is, I would like to see Br. Thomas Reed's articles on the Non-Resurrection of the wicked put in a tract; also, Br. Storrs' on Inherent Immortality, etc. There are so many good articles in the HERALD of late, that time would fail to mention them all singly. Go on, brethren; the Lord is on our side, and we are sure to gain the victory. We have just returned from a short tour and found an increasing interest to hear on the doctrine we preach, and we pray the Lord to send us help. May He direct in all things. Pray for me; one who is looking for Jesus to come.

GRAFTON, ILL., Feb. 16, 1871.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., (Richmond Hall), Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

CONCORD, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

MANCHESTER, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

WEST MERIDEN, Sunday, April 30.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

WM. STUART.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sunday, March 5.

MERIDEN, Conn., Sundays, March 12 and 26.

GEO. W. BROWN.

WEST MERIDEN, CONN., Sunday, March 5.

EATONTOWN, N. J., Sunday, March 12.

S. W. BISHOP.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Sundays, Feb. 26, and March 5.

B. H. COUCH.

I am to preach in Onondaga county, N. Y., at HIGH BRIDGE, near Fayetteville, March 2, and April 7. If there are any Life Believers near I shall be glad to see them there.

JAMES H. JACOBS.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—John Robie, Daniel H. Willard, N. Hall, John Mullon, E. W. Surdam, Lewis Gould, C. L. Hathaway.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—T. C. Craig (pays to end of vol. viii.,) Wm. Babcock, Samuel Moulton, D. I. Putnam (pays to May 31). S. A. Van Aken, Clinton Bozarth, E. W. Proctor, William Brown, Mrs. M. J. Watson, J. K. Marshall, C. A. Patterson, N. Smith, Frank Beach, Edward Mason, C. C. Webber, John Shafer, Mrs. Anna Willets, B. F. Welsh, A. B. Welsh.

VARIOUS SUMS—Mrs. M. M. Bradley, 36 cents; Lewis Morgan, $5; G. L. Hart, $3.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Levi Wright, Mrs. I. H. Ford, J. S. Hannah, H. H. Brown, J. W. Brown, H. A. Arnold, Janett Mayo, Wm. Babcock, Silas Goodell, D. I. Putnam, M. E. Youngblood, Wm. Brown, J. V. Sims (two parcels), Henry Armstrong, O. F. Yale.

FOR OUR CAMP-MEETING IN 1871

H. Rockwell, $1.

THE CONSECRATION.

BY E. MARIA UPHAM.

Life visions fade;
I fain would rest me in the quiet shade
Of holy palm.
My heart is weary with the griefs and tears,
And longing, waiteth the eternal years
Of blissful calm.

Naught here I find,
Save an unsatisfied and restless mind,
With yearnings vain.
Earth's mysteries of knowledge lure me on
To see at last the far-off farther gone,
And find but pain.

Yet life is strong;
The human will, crushed down by grief and wrong,
Springs up anew,
With hope to find by earnest spirit strife,
In the dim pathway of a better life,
The grand and true.

I sought to see
In all the dark and strange life-mystery
A meaning clear;
I seek no more, but with a simple faith,
Believe and wait; the springs of life and death
Shall yet appear.

O, holy One,
In whom all prayer-fought victories are won,
Be Thou my guide.
With Thee, no gloom of future days I fear,
Thy love is sure; O, keep me ever near Thy blessed side.

Thou knowest all;
Thy pitying tears for other's woes did fall
On earth-born sod;
Forgive, O Lord, nor let me ever stray
From thee again, but lead me in the way
Thy feet have trod.

On Thee I lean;
From stain of sin my guilty soul make clean,
All perfecting;
And if my feet must pass grief's dark abysm,
Go Thou with me into the deep baptism
Of suffering.

O life unknown,
In the far shadows of the great throne
Thy secrets lie.
Dear Father, through the night Thy presence prove,
Hold Thou my hand, that evermore Thy love
May satisfy.

Through earth's dark lore
I wandered long in footsteps passed before,
Of human pride.
I thank Thee, Lord, for light at last to see
The blessed truth that life when lived for Thee,
Is glorified.

—Selected by MRS. PAULINA D. CAMPBELL, NEW BRITAIN, Conn.

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL.

A SERMON BY ELD. R. V. LYON.

"BUT one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."—Luke x. 42.

Many people have honestly supposed that Martha was not a disciple of Jesus, but that Mary was a very godly woman. All this difference of opinion is owing to the want of a correct understanding of the organization of the two women. Martha was probably in possession of a nervous-sanguine temperament. Things, with her, must be in their place, and all moving forward harmoniously. Her work must all be done up in order; things in readiness for the next meal, and her person tastefully clad. Then a social or a religious chat, by her, would be enjoyed. But Mary was of the opposite character; being in possession of a sympathetic temperament, she could sit down and enjoy a friendly visit, though her house had not been swept—her beds not made up—nor her person tastefully clad, and nothing in the house for the next meal. With her all would be well, and nothing but stern necessity would move her to action. Now each of these women were in danger: one, of being overcharged with the cares of this life: the other, of being indolent in her domestic affairs, and that which tends to tidiness.

But at the time Jesus uttered my text, he was journeying, and "he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house. And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word. But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me. And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

What is this one thing which Mary had chosen, which is more needful than everything else combined? With one, it is a splendid form; with another, a fine house; with another a fine horse and carriage; with another, an office in TOWN or STATE; with another, a classical education; with another, a gratification of the lusts of the flesh; with another, that she may outshine her associates in her dress; with another, a companion. Now, some of these things may be needful, but they are not the "one thing needful" spoken of in my text.

Well, some of you say, the preacher is right, for I believe it is blessed religion. And this blessed religion consists, with some, in attending to periodical revivals—going to class or conference meetings, or meeting on the first day of the week to eat the supper, and exclaiming, "I thank God for blessed religion; I thank God I have the truth, and can show that all are wrong but Christadelphians;" I thank God that I was converted to the one faith: a Thomasite, a Baptist, a Presbyterian, a Churchman, a Methodist, a Papist; (but few thank God that they are disciples of Jesus) and I am resolved to die in the body to which I belong. Thus they will live the rest of the time, just as though there was no God, no future life to secure, or a death from which there is no revival into life, to shun.

Now, we are not against people going to meeting, or talking in meeting, or attending to any religious duty. But to say that it is the "one thing needful" named in the text, is not true. What is this one thing which Mary had chosen? I answer, Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER.

Go back with me to the garden which God planted in Eden, and take a view of our first parents, who alone of all the human family ever had the privilege of walking amid its beautiful groves, in unison with their Maker. And to make their happiness more complete, listen to those sweet notes which fall from Eden's feathered songsters, borne along on zephyr's stainless wing, and saluted the ears of that happy pair. And with full liberty to regale themselves amid the soft and balmy breezes of Paradise, and of all its trees to gather fruit most freely, "except of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." Eat of that and you will become a dying man—consequently decayable, corruptible, and doomed to go back to dust: that will be your end. But upon your doing as I have bid you, you shall eat of the tree of life and live forever; and thereby prove yourselves worthy of having this exalted honor conferred upon you in carrying out my purpose in the creation and formation of the earth, that it should be inhabited with a race of immortal, sinless beings.

But Adam and his race have sinned, and the sentence of death is passed upon them. Gen. iii. 17–19; Rom. v. 12: "And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake: in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life: thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground: for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

Here we have the most indubitable testimony that men die because they have sinned; are doomed to go back to dust, the earth from whence they came. And if the Father had not been heard to say, "I have found a ransom" in Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER, death would have been an eternal sleep, and sinful man could never hoped for a pardon of his sins, a resurrection, future life, and a home where it could be enjoyed; and the time to come, when misery should cease to roll its deep, dark and turbid waves over the world.

But Jesus, the seed of the woman, the seed of Abraham, according to promise, was born of the virgin Mary—made a little lower than the messengers (Adam and Eve), inasmuch as he was made of sin's flesh, possessing one common nature with his brethren, for the suffering death. And on trial he was placed for the higher, or age-lasting life, which Adam would have obtained by eating of the tree of life, if he had obeyed God. But Jesus stood the trial, and died on the account of the sins of his people. But he was not to be holden of death, as the first Adam is, because he walked in the path of life, which was the path of faith and obedience. Therefore he was quickened into age-lasting life by the eternal Spirit, leaving the Adamic, or animal life in the hands of the law, where all such life will go, and be held eternally in a state of death. But as he comes forth, he leads the way for a multitude of captives—his sheep—the purchase of his blood, to come forth. Having wrested the keys of death and of hades out of the hands of the usurper, he ascends up on high, and takes his seat at the right hand of God, where he now sits as the Intercessor, the Mediator, the Advocate of his people, the purchase of his blood; and is now a representative, a surety and pledge of their resurrection.

Paul informs us that "as the children have one common nature of blood and flesh, he also, in like manner, partook of these, in order that, by means of his death, he might vanquish him, possessing the power of death, that is the enemy, and might liberate those who by fear of death, were throughout their whole life held in slavery."—Diaglott.

In this portion of Holy Writ the apostle most emphatically testifies, that Jesus will ultimately deliver the saints out of their graves, who had lived and died in the faith. And it is a fact, that the ancient saints believed in the resurrection of the children of God, but how it was to be accomplished they did not seem to understand. But upon the Father's raising up Jesus, incorruptible, the vail, which had hung over the grave for ages, was rent. And now, the believer can look through the grave into the age or world to come, by looking to Jesus, who is the head of the body—the church. And according to organic law, when once the head is safely born, the body will be. And Revealed Law teaches us that Jesus the head of the body, the church, has been safely born from the dead. Therefore, the body, the church, will be, at his coming. For, "Christ is risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." That is, those that sleep in him. "For since by man [the first Adam] came death, by man [the second Adam] came also the resurrection of the dead." "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." That is, in consequence of your connection with the first Adam in transgression, death. But upon your becoming united to Jesus, the second Adam, life. "But every man in his own order" or band: "Christ the first-fruits;" that is, the first in the order; first the head, then the body. "Afterwards," or the next in order, "they that are his, at his coming." "Then cometh the end." Leaving everybody out of the resurrection save those that belong to him—the purchase of his blood—"this body"—the church.

Paul informs us in Col. i. 14–20, that it is through the blood, the life of Jesus, that the church have redemption. And this redemption embraces everything which pertains to a future state. Hence he says that Christ is the beginning of the future creation or world; that he is the first-born from the dead, of every creature that will ever have a future state of existence. And that nothing will exist, only through him. For he will be the Creator of the age or world to come. Therefore, he will be before all things, the head of the body, the church, who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; and, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven."

And Peter affirms, Acts iv. 12, "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

And Paul testifies that it is an eternal salvation. Heb. v. 8, 9, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

And the testimony of Jesus is in harmony with this great cardinal truth. Please listen to it. John xi. 25, 26, "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die. Believest thou this?"

From this declaration of Christ we learn, 1. That only those who believe in him will be raised to life. 2. That those who are alive and believe in him, at his coming, will not die. But according to Paul's exposition of this text, they will be changed to immortality, whilst the dead will be raised incorruptible.

Again, John vi. 53, 54, "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

John iii. 14–17, 36, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

And Jesus said to the Jews, "I am come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly." Inasmuch as the life, that I have been delegated with power to give, is eternal. But "ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." That is, am the way out of "the empire of death" into the world to come. Hence the necessity of getting into Christ, or forming a union with him, in order to get out of the grave or live again, or come into possession of future life. And this LIFE is the gift of God, or His free gift: and it comes by or through the anointed Jesus.

Thus we learn from the Bible, that everything which pertains to a future state centres in Jesus the LIFE-GIVER. Consequently those who die out of Christ have no hope of living again. Therefore he must be the "One thing needful." And hence the necessity of your making choice of him, by forming a union with him immediately. For only as the union is formed can we secure life in Jesus, which will survive us in death, by which we will be quickened into life when he comes. And all those who refuse or neglect to do it, have no more prospect of life of any description in the future, than the farmer has of a crop of wheat in harvest, who has sowed wheat which was destitute of the germ of life.

2. The power of choice is in man.

"Mary hath chosen that good part." Respected friends, what was Mary's privilege is yours, so far as making choice of Christ. And it appears that Moses gave the people to understand that they had the power of choice. For says he, "I call heaven and earth to witness, that I have this day set before you life and death. Therefore choose life that you may live." "Why halt ye so long between two opinions? If the Lord be God serve him; if Baal, serve him."

Joshua xxiv. 14, 15, "And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD."

Again, Jesus said, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." "How oft would I have gathered you, but ye would not?"

3. The necessity of choosing Christ.

If you would have all your sins forgiven, and opened up before you, and going before to judgment, and come into possession of "peace that is like a river, and righteousness that is like the waves of the sea," joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, the testimony that your record is on high, that your name is engraven upon the palm of the Redeemer's hand, Christ by you must be chosen.

4. If you "would be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection out from among the dead ones," have God for your Father, and with Christ and all the patriarchs, prophets, apostles and martyrs dwell, and bask forever beneath the sunshine of an endless day; possess earth in its restored state, and take a part in the arrangement of the kingdom, and share in its glory; go to make up the bride, the Lamb's wife, the Queen of the coming age; the victor's palm bear, the white robe wear, the conqueror's song sing; and amid Eden's beautiful groves walk; stand upon the sunny banks of life's beautiful river; gather fruit from life's fair tree; have your ears saluted with the sweet notes of Eden's songsters; listen to the song of Moses and the Lamb, as it will be sung by the one hundred and forty-four thousand; stand upon the lofty hights of Zion, and unite with the saved of all ages in singing the grand anthem of salvation, Christ by you must be chosen.

5. How is he to be chosen?

I answer, by believing the record that God has given of his Son, as being "the way" out of "the empire of death," into the world to come; "the truth and the life." And this life, which he possesses, and has power to give, is spirit life, the opposite of that life we now possess, which has been forfeited by sin.

6. The medium appointed by God, through which forgiveness, resurrection, future life, and a title to earth in its restored state, where this life is to be enjoyed eternally.

Repentance for all our sins, which is a change of one's course of conduct from wrong to right; a ceasing to do evil, and a learning to do well; a breaking off from sin and turning to the Lord, with a full purpose of heart. Then the promise will be fulfilled, "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." To maintain this union, which has been formed with Jesus the LIFE-GIVER, there must be a continuance "in the apostle's teaching and fellowship, and in breaking the loaf," which is the Lord's supper, "and in prayers." For Jesus has said, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

7. The necessity of making the choice now.

First, you are mortal. Job iv. 17, "Shall mortal man be just with God?" Consequently corruptible, and liable any hour to fall under the power of disease, and to be conquered by death at any moment. Have any of you a lease from the Almighty of another month? Dare any of you take the position that you will live another week, day, or hour? Death may be feeling for thy heart-strings this very moment. Do not those sparkling eyes begin to grow dim, and those rosy cheeks pale and emaciated? And this very "night thy life may be required of thee!" and you are yet in your sins, hence in danger of that death from which none will ever be revived into life. Solemn thought. Who can endure it? How dare you any longer neglect this important work?

Second, the Judge standeth at the door. Not that I claim to know the day, or the hour of his coming; neither do I believe that it is revealed in the Word of God. Yet his coming as a thief is nigh, and hasteth greatly. Many in this congregation I believe will survive the pale nations till he comes. A little in the distance, and you will see the heavens depart and roll together as a scroll; the Son of God vacating his Father's throne, clothed in robes of royalty, stepping into the car of glory, whose wheels shall roll in fire down the burning pathway of the heavens, surrounded by myriads of angels; the heavens are lit up with his glory; the trump of God is sounding; the graves of the saints are opened. Listen to their loud Alleluias as they are borne along upon the breeze, and fall upon the ears of the lost, who are to fall beneath the "wrath of the Lamb." No way for them to escape. Proffered mercy they have slighted! Solemn warnings they have rejected, and the dread hour has come! O, what bitter wailings are now heard among the rejectors of the truth. Once they made light of prayer, but now they pray. Listen to the mournful prayer which they now offer. "Rocks and mountains, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." But rocks and mountains flee away, and naked before the blazing throne of the Judge of the living and the dead; they will be compelled to stand and receive their final doom, which will be an "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power."

Sinners, stop and think before you further go. Remember that mercy lingers to-night, and all heaven is waiting to be gracious. O, will you not act the part of wisdom, embrace the truth and obey it, that you may with the holy of all ages meet, and with Christ and his Father dwell, and bask forever amid the sunbeams of an endless day? Glory be to God that He has provided a ransom. Shall it be yours?

In conclusion. You will allow me to state that he who has Jesus for his portion, is in possession of a friend that will never leave nor forsake him.

Health you may now have, but to-morrow it may be gone, and gone forever. Friends you may have, but to-morrow they may have become your deadly foes. You may have wealth, and that may have been consumed by fire, or taken from you by fraud, or your children may squander it, or it may be destroyed by a flood or an earthquake, or taken by the midnight assassin. But he who has made choice of Christ has a treasure, which is abiding as the throne on which the eternal God sits. For Jesus has said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."

And Paul testifies, "For I am persuaded, that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Respected friends, will you make choice of Christ to-night, that you may live forever, and range the fields of Eden?

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

A KIND BOY.

BEAR YE ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS.

ON my return from the camp-meeting at Plainville, in September, a little incident occurred which I would like to relate for the benefit of the children who take "The Young Pilgrim," for it is something so unusual in these last days, that I want them to know it; and it was this:

When I left the depot in Hartford, with basket in hand, to take the horse cars, a young lad accosted me with these words:

"Madam, are you going to Main street? and shall I take your basket for you?"

With much surprise, I looked to see who it was that could be so kind to a stranger. Thinking that perhaps he wanted a few pennies, I handed my basket to him, and we walked along together, but rather faster than my accustomed walk. Perceiving it, he said:

"I don't know but I am walking rather fast for you?"

So we slackened our pace a little; and, after walking a while, I said to him:

"I am afraid the basket is heavy for you. I will exchange, and you may take this lighter one."

"O, no!" he said, "let me take the other one too;" adding, "I was thinking, if my mother was placed in like circumstances, I would like to have some one do the same for her."

I told him that was an excellent trait in the character of a boy, and I asked him if he loved the Lord.

"O yes," he replied, "for I don't know what I should do without him."

How my heart beat in unison with the thought he so freely expressed! It made me glad to think that he had given his heart to God, and that it was this that prompted him to obey the Saviour's injunction, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them."

My young friends, would you, under like circumstances, do as this boy did?—The Young Pilgrim.

SOLD INTO SLAVERY.

"CARL MARSH is sold into slavery," said a man to me one day.

"Sold into slavery!" I cried. "Is there any thing like that now-a-days?"

"Indeed there is," was his answer.

"Who bought him, pray?"

"O, it is a firm; and I make bold to say they own a good many slaves, and they make shocking bad masters."

"Can it be so in these days? Who are they?" I asked.

"Well, they have agents and runners everywhere, who tell a pretty good story, and so get hold of folks, but the names of the firm—I dare say you have heard of them—are Rum and Tobacco."

I had heard of them. It is a firm of bad reputation, and yet how extensive are their dealings! What town or village but has felt their influence? Once in their clutches, it is about the hardest thing in the world to break away from them. You are sold, and that is the end of it—sold to ruin, sooner or later. I have seen people try to escape from them. Some, it is true, do make a good escape; but the greater part are caught and go back to their chains.

To the young, I would say, Have nothing to do with them at all. Fight them; give them no quarter; and do all you can to destroy their influence. It is in your power to take a firm stand against them, and be sure that you take it. Boys, now for it!—Selected.

BEWARE.

"Beware of evil thoughts. They have done great mischief in the world. They prepare the way for evil words and deeds, and utter ruin.

"Beware of evil associates, for they have ruined thousands. You may depend upon it that he is a good man whose friends are all good, and whose enemies are all characters decidedly bad."

A BIBLE VIEW OF HELL:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus; Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

WM. H. SPENCER, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	3 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2 "
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "
21.	LIFE AND DEATH REAL,	2 "
22.	MAN'S DESTINY; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	THE LIFE VIEWS,	2 "
24.	HOW READEST THOU?	2 "
25.	WHAT A FARMER HAS TO SAY: OR, AN INSTRUCTIVE LETTER. Also, THE WRATH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?	2 "
26.	SOUL SURVIVANCE IN DEATH: NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE BIBLE,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 22.
WHOLE NUMBER 356.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE DIVINE ADJUSTMENT OF THE AGES.

"BY FAITH we understand the ages to have been adjusted by declaration of God; to the end that NOT OUT OF APPEARANCES should that which is seen have come into existence."—Heb. xi. 3.

Special interest attaches itself to the translation and exposition of this remarkable verse. If, even here, "ages" will stand, as a fair rendering of aiones, a manifest gain to translation is won, inasmuch as, in that case, there will remain nothing to hinder a uniform rendering of the entire class of occurrences to which this instance seems of right to belong. This very verse is the strong hold of the divergent rendering "worlds." "Age" may be all very well for other instances of aion, but not for this. Here, at all events, the effort after uniformity of translation must break down: so, at least, eminent scholars affirm. Be it so: this, however, will not be denied, namely,—that if "age" can stand here, there needs be no hesitancy to employ it in chap. i. 2. It is, no doubt, natural enough that those who conclude they must set down "worlds," in chap. xi. 3, should in the companion passage also adopt the same rendering. It is true that there are in that earlier occurrence no such accompanying indications as there are supposed to be here, as to the translation required: "through whom also he made the aiones,"—that is all: nothing is said about the aiones: they may be "worlds," they may be "ages." But, still, if you decide for "worlds" in the later place, we can have nothing to say against your choosing "worlds" forthe earlier. The presumption is against the supposition that the same writer, in the same letter, writing on through both places in a similar strain, should have used one word in two senses. We must, by all means, have either "ages" in both places, or "worlds" in both, and this xi. 3, is the crucial instance. Here the aiones are found in a peculiarly rich association of terms and ideas: they have been "adjusted," adjusted "by declaration of God"—they are not mere "growths," mere "developments,"—they are not unfolded out of foregoing "phenomena" or "appearances,"—and it is emphatically "by faith" that we "understand" this. Now here, surely, should be data significant enough, either to condemn ages as an improper rendering, or to go some way towards approving such a translation. The question of translation then, is one of no small interest.

Of still larger and deeper moment is the question of exposition. It were something to rejoice in, if, by the adoption of the word "ages" in these two occurrences, the line of exegesis could be drawn straight through the whole class—something to hear the translator say to the expositor: The "ages" as a theme of biblical study are before you: "the present age," and "the coming age," "the conclusion of the age;" the conclusion or conjunction of the ages," "this age of evil," "the god of this age," "the adjusting of the ages," etc., are all before you: digest well the texual facts now put into your hand, and let us know the result of your ripe reflections: you may lay us under unspeakable obligations and win our lasting gratitude by opening up to us one of the most sublime and exhilarating themes of God's blessed book. But what, if the successful defence of the rendering "ages," in Heb. xi. 3, should not only lock an entire class of passages in one embrace, but should give some not obscure intimations that this last-won passage is well-nigh the most significant of all; and that what it has to say respecting the "ages" in a manner sums up and irradiates all that we have elsewhere learned concerning them? In that case, we may well esteem ourselves happy if we might venture to hope we had contributed the smallest impulse to the inquiry.

But to our present task; which is to ascertain whether, if we render aiones "ages" in this passage, we have good grounds for concluding that the verse can receive a legitimate exposition. We do not propose to expound the verse; all we may presume to attempt is to give some reasons for thinking that translating the aiones as "ages" the verse admits of a fair and forcible interpretation. We ask, then, First: Can we conceive of the "ages" as being "adjusted?" Second: Does it seem appropriate to attribute this adjustment to "divine behest," rather than to development out of previously existing "appearances?" and, Third: Is it obviously becoming to emphasise the fact that it is "by faith" we "understand" such divine creative adjustment of the ages to be part and parcel of the ways of God?

First, then, Can we conceive of such a thing as an adjustment of the ages? Does it strike us as appropriate to speak of their being fitly joined together? In reply, we submit that nothing could be more felicitous than the appropriation of such an idea to the ages. From the Hebrew jubilees, and upwards, to longer and yet longer ages, which extend into widely spanning dispensations; from the Adamite creation, and backwards through the remotest geological eras and epochs; from the present long-continued age of evil, and forwards into the everlasting age of good, itself inclusive of ages and ages: everywhere, the notion of "adjustment" is most pertinent to their several constitutions and developments,—most laden with homage to Him, who is King of the ages, and who, over all ages—in all—through all—maintains His throne and enhances His glory. To all the ages—to every side of them—adjustment applies: wherever the transitional points of the ages are visible to us, their architectural piecing together commands attention and admiration. What does the Mosaic legislation concerning the Israelitish jubilees amount to, but a most careful and minute "adjustment" of those little fifty year ages, the transitions of which were by them marked? How the one period of forty-nine years should end,—how the next period of forty-nine should begin,—how the intervening, coalescing fiftieth should be spent,—what immunities to men and lands it should bring;—all these things went into the fit joining together these typical sub-ages of the Jews. So, again, is "adjustment" conspicuous in the transition from the Jewish to the Christian age. As certainly as the ball of an arm-joint has a fitly prepared socket to receive it, so certainly were the Hebrew and Christian dispensations, by manifold adaptations, fitly joined to each other. John the Baptist, a Jew, yet something more than a mere Jew,—the anointed Jesus, father of a new age, and yet for a while himself a minister of the circumcision, reverently worshipping in synagogues and temple—the kernel of the old era fast decaying, yet the shell remaining awhile unbroken;—these and numberless other features of interpretation and interlacing enable us to realise, with some vividness, how appropriately that great transition of the age of which we know by far the most may be described as a katartizesthai, an exact and firm fitting together, a most admirable adjustment.

Nor is it to be supposed that such adjustment is applicable to the mere endings of two ages—the mere joining together of the end of one age and the beginning of the next. There are wheels within wheels, ages within ages; and ages alongside of ages, as there are many streams flowing into one river, many preparatory ages bearing along their diversified contents, and uniting them in the fuller flow of later and riper dispensations. "Now these things were typically happening to them; and were written with a view to our admonition, unto whom the ends of the ages reached along." (1 Cor. x. 11.) This phase also of the complexity of the ages, favors the idea of their being susceptible of adjustment.

But no matter how you characterise and classify the ages, they are always and everywhere adjusted ages. And when we remember that the ages come and go by no mere human forethought and control; when we call to mind that the texture of the ages is woven out of influences, tendencies, and actions,—human, satanic, and divine,—we may, after all, conclude that it is no trival inquiry on which we crave an additional gleam of light from heaven, when we propound for biblical research the subject of "the adjustment of the ages."

Our second question is,—Does it seem appropriate to attribute this adjustment to divine behest rather than to development out of previously existing appearances? There can be but one answer, if, at least, the transition from the Hebrew to the Christian era may be taken as a fair illustration. The Christian age is not a mere development of the foregoing Hebrew age; it is a divine creation; it sprang into being by declaration of God, it did not grow out of previously existing phenomena. No Jewish high council commissioned John the Baptist; no human father begat our Lord; no mere concourse of home and foreign Israelites could have glorified with undying fame the day of Pentecost. Hebrew jubilees might have run on for ever without bringing liberty to Satan's captives, or healing hearts broken by sin. Aaron himself, brought back from the dead, had not ventured into the tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man; or, entering, had not discovered (euzamenos, Heb. ix. 12) an everlasting redemption. Nothing can be more certain than this. Here we are safe from all theological Darwins. Here we find a safe basis for offensive operations: That adjustment of the ages of which we know by far the most was effected by declaration of God, so as not to have presented us with a new age as the product of existing phenomena.

What has been may be again; what has been will be again. The present age was introduced by new, creative forces; so will the coming age be. This age was divinely originated by the First Coming of the Saviour; so will the next be by the Second Coming of this same Jesus. That age will no more be developed out of existing phenomena than this was. The Church was heaven-born; heaven-born will be the visible kingdom. As is the mystery, so will be the manifestation; both from heaven; both essentially new, creative, divine. There are, as yet, no appearances of the peaceful age—the age of predicted light, harmony, blessedness. Men now and then fancy they can detect such appearances: nay! they revel amid abounding phenomena of the on-coming era of universal brotherhood—and they are deceived! as when the thirsty man wakes to find how deceitful had been the glowing mirage of his dream. We look to discover the rapidly advancing realization, and, lo! over the vast battle-fields of "Christian nations," "Civilization," with bitter tears, has already inscribed her "lament." Appearances! They are vain. From no such source can abiding and constant hope be sustained. The age of peace will come in spite of appearances. Heaven has yet to revolutionize the earth. The men that delight in war will be scattered by the Avenger, when he comes. Thank God: "Yet a little while—how short!—how short!—the Coming One will be here, and will not delay." Such is the contour of our faith. We understand the whole word of God in this sense; it seems to us to be the obvious and true sense. The great era will be introduced by a great epoch. Between "now" and "then" lies a crisis—destructive, creative. This appears to us to be the pervading thought of the foreseeing Scriptures—the thought underlying, interlacing, combining, ruling all its instruction on "things to come." The riding forth of David's divine warrior (Ps. xlv.) is no mere development of existing things. The fall of Daniel's little stone (Dan. ii.) is no mere growth out of appearances. Jehovah's feet are not ordinarily standing on the Mount of Olives. (Zech. xiv.) The great and notable day of Jehovah (Joel. ii.) is not yet to be found on any national calendar. We say—this seems to be the ruling sense of the Holy Book. The return of the Crowned Nobleman from the Far Country constitutes a crisis, effects a revolution, begins a new era. Whensoever the First-begotten may again be introduced into the inhabited earth, and all God's messengers shall worship him (Heb. i.) then will a new time begin! There are, at present, no signs of the kingdom's becoming that of our Lord and his Christ. Even so! the ages are adjusted by declaration of God, and do not spring from appearances.

And thus, right well equipped, we confront our third and only remaining inquiry: Is it obviously becoming to emphasise the fact, that it is "BY FAITH" we "understand" such divine creative adjustment of the ages, to be part and parcel of the ways of God? Our reply to this is not premature, when we say,—Yes! it is indeed by faith that we understand this: without faith we should doubt and deny; and down-right unbelief would probably issue in keen antipathy to such a position. Why! take the crisis of the four gospels: it is all very well for us believers to say,—"Here we see an example of an adjustment of contiguous ages, by declaration of God;" it is true we do see it, but it is BY FAITH that we see it; for the simple fact is, that the men of unbelief do not see it. Why do men like Strauss and Renan write their "Lives of Jesus," but just to show how satisfactorily they can develop Christ and Christianity out of pre-existing phenomena? Why do men become so feverish in their geological discussions, but simply because they are brought face to face with the question of the divine creative adjustment of the ages? Whether we travel backward or forward, it is "by faith" that our doctrine of the ages is learnt. It is "by faith" we travel back to the primeval fiat of God when "He spake and it was done, commanded, and it stood fast:" equally "by faith" we travel on to the birth of that age of ages which shall be brought in by declaration of Him who says, "Behold! I make all things new!" We say, "by faith:"—not, of course, unfounded faith, but still faith. The more largely we study the sweep of the ages; the more thoughtfully we ponder their complexity—weaving up into their texture, as they do, the subtlest webs of converging, concurring, conflicting influences; the more manfully we avow the true hope of the age in which we live: namely, the return of the Lord Jesus from heaven:—the more shall we realize it as a resting place in which Faith alone can securely dwell, to affirm and hold that the ages have been adjusted by the declaration of God, to the end that not out of appearances should that which is seen have been brought into existence. In this atmosphere, faith is braced up for lofty flight, she mounts on eagle's wings, and bathes herself in the sun, and the joyful tidings with which she returns is, that the Infinite God, our Loving Father, is absolute Monarch of the ages.

JOSEPH B. ROTHERHAM.

—The Rainbow.

CHRISTIANITY.—The influence of Christianity on society is not exerted through the cannon of the warrior, and the dispatches of the statesman, but in the sweet breathings of truth that come on the opening petals of the breast of infancy, like spice-laden zephyrs from the land of the blest—in the gentle words of love that fall in dewy freshness on the wondering ear of childhood, from grey-haired sires and sweet-voiced matrons—in the nameless tellings of high and holy things, wrapped in the deep, unutterable voices of the ancient eternities that come to the silent ear of youth, before the din and strife of the babbling world have stunned these inner senses of the heart—in the longing and wistful thoughts of things of deep, abyssmal mystery that steal into the mind in its lonely musings in the solitary chamber—in the deep hush of the moaning forest—in the awful silence of the hollow midnight—in the seasons of gloomy doubt and frantic effort to scale the prison wall of mystery and darkness that rises and closes in encircling silence around all—in times of heart-sickness and disappointment, when reaching forth the hand of warm, confiding trust, it grasps the cold and slippery skin of the adder—it is then that Christianity, with its wonderful tellings of infinite things comes with apocalyptic splendor and power, and revealing itself to the heart, creates those martyr spirits that stamp their lineaments on the enduring rock.—Selected.

CAN MATTER THINK?

OR, CAN GOD ORGANIZE MATTER AND MAKE IT THINK?

THE Rev. E. O. Haven, D. D., LL.D., President of the Northwestern University (Methodist) at Evanston, Ill., in a recent lecture, expressly denies that God can make matter think. Just hear him:

"Manipulation cannot create. Organization of matter cannot educe emotion and thought, unless emotion and thought previously exist in the matter. A piece of gold cannot be hammered so thin as to begin to shout, or cry out in agony. Thread cannot be spun so fine as to think."

Now, it is very clear that the Doctor knows that "Manipulation," any thing done by human hands, could not give to matter "emotion and thought." His idea is, that God cannot do it. That is his idea. And it is worthy of the philosopher and "idealist" that he is, if not of the man. I hold that the sentiment that God cannot organize matter and give to it "emotion and thought" is a denial of God's power, and is rank infidelity. Perhaps it will be a comfort to the Doctor to know that he has learned allies to travel with him in the old ruts of infidelity and unbelief in the power of God. Voltaire,—the French infidel, with more wit and humor than Doctor Haven seems to be master of,—said, many years ago, that there were two things that God could not do: "He could not make a stick without having two ends." And also that, "God could not make two hills without having a valley between them."

Voltaire only wrote to create a laugh and bring the revelation of God into contempt. The learned Doctor may well feel proud of his effort to sustain his skeptical master in carrying out his impious theory. What difference is there between Voltaire and Doctor Haven? Voltaire says, "God cannot make a stick without two ends." Doctor Haven says, "God could not hammer, a piece of gold so thin as to begin to shout, or cry out in agony." The witty Voltaire says, "God could not make two hills without a valley between them." And the witty Doctor H. says, God could not spin a "thread so fine as to think." What difference is there between the two skeptics? John the Baptist said, "I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." But the learned Doctor don't believe a word of it; not he. This sort of infidelity is wide spread, at present, and very popular. I heard a preacher say, in the pulpit, not a thousand years ago, "You can't make matter think; it's the immaterial part of man that doas all the thinking." Now, the learned divine, knew very well that the people before him in the pews could not out of dead matter make a walking, talking, thinking machine. What the preacher meant, was, that, God could not make matter think; that's the idea. Rev. Luther Lee, D.D., is of the same opinion: he asks the question,—"Is thought the result of some modification (of) matter." His whole reasoning on this question amounts to this, that "matter cannot think, because it is matter!" And hence, the undisguised meaning, underlying his whole arguments is, that God cannot organize matter and make it think. This is the Alpha and Omega of all that modern divines have to say touching the power of the Almighty; who, in their learned opinion is not Almighty at all. The Rev. John Cumming, D.D., F.R.S.E., of London, in a labored argument on this point says:

"The brain is not the soul; how absurd in any one to maintain that man's soul is what is called the pineal gland: that is, a part of the brain, which has been analyzed by chemists, and shown to be made up of phosphate of lime! Now phosphate of lime could not write Shakespeare's dreams; phosphate of lime could not write Milton's Paradise Lost. And the same phosphate of lime is found in animals, and yet they do not write, or think, nor indicate the intellectual powers that man has."

The whole drift of this argument amounts to this, that because "phosphate of lime" in its natural state does not write, or think, therefore, God could not make anything out of "phosphate of lime" but what it is—senseless matter! So it is evident that modern divines, to sustain the Pagan theory of the immortality of an imaginary "entity" called a "soul," rob God of the attribute of Omnipotence and make him as "feeble-minded, blind," and imbecile as themselves.

Orsin Pratt, a Mormon writer, whether he is a Rev., Very Rev., Right Rev., or a D. D., I do not know; but if I have not given him his proper title he may select any one of the above he pleases. Mr. Pratt is very plain in what he has to say respecting the power of God. He does not, like some of his brother divines, use elliptical words to deceive, but is very plain. Here is what Doctor Pratt has to say:

"If matter exist without capacities of intelligence, it must have existed eternally unintelligent, and must forever remain in that state. We do not consider it possible for the Almighty (though we speak with all due deference to his superior and transcendent powers)to create an intelligent power, or to impart it to materials where it does not already exist. On the other hand, matter once possessed of an intelligent capacity must have always possessed this property, and must forever continue to retain it. As there is no being, as we conceive, able to originate this power, so there is no power, as we also conceive, able to annihilate it."

Here is open, undisguised infidelity. All that remains to be done now is, for these doctors to have a friendly meeting, and decide by a democratic vote that, if there be a God at all that he is an imbecile, and that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul must be saved at the expense of "annihilating" the power of God! It is denied that beasts think; but I venture the statement, that Baalam's Ass understood his subject better, and exercised more common sense, on one occasion, than any of the divines mentioned in this paper have done on the subject of inherent immortality.

O God, deliver us and all we love from "wolves in sheep's clothing."' J. W. S.

UPLAND, PA., Feb., 1871.

(Continued from last week.)

THE ATONEMENT.—A REVIEW.

BY J. C. DAY.

FULNESS is altogether a positive term, and imports not barely enough to save us from the deepest poverty and ruin, but an abundance to make us rich. I never hear of the fulness of Christ without having the idea awakened of unlimited stores of positive good laid up in him, from which the whole church are supplied, and then I can see a glorious import in the term, a meaning too rich and vast to be relinquished till demonstration tears it from me. This fulness of grace consists, as I conceive, of three parts. First, a plentitude of pardon. Sufficient for sins however great or numerous. Secondly, a plentitude of the Spirit, given to Christ without measure, from which fulness we receive grace for grace, and are strengthened with might according to the riches of his glory: and thirdly, a plenitude of inheritance. The fulness is particularly marked as being that of the only begotten of the Father, who gives, to all that receive him, power to become the sons of God, (John i. 12, 14; or in other words, joint heirs with him to the riches of the glory of his inheritance. Eph. i. 18. All these ideas are plainly comprehended in the fulness mentioned in Colossians. To that passage let us now direct our attention.

"In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins; who is the image of the invisible God," (by whom he is revealed) "the first-born of every creature," (the Heir of all things) the Head of the body, the church, (the fountain of influence:) the Head, as it is said in the same passage, from which all the body, by joints and bands having nourishment, ministered and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God. The first-born from the dead. That in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell: whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus, that their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; (the fulness of truth competent to furnish a complete revelation); and this I say lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ; for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily: (knowledge is a part of the fulness of God. Eph. iii. 19); and ye are complete in him. So far as instruction is concerned, ye have need of nothing more than the fulness of the gospel of Christ. But this is not all; for as wisdom, love and power, the sum of the Divine perfections, go in to constitute the fulness of the God-head bodily, ye are complete in Christ, not only in point of instruction, but in regard to his influence as King, heir, sanctifier and deliverer from the bondage both of Jewish ordinances and from satan himself. Ye are complete in him, which is the Head of all principality and power, in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands. You hath he quickened, having forgiven you all trespasses, blotting out the handwriting of ordinances, that was against us, and having spoiled principalities and powers he made a show of them openly.—Col. i. and ii.; Eph. ii. 7, and iii. 8.

These are the unsearchable riches of Christ, and the exceeding riches of grace through him: and they all go in to constitute that fulness of grace and truth which are found in him. Having suggested these considerations, I now proceed to argument of a more decisive cast. 1. That which is our righteousness in the sight of God is no other than the righteousness of Christ; (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16;) and is said to be in Christ, (Isa. xxv. 24,) to be of Christ (Isa, liv. 17; lxi. 10,) to be by the faith of Christ (Rom. iii. 22,) and is called the righteousness of God because appointed by him. (Rom. i. 17; iii. 22; and x. 3; 2 Cor. v. 21; Phil. iii. 9.) The term is obviously taken from the first covenant, as appears by the frequent comparison between a legal righteousness and this. Moses describeth the righteousness which is by the law, that the man which doeth these things shall live by them; but the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise: If righteousness came by the law then Christ is dead in vain. If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. That I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having my own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ. (Rom. x. 5, 6; Gal. ii. 21; iii. 21; Phil. iii. 8, 9.)

Now what ought to be the influence of a righteousness which thus plainly comes in the room of a legal one, and takes its name? Under the first covenant, a righteousness both protected the subject from punishment and entitled him to positive good. If, then "the Lord our righteousness" does only the former, and not the latter, he is but half what a righteousness was under the first covenant, leaving the rest to be supplied by our own works, and the very term in the gospel is sunk down to one half of its original meaning. But who told us that the word is thus changed? If you use a term to-day which I know had a different meaning yesterday, I am bound to understand it in the same sense, unless you plainly tell me that its import is altered. And I ask where has God told us that righteousness under the gospel means but half what it did under the law? On the contrary, the very nature of the word precludes the possibility of such a change. Righteousness is a term altogether of a positive import. It implies more than a title to be exempted from an ignominious death: it imparts the claim of one who is right, who not only has not transgressed, but has done all that was required. A righteous man is something more than a man who is not a malefactor. To say of one that he does not deserve to be executed, would be rather a poor compliment to a righteous person. We do not talk of the righteousness of a culprit just released from the State-prison, because the law has no longer a penal demand against him. And the term has a meaning no less positive in the New Testament. "They being ignorant of God's righteousness, and are going about to establish their own righteousness, (certainly something more than avoiding crime and escaping punishment) have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Rom. x. 3. Self-righteousness always means, as it does in this place, a pretended claim, not so much to pardon as to a reward. We read of the blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works.—Rom. iv. 6. But why without works? What have works to do with pardon? This is only not to impute bad works. Christ is the end of the law for righteousness.—Rom. x. 4; but is the law nothing but a penalty? and is its whole end answered, so as to make out a righteousness without fulfilling the precept?

Thus we see that the term in the New Testament has not lost its original meaning. If, then, Christ is our righteousness, he must do more than save us from the death of a malefactor, he must be the ground of all the treatment which belongs to the righteous. If righteousness has the same influence, and answers the same end in the government of God, that the perfect righteousness of men would have done, or if the common expression is true, that believers are treated as righteous on his account; then he is certainly the ground of their title to life. To talk of their being treated as righteous on his account, and to deny that they receive eternal life for his sake, or through him is to say that a personal righteousness would not have entitled them to life under the first covenant.

[To be Continued.]

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS.

DIFFICULTIES.

BR. STORRS: While reading "A Contrast," by Br. Joel Simonds, between the two Adams, there was a thought came to my mind concerning the present and the future state, on this wise: As Adam the first, was the head of the mortal race, and he being mortal represents them, we see they are all in a dying condition, "all are of the dust, and all return to dust again;" which we all understand.

Now while this state of things is going on, the number of the race is kept good, by the natural law of generation, by being begotten and born of the flesh, in agreement with the command of the marriage covenant, viz., "Multiply and replenish the earth." But according to our Saviour's language this state of things ends, with the end of this age, where he says, "The children of this world (or age) marry and are given in marriage: but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (or age) and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more."

It seems, according to our Lord's reply to the Sadducees, in the future world, the marriage covenant is dissolved, and the law of generation ceases, and also death has lost its power to kill, for they cannot "die any more."

Now as Christ is the head of the immortal race, he represents them; but who will represent mortals in the world (or age) to come, should there be any there?

If Peter, James and John were "partakers of the glory that shall be revealed" (1 Pet. v. 1) and this took place at the transfiguration, when they fell to the earth on account of the cloud of glory that overshadowed them, how will mortals stand it when "the glory of God will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea?"

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. xxv. 31-34. Verse 41: "Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:" "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal."

Again: "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not, until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. xiv. 37-39.

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—Paul. Let the light shine.

J. S. POTTER.

EAST BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 15, 1871.

T. P. LEWIS, Hartwick, N. Y., writes: Through the kindness of Providence I still continue my pilgrimage journey in this busy, tumultuous world. Years of thought, hard experience, and reading, serve but to confirm me in the doctrine of No future life except through Jesus Christ alone. I am almost alone here in this faith, though I see an unmistakable tendency among the sects, all around me, to abandon the doctrine of endless sorrow and weeping. Indeed there are quite a number here who have given up the immortal soul dogma, yet they stick for the reliving of the wicked dead, so as to have them die the second time; which, to them, is the second death. I am impressed with the idea, that you have been restored from your sickness for some purpose, which might not have been accomplished by others. I feel I am somewhat isolated, and would be glad to meet with those in like faith, if it were convenient. Yours, in the faith.

APPOINTMENTS.

CONCORD, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

MANCHESTER, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

WEST MERIDEN, Sunday, April 30.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

WM. STUART.

MERIDEN, Conn., Sundays, March 12 and 26.

GEO. W. BROWN.

EATONTOWN, N. J., Sunday, March 12.

S. W. BISHOP.

I am to preach in Onondaga county, N. Y., at HIGH BRIDGE, near Fayetteville, March 2, and April 7. If there are any Life Believers near I shall be glad to see them there.

JAMES H. JACOBS.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 8, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

RESPONSE TO "DIFFICULTIES."

[See left hand column, please read that before reading our Response.]

WE respond to some of Br. Potter's difficulties because he, doubtless, thinks them insurmountable.

It no more follows that all mortals will cease to live when this age is followed by another, than it did when the antedeluvian age ended in the patriarchal age, or that in the Mosaic age, or that in the gospel age. In neither case were all mortals cut off. Enoch was translated, still mortals remained. Elijah was translated, still mortals were left and propagation went on. Jesus was raised from the dead, yet there were mortals still. What then shall hinder there being mortals in a future age, or under the administration of the kingdom of God, which is the next dispensation? True, they that attain that age by a resurrection from the dead, will not marry nor be given in marriage: they are immortal like their risen Lord. But does that prove that none others in that age will marry or be given in marriage? Not at all. Those who use the words of our Lord in Luke xx. as proof that there are no mortals in that age read carelessly, we think: they overlook the subject of discourse and the important conjunction "and." The Sadducees held that there was "no resurrection of the dead." If such were the case, in their estimation there would be a difficulty in marriage matters. Our Lord tells them, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, [aionos—age], and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage," etc. The question was not about the living, but about "the dead." Those who attain to that age, by a resurrection from the dead, are clearly distinguished from mortals by the conjunction "and," which would have been needless if all in that age were immortal.

Jesus told his disciples, "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon the twelve thrones judging [ruling] the twelve tribes of Israel." —Matt. xix. 28. The immortals are the rulers in the kingdom of God "under the whole heaven" (Dan. vii. 27); that kingdom is an everlasting one, and its rulers "cannot die any more." In that day "the LORD shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one LORD and his name one . . . . And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles: and it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King the LORD of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain: and if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain, there shall be the plague, wherewith the LORD will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This shall be the punishment . . . of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles."—Zech. xiv. 9, 16-19.

Thus we see there will be mortals when the LORD is King over all the earth, and punishments will be inflicted on the disobedient.

As to the earth ever having been filled with inhabitants, that has never yet been; and if all that have ever lived from Adam to the present time were now alive, there is land enough in North America to give them all a farm sufficient for their sustenance in a reign of universal peace, such as will be under the reign of JESUS and his associate rulers: and if the seas are to be converted into dry land, as some suppose, it would take thousands of years for mortals "left of the nations" to "replenish the earth," with inhabitants, "and subdue it" agreeably to God's command to Adam.

When Peter, James, and John beheld the glory of their Lord on the mount of transfiguration, so far from falling to the ground at the sight, Peter was delighted, and cried out in his rapture, "Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias."—Matt. xvii. 4. Peter felt as reconciled mortals will feel under the reign and glory of our risen Lord and resurrected saints and changed living ones, of whom Moses and Elijah were the type. The kingdom of God was represented in miniature on that mount of transfiguration—Jesus in glory; Moses the resurrected; Elijah the translated; Peter, James and John the mortals: and the disciples did not fall to the ground at that sight; but when the "cloud overshadowed them," and a voice spoke to them out of the cloud; then they fell to the ground, not before. They had been in too much hurry to have the kingdom established, and to have it done in their own way, as some are in these days.

But there is another idea attached to the term "glory" besides that of brightness: it is that of "honor—renown—fame—praise;" and when it is said, "the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth," etc., it is most likely the term glory relates to these, and answers to the petition "Hallowed be thy name." God's name will then be honored, adored, loved, praised and extolled in all the earth.

The case of Noah is introduced only to illustrate the state of the world at our Lord's return, to set up his kingdom; a state of general indifference to that event, and a destitution of faith in it, so that it would come on them unlooked for and suddenly, as did the flood on the old world in the days of Noah.

"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," etc. True: because to inherit is to be an heir. Christ is the primal heir. "If children (of God) then heirs: heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," (Rom. viii. 17); and we become children of God, in fact, by "being the children of the resurrection." —Luke xx. 36. These are those who "inherit the kingdom." But the subjects of that kingdom are not heirs, and do not inherit it, though they are greatly blessed in living under the rule of the heirs of it. The heirs are immortal and cannot die any more. Does that prove all mortals are excluded from being citizens there? We think we have shown that there are mortals there, who are liable to "punishment." See our remarks on Zech. xiv., which is only one scripture among many of the same character.

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD TO ABRAHAM.

WE regret to learn from Br. Green that he has "concluded not to reply any farther on the" above subject. He says, many are urging him to go on, and others begging him to desist, for it would unsettle many on the doctrine of No life out of Christ. Br. Green adds, "So far as you and I are concerned, we could discuss the subject to the end, and the effect would be, we should love each other better and better." So we believe: and we selected Br. Green at the outset, because we were sure such would be the result. What a pity we could not say this of all professed lovers of truth: but as Br. G. says, "It is not so with all: bitterness is manifested by many, as though a man could not be a Christian unless he thinks as they do." Truly it is lamentable that there should be any such among those who claim to be Advent or Life believers. What truth have we, not held by those claiming to be "orthodox," that we have not had to contend for, earnestly, against all protests, and even expulsion from their churches because we continued to promulgate what we believed to be the truth? Have we stereotyped our past positions, so that a brother who makes an advance, as he believes, in the knowledge of God's plans of blessing the world, must have "bitterness" manifested toward him? and the cry be raised, "You will unsettle" somebody on other doctrines? Is such fear the way we came as far on in truth as we have? Such a spirit is unworthy of any who have advanced to the position of Life believers.

If any choose to stand still, where they are, they can do so, or go back; but for ourself, we choose to "go forward," cost what it may; others may follow if convinced we are right, or remain stationary if unconvinced: we shall not quarrel with them, though expressing our own views, answerable to God alone. We are not a stereotyped man, and hope we never may be while in this imperfect state, where all "know but in part."

One brother has accused us of misrepresenting Br. Green, in our replies to him, without specifying wherein. As he may make the same statement to others, we have to say, Br. Green makes no such complaint, to our knowledge; nor do we believe he will. The representation is evidently the fruit of that "bitterness" of which Br. G. speaks in his note to us.

We shall soon take up the subject of the promise and oath of God to Abraham and give our views freely, and no one need feel responsible for them but ourself: but we advise all, "In patience possess ye your souls," and thus show yourselves desirous to know all the truth that may be known.

The time was, twenty years ago, when a good brother said to us, "You will never make us believe in the non-resurrection of the wicked dead." But he now preaches it strong. He now feels about the same in relation to our views of the promise and oath of God to Abraham; but, if this age lasts, he will probably preach them, and rejoice that we did not desist in proclaiming them, as he and others so much desired we should.

Brethren and sisters, you prayed very earnestly that God would raise us up from our late sickness. We never once prayed such a prayer during our sickness: our prayer was, that God would glorify himself and His Son in us, whether by life or death. He has seen fit to restore us; and now we desire to seek only His glory and the glory of our LIFE-GIVER, and not our own. By His help we shall keep that one object steadily in view.

THE OATH OF GOD TO DAVID'S LORD:

OR, THE PRIESTHOOD OF CHRIST.

"The LORD hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek."—Psa. cx. 4,

SUCH is God's testimony concerning the Priesthood of Messiah, David's Lord, who is the Christ. God's oath makes sure that his priesthood is unchangeable and never to pass away; for God has sworn to it "and will not repent," or, change His mind: the thing is as fixed and eternal as it is possible to be made. "The law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated forever more."—Heb. vii. 28. There is no limitation to the Son's priesthood here: "But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Heb. vii. 24, 25. Here is no limit to the priesthood of Christ, unless he shall cease to live: if He can die, his priesthood may end; not without.

He is made a Priest, by the oath of God, after the order of Melchisedek. This personage was, "King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace; . . . having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually."—Heb. vii. 2, 3. Here is no countenance of the idea that the priesthood of Christ is ever to end, but the reverse. The date of the commencement of the priesthood of the Son of God and its end (if it ever is to end) is clearly hidden from view. In this character, He hath "neither beginning of days nor end of life," so far as is revealed, but "abideth a Priest continually." Whoever attempts to limit it, undertakes to "be wise above what is written," and should be careful that his theory does not set aside the oath of God.

Christ, during this present age or dispensation, is a priest upon his Father's throne: but the time will come when He will sit upon his own throne—that to which He is heir, viz., David's throne. "I have sworn unto David, my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations."—Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me: it shall be established forever," etc.—Verses 35-37. But this throne has been "overturned" for more than two thousand years; yet God's oath secures its re-establishment to Him "whose right it is," viz., David's Son, Jesus the Messiah: Ezk. xxi. 27. This throne is Jesus' own throne; and, when re-established, is perpetual and eternal. That throne is upon this earth, for David never had a throne in heaven, nor in what some people call "the new earth"—meaning a literal new earth, formed after this earth has been dissolved by fire. If such an earth ever exists, David's throne never did exist there, and never will, unless it is removed from the scene of David's rule. But be that as it may, David's throne is secured to an heir, which all admit is Jesus the Christ.

The question then arises, Will he exercise the office of his priesthood on his own throne? Let JEHOVAH himself answer. "Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is The BRANCH; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the LORD: even He shall build the temple of the LORD; and He shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon His throne; and He shall be a priest upon his throne," etc.—Zech. vi. 12, 13.

We do not care whether the temple here spoken of is the literal or spiritual temple. If it is the spiritual, then we must look beyond this age for its completion, when all the materials are collected by a resurrection from the dead; and His sitting and ruling upon His throne is when the temple is completed; "and He shall be a priest upon his throne:" hence his priesthood continues into the age following the present, or the kingdom of God age. The next age is the kingdom of God, which is to follow the present "wild beast" governments. Then will David's throne be reoccupied by its rightful heir, and his priesthood continues; "for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it."

Then, and not till then, if ever, will a mediatorial kingdom be established. God offered to ancient Israel to make them "a kingdom of priests" (see Ex. xix. 5, 6) if they would obey His voice. But they did not, and that kingdom came not into their hands, but God visited the "Gentiles, to take out of them a people," (Acts xv. 14) which Peter characterizes as "a royal priesthood." These are being trained, in this dispensation, to be rulers in "the kingdom of God," or dispensation to follow the present: for saith Jesus, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father on his throne."—Rev. iii. 21. So, if a mediatorial kingdom is ever to be established it will be when the "royal priesthood" sit down with Christ on his throne, where he will still exercise the office of High Priest, and his brethren, honored with a place on His throne, will exercise the office of subordinate priests.

This order of things, like all other good things, the papists have attempted to forestall, by their human arrangements, by calling their mode of operations the "Mediatorial kingdom;" (and Protestants have borrowed their phraseology,) thus "making the words of God of none effect by their traditions;" displacing God's arrangements of the ages, or dispensations, to exalt themselves in this mortal state.

We have not designed to give more than an outline of this subject in this article, but shall enlarge upon it when we bring out fully the subject of "God's promise and oath to Abraham." We trust we have said enough, at this time, to set candid inquirers after truth to thinking. By prayerful thinking we shall "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and LIFE-GIVER, Jesus the Anointed." —2 Pet. iii. 18. Let none suppose they have come to know all the truth; for, at present, "we know in part," said the Apostle to the Gentiles. The ancient Jews stumbled and fell at the doctrine, brought out by the Apostles, "that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of His promise in Christ by the gospel," (Eph. iii. 6); it was "the mystery, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto the holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit."—Eph. iii. 3, 5. Let us see to it that we do not, like the Jews, stumble and fall at the doctrine of the great blessings to come to the Gentiles (who have never yet had the gospel) when the dispensation of the kingdom of God is opened; which is now nigh at hand, and is "the age to come," when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea."—Isa. xi. 9. Psa. lxxii. 19; Hab. ii. 14.

"THE RAINBOW."

SEVERAL persons have inquired of us, within a few days, to know how they can become subscribers for the above-named Magazine. We know but one way, and that is to write direct to its publisher and inclose him the money for it. We are not authorised to say what the subscription price is to American subscribers, but think it is two dollars United States currency. The address is,

"DR. WILLIAM LEASK,
34 Sandringham Road,
Kingsland, London, E.,
England."

Send as above, inclosing $2, and pay your postage. Be sure to write the direction plainly; also, write plain your own Post Office address and your name.

We are glad to have our friends help DR. LEASK by taking his Magazine. We do not agree with all that is found in it, and we presume the Editor does not; but we are happy to say that the editorials are generally excellent.

PAPERS SHORT.

BY some mistake in our paper dealers, our papers ran short last week, so that a few of our subscribers are not yet supplied. Any one willing to part with the HERALD, of March 1, will oblige us by returning it, addressed, "HERALD OF LIFE, New York City."

We owe an apology to our patrons for the inferior quality of the material on which our paper has been printed for some weeks back. We have hardly got so as to look after all the affairs of the office yet; but we trust we have put a stop to being furnished with such thin paper as we have had the last several weeks.

FRANCE.

LITTLE remains at present to be told respecting the war just closed. The terms of peace, substantially reported last week, have been ratified by the Assembly, and the conquerors, having occupied Paris, have withdrawn. A dispatch from Paris, dated Wednesday, March 1, says:

"The Prussians, entering Paris at last, first appeared at the Arc de Triomphe at a quarter before 9 this morning. They took possession in the usual Prussian manner: first came one Uhlan officer, Lieut. Bernardy, of the 14th Hussars, then two more, then six abreast. Advancing leisurely up the avenue, the grand army of Uhlans reconnoitered, went all around the arch vainly trying to pass under, and then galloped back to report difficulties. Another group arrives and repeats the same maneuver, with evident disappointment at being unable to pass under. They finally gallop at full speed down the Champs Elysees. At a considerable distance in the rear comes a dense blue-black mass, which is the advance guard of the thirty thousand.

The crowds which during the siege usually gathered about the army have disappeared. This morning only a few women, and perhaps fifty men, apparently artisans, are to be seen. There are no shouts and no gestures when the Uhlans appear; there was only the sarcastic cry, when the Prussians failed to pass under the arch, 'Don't you wish you could?' Seeing the head of the column enter, I hurried across the Champs Elysees, over the Pont des Invalides to the Esplanade, of the same name. The line was guarded by gendarmerie. In the square, fronting the hotel, were troops in line, and Gardes Mobiles grouped irregularly, awaiting orders. Their officers were astounded at learning that the Prussians had already entered, and could scarcely believe those who first brought them the news. In a few minutes the news had spread, creating great excitement, but there was no demonstration, though the officers were discussing the probability of a collision.

"Troops were strongly posted in front of the Foreign Office, and gendarmerie occupied the courtyard of the Chamber of Deputies and Pont de la Concorde. At the foot of this bridge, on the Champs Elysees, was a double barricade, consisting of empty artillery caissons interlaced; and another barricade, was placed transversely, across the quay of the Tuileries. The gates of the Tuileries were closed, and soldiers were peering through the rails at the Uhlans, who had now reached the end of the Champs Elysees, and taken their stations, three on each side, under the group of statuary called the Horses of Marly. The faces of the statues representing French cities, at the corners of the Place de la Concorde, were vailed with black cloth, twined with white. The Strasbourg group was gloomy, with faded garlands. The group recently placed in front of the statue, illustrating Ulrich's defense, has been removed."

The trial of German occupation of the city was a severe one not only to the Parisians but to the French generally. Wise counsel, however, prevailed and it was, on the whole, borne properly. President Thiers had issued a proclamation to the people of Paris, appealing to their patriotism and wisdom for the preservation of order. Famine, said he, compelled the surrender of the forts and obliged the Government to open negotiations. They were only able to obtain an extension of the armistice by consenting to the partial occupation of Paris. He urged the people not to break the convention, and thus entail frightful misfortunes upon France. Gen. Vinoy also issued an "order of the day," in which he gave equally sound and good advice. To the peaceful influence of these proclamations is no doubt largely due the fact that no disturbance of note occurred.

A dispatch dated London, March 3, says: "A special telegram to the 'London Times' from Versailles says the Germans evacuated Paris to-day, and Prince Frederick Charles retired immediately behind the Seine." The following from the same source and of the same date says, of the ratification of the treaty of peace: "M. Favre, to-day, notified to Count Von Bismarck the vote of the National Assembly ratifying the preliminaries of peace. Count Von Bismarck at once replied that he was ready to exchange formal ratifications, and that the Emperor had already signed the treaty. M. Favre immediately proceeded to Versailles, when the ratifications were exchanged. The peace Plenipotentiaries will hold their sittings at the Hotel de Ville, Brussels."

A dispatch from Versailles says the French indemnity is payable in three installments, viz.: "One milliard of thalers in 1871, two milliards in 1872, and two milliards in 1873. Interest is only payable on the last installment from which the proportion of the debt appertaining to Alsace and Lorraine, estimated at one half milliard thalers, and the cost of the railways in Eastern France is to be deducted."

This from Berlin, March 3:

"The Empress has received the following dispatch from the Emperor:

"'VERSAILLES, March 3.

I have just ratified the conditions of peace, which the Bordeaux Assembly have accepted. Thus far the work is complete, which was through seven months of battles to be achieved, thanks to the valor, devotion, and endurance of our incomparable army, and the sacrifices of the whole Fatherland. The Lord of Hosts has everywhere visibly blessed our enterprises, and by His mercy has permitted an honorable peace. To Him be the Honor! to the Fatherland the thanks.

WILHELM.'"

The above was publicly read amid the booming of artillery, the ringing of bells, and other demonstrations of joy.

France, then, has no longer a war of defence to prosecute. But now comes the extremely difficult task of reconstructing the Government. Her political future must still be to her and to the world a matter of speculation. Nothing can be definitely counted on respecting it. That form of government however which seems to us most likely to be established is what may be called a republican monarchy of liberal character. But time only will reveal her future.

The following correspondence has passed between the Emperor of Germany and the Czar Alexander. The Emperor, in a letter to the Czar, after stating the terms of peace with France, said: "We have arrived at the end of a glorious and bloody war, which was precipitated by the frivolity of the French. Prussia remembers that you prevented the spread of the war. God bless you."

The Czar, in reply, said that he shared "the joy which was felt by" his "illustrious brother," and hoped for "a durable peace." "The happiness and glory of Russia and Prussia are now insured."

The correspondence is evidence that there has been a thorough understanding between the two Powers during the war. It is not unreasonable to suppose that they also understand each other respecting certain contemplated movements on the part of Russia in the east.

L. C. T.

"WOES TO COME!"

SOME friend has sent us "The Baptist Messenger" for October. It opens with "A Sermon delivered at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, by C. H. Spurgeon." The text is Rev. ix. 12: "One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter." But it is really of no consequence what the text is, or what it teaches as it stands in the divine book. The words suit the preacher as a peg on which to hang a homily of horrors, and he succeeds to admiration! Mr. Spurgeon says:

"With the particular context of this small sentence I have no intention to meddle this evening. I am not an interpreter of unfulfilled prophecy; I leave that for those who have time and talent for such researches. Doubtless these words were spoken of old by the angel that appeared to John the Divine. After he had lifted the curtain of futurity and shown the terrible things that God would do in the earth, he explained to John, 'One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.' To my own apprehension, while reading this in private, it seemed just such an utterance the angel of God might address to the soul of the ungodly when he leaves the body. 'Death is over,' saith the Angel. 'One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.' Thou hast passed through the Jordan, but thou art to pass through two streams deeper still; thou hast passed through the woes of death, but behold there comes a second death: "One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.'"

Now it is prudent to avoid unfulfilled prophecy if a man feels himself incompetent to deal with it; but it would also be prudent not to put into the lips of the "Angel" that which he never said, and not to make use of Scriptural words for the purpose of teaching sentiments which Scripture, reason, the nature of man, and the character of God, concur in pronouncing impossible, absurd, horrible, and blasphemous. It is little to say that some of Mr. Spurgeon's utterances in this sermon harrow the feelings and shock the moral sense; but it is time for every Scripturally instructed Christian to protest against them when they so foully calumniate the character of the Lord our God. Just read the following if you can:

"Who can tell the terrors of the day of judgment? Who can describe the two woes to come when this life's fitful fever is o'er; yet certain it is that after the woe of judgment there comes the woe of hell. Oh, what a woe is that in which all the woes of the lost are condensed! Can you bear to see a fellow-creature in pain? The face-ache or the tooth-ache draws forth my sympathies. We cannot bear to see a fellow-creature in agony. But how shall I attempt to describe the pains of hell? You cannot feel them here, bless God for it. There is no pain on earth strong enough to be compared with the pains of hell. Napoleon—a man who had perhaps the hardest of all hearts—one day rode across the battle-field; his horse trod upon a poor wounded man just ready to die, and the poor man rose up, and cried, 'Oh!' at which Napoleon shrieked too, and cried, 'Oh, God, what pains a man may suffer.' Could you and I put our ear to the grating of the world of spirits for a moment, we would say, 'Oh, God, what pains a man may suffer!' You cannot compare the pains of this life with the agonies to be endured hereafter. Could all the misery that ever startled the keepers of our hospitals be conceived, it could not convey the least idea of the pains of the spirits that are doomed to dwell in eternal fire and everlasting burning. The woe, however, will act its terrible part on the soul. The memory, and hope, and fear, and thought, and imagination, conscience, and judgment—all will be racked, every one stretched on a bed of fire, every nerve strained to its utmost, every vein made a road for the hot feet of pain to travel on. Jesus Christ, the most loving of all preachers, preached most terribly on hell. He calls it the pit without a bottom. He spoke of it as the place 'Where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched.' Imagine not, therefore, that I can speak too seriously, or portray too vividly, the doom of the ungodly; but I dread the subject, and I feel it a relief to leave it."

We are not acquainted with the place where Jesus Christ calls hell "the pit without a bottom;" but if it be that it can hardly be at the same time "a bed of fire." Nor did our Lord speak of it as the place "Where their worm dieth not, and their (?) fire is not quenched;" for the words in Mark, even if genuine, do not refer at all to the hell of Mr. Spurgeon's imagination. The valley of the son of Hinnom (corrupted into gehenna), was the place where the dead bodies of criminals were consumed by fire, and where worms fed upon the filth of the city. But the idea of bodies and souls living in fire, and that forever, whilst "every vein is made a road for the hot feet of pain to travel on," is so astoundingly horrible, that nothing but ages of theological corruption could made it possible for any sane man to suppose that he believes it! Mr. Spurgeon! in the name of our gracious MASTER reject this impious fable, and tell your splendid congregation, in your own glowing language, that the ungodly shall utterly perish, shall never see life; because for mortal man there is no immortality except in CHRIST, the Son of the blessed God.—The Rainbow.

A PROTEST AGAINST THE WORD HELL, AS THAT WORD IS NOW UNDERSTOOD.

CHILDREN are naturally jealous of their father's good name, and cannot bear to hear evil reported of him. I am therefore jealous of the name of God, and cannot bear the "hard speeches ungodly sinners speak against him," and for which judgments will overtake them (Jude, verse 15), in attributing to him the existence of a place called hell. I solemnly protest against the diabolical doctrines concerning hell preached and believed by men professing to know God, but who by their preaching, or by their belief, prove that they know not the God who revealed himself to Moses (Ex. xxxiv. 5–7), and was manifest in his Son Jesus. Matt. v. 44, 45; Luke xxiii. 34.

The original inspired Hebrew language contains no word that signifies hell, or any thing approaching to it. What does hell mean? the "regions of everlasting woe," into which thousands of millions of deceased "immortal souls," from the days of Adam, have gone! regions, where Bunyan and Spurgeon, and other false prophets, testify millions have been writhing in agony from the day of their death! regions where the devil and his angels reign supreme, and whose divinely-appointed mission and delight it is to torment forever and ever the "vital sparks of heavenly flame," alias "souls," who through helpless ignorance, in most cases, died unsaved! Such is a faint picture of the orthodox hell, which, if a man does not profess faith in, he cannot be a respected member of any one of the Evangelical churches or Christian Associations of this day.

Now, I solemnly affirm, before God, that his inspired word reveals the existence of no such place. I affirm that the inspired Hebrew word Sheol, translated twenty-nine times hell, thirty-one times grave, and three times pit, in the Bible, conveys no such idea as hell now does. I say now does, for it is well known to many, who might testify if they would, that in the days of King James, when our version of the Scriptures was made, hell and grave were almost synonymous terms; and hence Sheol was rendered indifferently, hell and grave. But now that hell has become an absolutely profane word, and conveys ideas entirely foreign to the Hebrew Scriptures, and most dishonoring to God, I protest against its use by God-fearing people, and maintain that when God's word is read Sheol should be either transferred, as in the case of the Greek word baptizo, or rendered by some English word or words that will convey the meaning of the inspired word Sheol. Moses used it seven times. Six times it is rendered grave. Why should it be read Hell once? Is it fair to the common people they should be deceived in this matter? Is it fair to the author of the Pentateuch, be he Moses or the God who inspired him, thus to pervert his language? I appeal to the professed ministers of God to tell the people the truth of this matter. I appeal to all to whom this protest may come, that they search out the truth concerning the Sheol the Bible speaks of, as they value God's good name and favor. Here are all the passages where the word occurs; read them in the light of the context, and in the light that one Scripture throws on another, substituting Sheol for grave, hell and pit, its English representatives, and you will be freed forever from man's traditions concerning hell, and, I trust, in future fear God and his righteous judgments, rather than the devil and his imaginary regions of everlasting woe!

The texts where Sheol occurs:

1. Where it is rendered grave:—Gen. xxxvii. 35; xlii. 38; xliv. 29, 31; 1 Sam. ii. 6; 1 Kings, ii. 6, 9; Job. vii. 9; xiv. 13; xvii. 13; xxi. 13; xxiv. 19; Psa. vi. 5; xxx. 3; xxxi. 17; xlix. 14, 15; lxxxviii. 3; lxxxix. 48; cxli. 7; Prov. i. 12; xxx. 16; Eccles. ix. 10; Song of Sol. viii. 6; Isai. xiv. 9, 15; xxxviii. 18; Ezek. xxxi. 15; Hosea xiii. 14.

2. Where it is rendered pit:—Num. xvi. 30, 33; Job xvii. 16.

3. Where it is rendered hell:—Deut. xxxii. 22; 2 Sam. xxii. 6; Job xi. 8; xxvi. 6; Psa. ix. 17; xvi. 10; xviii. 5; lv. 15; lxxxvi. 13; cxvi. 3; cxxxix. 8; Prov. v. 5; vii. 27; ix. 18; xv. 11, 24; xxiii. 14; xxvii. 20; Isai. v. 14; xxviii. 15, 18; lvii. 9; Ezek. xxxi. 16, 17; xxxii. 21, 27; Amos ix. 2; Jonah ii. 2; Hab. ii. 5.

JAMES R. LITHGOW.

—The Rainbow.

THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

WE can never sufficiently adore God for the work of His Holy Spirit. No language can describe the value, no heart conceive the preciousness of that work. To be awakened from a perilous sleep; to be quickened from death and made alive unto God; to have an invisible Comforter abiding with us during the time of our Lord's personal absence from us; to have a Witness-bearer with our spirits that we are born of God; to enjoy a peace that passeth understanding amidst the perplexities, cares, sorrows, and temptations of life; to have every trial sanctified and every sorrow turned into blessing; to have divine doctrines written upon the heart, and divine promises brought seasonably to the memory; to be able to say Abba Father; to have the earnest of the unfading inheritance; and to be sealed to the day of redemption;—these are some of the inestimable blessings and privileges brought to us by the Holy Spirit of God. Who can value them enough, and speak of them in terms of becoming gratitude? When we think of what a man is by nature and what he becomes by grace, of the immense moral distance between a child of wrath and a son of God, the sinner and the saint, the creature of yesterday and the heir of immortality, we must be profoundly impressed with the unspeakable honor the Father has put upon us by the gift of his Holy Spirit, through our blessed Lord, his well beloved Son. Insensibility to the necessity and preciousness of the Spirit's work is always a sign of declining piety; a deep sense of its importance and earnest prayer for its renewed action is the sure token of increased vital godliness. We can no more live unto God without the Holy Spirit than we can come unto God without the Saviour. The wonderful economy of redemption, arranged in full view of what man is, and what God willed redeemed man to be, makes this perfectly clear. Hence, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the flesh, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 9, 13. The whole subject of the Holy Spirit's work is of such intense importance, and a clear recognition of it so indispensable, that we counsel Christian men to give it that prayerful attention it so richly deserves.—EDITOR of the Rainbow.

GOD'S GARDEN.

THE latest argument we have heard in favor of denominationalism is a garden illustration. It is maintained that God wisely ordained this system for the attraction of different classes of minds, just as flowers of different colors and odors are planted in a garden to beautify and give variety to its attractions. Each denomination is supposed to be a class of flowers in God's garden.

Now, to get the gist of this argument, let the reader imagine a garden planted with a variety of flowers. The roses discover that they are planted more profusely than other flowers, and they consequently suppose themselves the most important, and set up a regular fault-finding with other flowers because they are not all roses. The lilies say, we have grown in this garden longer than any other flowers, and all others should be exterminated because they are not lilies. The sunflowers say, we have a custom of keeping our faces to the sun all day, which we consider appropriate; now we recognize all the rest as flowers, but they have no business in this garden, unless they conform to this custom. And there arises a general jealousy and bickering and back-biting in regard to the proper qualifications of a legitimate flower. But the mind need run but a short distance to see that the comparison above referred to is, to say the least, a libel on the flowers.

But we are astonished at any man who reads the Bible, to say nothing of professing to be a minister of the Gospel, who will charge God with ordaining such a system—setting up more than a score of different sects to maintain as many different antagonisms. Especially is the inconsistency manifest when it is remembered that Jesus charged his disciples, "Be ye one, as I and my Father are one." There was no sectarianism about the oneness of Jesus and his Father. It is also written by an inspired apostle, "Let there be no divisions among you." It will not be denied that divisions naturally beget strife, envyings, hatreds, and a host of kindred sins expressly denounced in the Bible. The inconsistencies of this system, which it is claimed was ordained by God for the purpose of coaxing those sinners who would not come to him unless they could find terms to suit themselves, have confounded and disgusted ten sinners where the accommodation has attracted one.—The Nazarene.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM DR. J. K. FINLEY.

BR. STORRS: "Whom having not seen I love." It has been a source of grateful acknowledgment to our kind heavenly Father, that He has been pleased to raise you up again to comparative health, with a fair prospect of further usefulness in his service. I had felt all along, until two or three weeks ago, that you would not recover; and I believe if it had not been for the persistent "prayer of faith" going up from hundreds, perhaps thousands of your friends, and friends of our Saviour, such would have been the result.

Your article on the blasphemy of immortal-soulism is true, every word of it; and it is unaccountably strange that good people, who think they desire to know and love the truth, do not see it plainly taught in the Bible.

I send you by this mail a number of the "Presbyterian" to let you see an article on "Brown's Catechism for Children," which certainly contains the Orthodox teachings, but which the writer condemns as unfit to be put into the hands of children. It is just the milk that I was fed with all through the period of my childhood. It is published without remark by the editor, and of course looks as if they are becoming ashamed of their "gospel." I am very sure there are no Life believers, who are afraid or ashamed to put the Gospel of JESUS CHRIST into the hands of our children. The glad news sent us by our loving Father is intended and adapted to be a comfort and blessing to all of every age. "Their Rock is not as our Rock themselves being judges." Yours, in love.

NILES, MICH., Feb. 27, 1871.

P. S.—I feel ashamed that I have never given expression to the warm sentiments of affectionate regard which I have long felt for our beloved Brother THORNE. His writings breathe the loving spirit of our Master, and I have never seen anything, from his pen, that was not both interesting and profitable. His management of the HERALD has been altogether satisfactory to me, and to all others, so far as I have any opportunity of judging. Much love to him.

J. K. F.

FROM HENRY YOUNG.

"Stereotyped Theology is the bane of Revelation."
—DR. LEASK.

BR. STORRS: We have been weak in body and mind for many months past, and so almost disheartened, caring little for what we read, or having too little energy to write to any one, because it has seemed to us that most writers and speakers were determined to "stereotype" their "theology," and so do little more than repeat, in dull monotony, what had been many times written and spoken.

We write now to speak of a happy change which has come to us on reading your responses to Br. Green, as also your reply to "A Dear Brother" in the last HERALD, where "blessings antecedent and consequent" are so fully explained; and the words you promise us on the priesthood of Christ we are expecting to read with increased interest.

Our prayers for your recovery are turned to grateful praise; and we can but feel that this long confinement by sickness has given you a deeper sense of the glorious future scenes which are so soon to open on our view. All praise to the God of this glorious revelation which so cheers the hearts of the weary, waiting ones, "in this house of their pilgrimage."

Dear brothers and sisters, fellow-pilgrims, one and all, let us care for nothing else but how we may secure the prize of unending life to ourselves, and do all we can that others may secure the same; and what stronger motive can be given us than this hope of future glory promised, and which by an eye of faith we can see ready to be revealed. Surely,

"A hope so much divine
May trials well endure,
May purge us all from sense and sin,
As Christ, the Lord is pure."

How very excellent are those articles copied from "The Rainbow." They must, we think, be very acceptable to every reader. God bless the Editor and patrons, and strengthen their hands in this work of spreading the truth, is our prayer; and as they think "a stereotyped theology is the bane of revelation," and of course have not stereotyped their own, we have no doubt they will soon see truths in advance; and gladly take the steps which the HERALD is now taking; and when this is done, the following quotation, which we take from an article headed, "The Meaning of the War," will read somewhat different from what it now does. It now reads as follows: "People will have it that the dispensation of grace is the last dispensation which the Divine programme of all time furnishes for mankind."—"The dispensation of grace the last dispensation"?

We would ask, has there been a dispensation since Adam sinned which was not a dispensation of grace? Has not God in every dispensation declared himself "Gracious and merciful?" and does not "his mercy endure forever?" "He delighteth in mercy," and as he cannot change, "with him is no variableness or shadow of turning," and as Christ is "a priest forever," will not pardon and peace through him be offered forever? We know that most people will have it that this present gospel dispensation is the last dispensation of grace which "The Divine programme of all time furnishes for mankind," and that "this radical error vitiates the frame-work of their logic, and hurries them to conclusions which are at once wild and worthless." Now if we would not have the framework of our logic thus vitiated, we must have the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. But as one can never know that the ideas he has formed on one part of a whole system of truth, which he is examining, are entirely and exactly correct until he has a perfect understanding of every part of said system, how important that he keep up this examination and "stereotype" nothing till the whole system is known. O this human infallibility is too much like Rome.

PITTSFIELD, N. H., Feb. 25, 1871.

FROM ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

BR. STORRS: I have recently spent two Sabbaths with the friends at Cooper Institute, New York, and was much gratified with the fellowship prevailing among them, and the earnest looking for the Lord and his kingdom which increases and intensifies them.

While they have not requested me to act as their scribe, and might not especially thank me for reporting their condition, I must, nevertheless, say, that they maintain a living position on the prophetic word, and are awake, all the time, on the subject of Immortality. There is a spirit of forbearance among them which is conducive to inquiry and the advancement of scriptural knowledge; and when we say this, we claim that there is a wide opening for the acquisition of learning in the Divine prophecy.

There is, apparently, no disposition to trammel or control one in the dispensation of truth; at the same time, there may be a close watching of the positions and conclusions of the brethren who labor in word and doctrine, and a healthy criticism applied where necessity may demand some attention to the arguments of ministers.

There are several preachers among them, and these seem to be sound in subjects pertaining to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. Moreover, there may be some well defined acquirements secured by associating with the lovers of the gospel there. It is a place to learn. The old, firm brethren are alive, in spirit and in hope. God bless them.

On Sunday, 19th inst., I preached at the newly opened place in Philadelphia—Hope Hall, corner of 2nd and Pine Sts., at 3 P.M. Also, on Sunday 26th, at the same hour. The attendance was good. The sermons were upon prophecy, showing the end near, and were well received. Many of "the outsiders" are disposed to attend this meeting, and manifest a deep interest in the subjects discussed. There is a free spirit in the work, and great hope of success. Finally, I spoke again, at Ninth and Spring Garden, in the morning.—Sunday, 26th, upon the sounding of the "Seventh Trumpet."

My health is still further improved, and with many thanks for the mercy of our God together with the kindness of friends in the Lord, and also with renewed confidence and hope of ultimate recovery; I leave for the East.

NEW YORK, Feb. 28, 1871.

FROM JAMES H. JACOBS.

BR. STORRS: I am thankful for the HERALD OF LIFE. I love the doctrine it maintains. I think it the most heavenlike of any paper I know of. I am, with the other lovers of Jesus, trying to maintain the doctrine of Life only to the righteous, and a character like the pattern set forth in God's dear Son; and am looking for him to have the government on his shoulders; then will the governments of this world end, with all their oppressions: then will the heavenly commence and the Son of God be the Ruler among the nations; then will the nations learn war no more; then will the gospel that God preached to Abraham be fulfilled. But if what I hear and read that some believe, that when Jesus comes, he will take those that believe on him now, and those who are dead in him, to heaven for a thousand years, destroy every one else for 1,000 years; then, when the 1,000 years are ended, bring to life all that have been destroyed 1,000 years or more, then set the world on fire to destroy them again; if such is God's purpose, how can the gospel promise to Abraham be fulfilled?

I thank God for your restoration to health. May the lives of all who love God be precious in his sight. O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness to the children of men.

BLODGFTTS MILLS., N. Y., Feb. 17, 1871.

ELD. R. V. LYON, under date of Feb. 24, writes from Indiana: I am still out here, on the broad prairie, presenting the brightest gem of the gems of truth, for the sole purpose of winning a bride for Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER. The people turn out en masse, and give their most profound attention to my message. Many begin to think that Jesus is soon to come and give life to his people. The church in this place number some fifty, and all of them, save one or two, believe that there is no life in the future for any short of a union with Jesus, and a holy life subsequent to its being formed. Since my last I have immersed ten into the name of Jesus for the remission of sins. I have secured three more new subscribers for the HERALD OF LIFE, etc.

Yours, truly, in hope of eternal life.

[At a later date Eld. Lyon writes as follows:]

BR. STORRS: Truth is finding some out here in the prairie land of the noble State of Indiana. On Sunday, the 26th of Feb., I gave my last discourse to the people in this place for the present, and perhaps for all-coming time. And in it I presented a perfect pattern for them to imitate—Daniel in Babylon—what the church should be at the present time. After the close of our services (which ended by eating the Lord's Supper), we retired to the water through the mud, and amid the falling snow, and immersed two lovely young ladies "into the name of Jesus" our LIFE-GIVER, "for the remission of sins."

After taking our leave with God's nobility and others who came to witness the scene, we mounted our nag and rode some five miles to Br. L.'s. After eating our dinner and supper (under one head) and a social religious interview, we retired for the night, and on the 27th, at 7 A. M., we took the cars for our own sweet and quiet home, where we arrived the next day at 10 A. M., a little tired and worn down. But my prospects are bright for the saint's Eden home. Had the opposers of the doctrine of the non-living of the wicked dead been with us at all our meetings, and listened to the thirty-eight sermons which I preached, and witnessed the falling tears, and beheld the multitude who listened with the most profound attention to our message, and the answers given to the questions asked, etc., we think we should no longer hear them say that the doctrine does no good, and that those who preach it never have any revivals as the result of their labors, or build up the church of God. There is quite a number of churches in C. W. and the States that have been brought into existence under my labors; and all who know me understand that I make the doctrines of no future life for any of the human families who die out of Christ first and foremost in all my public and private labors. I send you two more new subscribers.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y., March 1, 1871.

OBITUARY.

JENKS.—Fell asleep in Christ, in Westfield, Mass., Feb. 21, Mrs. MARY A. JENKS, wife of Br. T. T. Jenks, aged 36 years.

For the past two years Sister Jenks had been suffering from that fell destroyer—consumption. The nature of her disease was such as to severely try her patience; but the trial was not too severe, for Jesus was her helper and she was enabled to bear all her sufferings with resignation. For many years she had been a follower of Christ and during the last few years of her life she was a firm believer in the speedy advent of the Saviour and "Life only in him." She sleeps, "but not forever."

Br. Jenks is sustained by the hope of a speedy reunion. May God comfort him and the other bereaved ones. Funeral discourse by the writer.

W. N. PILE.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Feb. 25, 1871.

GOWELL.—Fell asleep in Christ, in Gardiner, Maine, Feb. 20th, PARKER GOWELL, aged 75 years.

The enemy conquered, though bravely he fought,
Our father, companion and friend.
He has gone to the grave, he's returned to the dust,
Oh! when will this mortal state end?"

For years he suffered with a hard racking cough, so he could not get out to meeting, but he prized his Bible all the more. He was a great Bible reader; and he took it for the man of his council. Truly it was a lamp to his feet and a light to his path. For years before he ever heard of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, he could not impute it to that God who had styled himself a God of love and mercy to raise poor mortals from the grave and kill them over again; so when he heard Br. Bishop preach on the "No life out of Christ," he was all ready to receive it for truth.

He has taken great satisfaction in reading the HERALD OF LIFE the past winter: read them over two or three times.

This is the fourth time that the cruel enemy, death, has entered our family. A brother, two sisters, now a kind father, a tender and affectionate husband, have fallen, but they rest from their labors, and we await the coming of him who is the resurrection and the life, and hope for a reunion where death will never come.

MARY E. GOWELL.

HALLOWELL, ME., March 2, 1871.

A GREAT CHANGE.

SOME time since a lady whose time has been much devoted to religious work, going on board a ship of war, was received by an officer on deck, not without respect, but accompanied by many of those expressions which unfortunatel yare too frequent in the lips of sailors; the lady expressed her wish that while she was on board, he would have the goodness to desist from language of that description; he professed his readiness to oblige her, and during the period of her being on board, not one oath escaped his lips. She pursued her course, distributing her Bibles and tracts, and above all her admonition. On her return she was accompanied by the same officer, and had an opportunity of thanking him for his kindness in attending to her request; he expressed his willingness to oblige her on any occasion, and said there was nothing she asked him to do he would not do. "Then" (said she) "I will thank you to read that book," giving him a Bible. He felt himself surprised, but considering that he had given his promise, he was bound to fulfil it.

The lady afterwards visiting a distant part of the country, went to the church, heard a sermon, and was returning, when the minister running after her, said, "If I mistake not I am addressing such a lady?" mentioning her name. "That is my name," said she, "but I have no recollection of you." "No, madame," said he, "do you not recollect visiting such a ship, and giving an officer a Bible?" "Yes," said she, "I do." "Well, madame, I am that person, and the good effects of it are what you have seen this morning."—Selected.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—Mrs. R. A. Palmer, D. H. Tichenor, Joseph H. Morgan, B. C. Simonds, Deborah Hunt, G. B. Choate.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Clarendon Kelly, H. H. Corbin, Henry Young, T. P. Lewis (pays to April 1872), Mrs. C. M. Holloway, Jacob Shade, S. M. Frame, Mrs. Cyrrena Briggs, Wilford Pugh, E. C. Byers, P. G. Smith.

VARIOUS SUMS—James L. Boyd $20 on pledge; G. H. Danforth, $5; D. B. Salter, $25 on pledge; Stephen Pell, $3; Benj. Mellor, $5 on pledge; S. Royse, $5 (all right now); Wm. H. Spence, $3.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Joseph Laciar (by express), Henry Miller, P. O'Hare, Elias Heitzman, Wesley Sill, J. E. Stevenson, S. R. Clinkenbeard, E. W. Smith, Wm. H. Spence, Mrs. J. McClean.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

D. B. Salter, Saltersville, N. J., $30.

A Lesson.

We cannot always be giving:
 The woman has come again;
She has such a whining story
 Of hunger, or cold, or pain;
She wearies with repetitions—
 Her Johnny is out of place,
Her children are sick with hunger,
 I tire of her listless face.

Good Philip sat lazily reading,
 The crimson gas-light shook,
From a shade that was ruby-tinted,
 Its red flakes over his book.
I thought that he did not notice;
 But suddenly, sweet and low,
He said, with the voice of a dreamer,
 "Don't let the woman go."

And then, with his smile so royal,
 So sweet with pity and pain,
He called her into his study,
 Out of the merciless rain.
"Sit down, my friend;" and he gave her
 The best chair in the place;
And I saw a quick flush brighten,
 Her haggard and listless face.

And then, with his tones like music,
 He sounded her frozen heart,
Till the thrill of a tender question
 Sundered its ice apart;
And tears and sobs and passion
 Came thick as the midnight rain;
And she told such a pitiful story
 My own heart throbbed with pain.

"You see," said my Philip. softly,
 "She is greater than you or I;
She has struggled and conquered where we, love,
 Should maybe sink down and die;
She has fought in the dark with demons,
 With evil on every side;
And Satan hath tried to strip her
 Even of her woman's pride.

"Love, let us be very tender;
 The lowliest soul may be
A temple of priceless treasures,
 That only God can see."
So the woman left our study
 With the face of an angel of light;
And she is my noblest pattern
 Who came as a beggar that night.

—Selected.

"The Seeds of Things."

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM N. PILE.

Under the above caption an article appeared in the Herald of Life of Dec. 14, written by Br. J. B. Cook, which is professedly a "review," in part at least, of a pamphlet recently published by us, entitled "The Mediatorial Kingdom." As its author, it is but proper that we should notice this "review," not for the benefit of those who have read the pamphlet (for we think that such have a sufficient refutation of Br. Cook's theory in the pamphlet itself) but for that portion of the readers of the Herald who have not seen it.

The pamphlet was not published in a spirit of controversy, but for the purpose of setting forth what we humbly conceive to be the truth upon Christ's present position and work. Yet we are not sorry or surprised that it should meet with opposition. Not sorry, because truth can suffer no loss in this way, but must necessarily be the gainer, in that a demand is created in candid, unbiased minds, to hear the testimony upon the "other side." Not surprised, for it is but natural that men should oppose that which counterworks their theories, especially when they are held to be so fundamental as the "age to come" view seems to be to Br. Cook.

He is fearful that, if our view be correct, the "Mediatorial Kingdom" will "end, short of salvation" and "victory." "Salvation" is chronologically located by the Scriptures at the "end of faith."—1 Pet. i. 9. Faith and sight cannot exist together. The latter ends and supersedes the former: hence the "things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen (hence objects of faith) are eternal."—2 Cor. iv. 18. Again, faith is that which is "in part" or "imperfect," but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.—1 Cor. xiii. 9, 10.

Christ appears the second time without a "sin offering" (which excludes the application of any text to the "age to come," which speaks of such offerings) unto "salvation." This "salvation," however, is not that of a world or of unbelieving Jews in a future age, but of "those that look for him" before and at his coming. The process by which "salvation" is effected then ends in the accomplishment of that for which the process was instituted. The "gospel" or "glad tidings" of this "salvation" must necessarily precede the salvation of which it is the "glad tidings," inasmuch as when the promised good is reached, the "glad tidings" of it are at an end. This is fully recognized by the Saviour, who said, "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." The theory of the "age to come," it seems to us, reverses this order, for it reaches the end (of the age) first, and afterward preaches the gospel to all nations. Paul also locates "victory" at the sounding of the last trump, which victory embraces exclusively the righteous dead, by a resurrection to incorruptibility, and a change of the righteous living to the same.

Our brother next says of our pamphlet—"The tabernacle and throne of David it takes up from the dust and desolation of centuries, and thrusts them in at the right hand of God on high!"

From this it is evident that our brother has more than flattered us by stating, in the preface to his article, that "the tract herewith noticed gives the points plainly;" for we have either failed thus to do, in this instance, or else he has failed to discover that which is "plainly" stated; for by reference to pp. 15–19 of the pamphlet his mistake will be apparent. We have placed the "anti-typical tabernacle of David" just where we believe James, Peter, Paul, Barnabas and others, gathered in council upon this question, placed it. See Acts xv. 1–17; Heb. ix. 8; viii. 1, 2. It is not our purpose at this time to incorporate in this article our views of the "Tabernacle of David," for its proper limits would not permit; but we would simply say that if the "Tabernacle of David" was to be built "that the residue of men" (Jews) and "all the Gentiles" "might seek after the Lord," it follows that if Gentiles are now successfully seeking the Lord this "tabernacle" is restored, unless an effect can precede its cause. The writer is a Gentile by nature, and humbly believes he has sought and found the Lord, hence he believes that this prophecy is fulfilled.

Our brother is opposed to the use of the word "forever" (aion) in the sense of "eternity." We are aware that aion has a limited sense, and is frequently thus used in the Scriptures; but we think the idea that it always has such meaning, instead of being advantageous to his view, is in some instances decidedly injurious to it. For instance he quotes, "Christ abideth forever" (aiona); also, "he that eateth this bread shall live forever" (aiona). Can it be that our brother believes that Christ abideth "into the age" only? Or can it be that the future life of the believer is restricted to the "age to come?"

We do not charge him with believing such an error. But, perhaps, he thinks his statement that after the "age to come," we are to go thence on to the "loftier cycle of seven times seven if God so please," relieves his view of this burden; but "seven times seven" are but forty-nine ages, and if restricted ones, must come to an end. It is said of saints in the future, "neither can they die any more;" hence they must outlive even forty-nine restricted ages. Now if Christ will never cease to "abide" and saints never cease to live, when the word aiona is used with reference to his abiding and their future life, it must cover eternity.

"If God so please" there will be such an "age to come" as our brother believes in, but we do not view it as God's pleasure.

But again he writes thus: "He (Christ) shall be a priest forever, eis aiona, into the age—to come." The words "to come" are inclosed within quotation marks (perhaps by mistake) as if they were part of the Scripture. This might convey to the mind of the careless reader the idea that such is the promise of God, but no such promise was ever made. It is simply "priest forever." Now we will apply our brother's restricted sense of aiona, and see what the result will be, in the light of Scripture testimony. The Em. Diag. renders Heb. v. 6 thus: "Thou art a priest for the AGE according to the order of Melchisedek." We will now let Paul inform us where and in what age Jesus officiates in this order. Heb. vi. 19, 20: "Which (hope) we have as an anchor of the life, both sure and firm, and entering the place "within the vail WHERE Jesus, a forerunner on our behalf entered, having become a high priest according to the order of Melchisedek."—Em. Diag. This proves that "within the vail" is the place where Christ officiates in this new order. Our brother believes that the Milchesedek priesthood embraces Kingly power, but strives to place it in the "age to come;" but Paul places it in the age during which Christ is "within the vail," hence the gospel aiona (age) is the one to which the promise refers. If Christ "were on earth he should not be a priest." He is not in the "order of Aaron," for with the end of the Jewish age there was a "change" in the law and in the "priesthood." This change was to the "order of Melchisedek." Why this change if Christ is but a priest? Aaron was but a priest, hence if Christ was no more he is in the same order. Melchisedek was priest and king at the same time; hence if Christ is in this order he must exercise kingly authority while he is a priest. It follows, therefore, that as Christ is a "priest for the age," during which he is "within the vail," when the "end of this age" is reached and Christ leaves his present position, he ceases to officiate in such capacity.

Again, our brother writes thus: "The times of refreshing from the (then returned) presence of the Lord—the times of restitution of all things spoken."—Acts iii. 19–21.

This is designed to convey the idea that the "times of refreshing" is after the Lord's return, and identical with the "times of restitution;" but if our brother is a Greek scholar, he is doubtless aware that a correct rendering of the passage places the "times of refreshing" before the second advent. The Em. Diag. gives verse 19 thus: "Reform, therefore, and turn, that your sins may be blotted out; so that seasons of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord." This rendering is supported by the Syriac, Bib. Un., Dr. Noyes, Adam Clarke, and others.

This makes the seasons of refreshing consequent upon repentance and conversion (not on Christ's coming), and gives the benefit of the same to those alone whose "sins" are "blotted out." This, however, is but an instance of the results of that theory which crowds into the future what really belongs to the present experience of Christians. The "times of restitution" are after Christ's coming. This we believe; but we have no faith in a restitution requiring a thousand years in its accomplishment, and ending with the revolt of the "nations which are in the four quarters of the earth" (after being subject to the peaceful reign of Christ for one thousand years!!) "the number of whom is as the sand of the sea."—See Rev. xx. 7, 8. If this is future, the nations will certainly have a very poor appreciation of Christ's administration. Base ingratitude!

If others can believe this, they must reciprocate our charity by permitting us to reject it. The restitution which we acknowledge is attended with no such denouement, but is the "new heavens and the new earth." Amen.

Br. Cook speaks freely of the "seventh day," which he thinks we ignore. If he means by this that because, after the creative work of the six days, God rested on the "seventh," therefore there will be a period of one thousand years after Christ comes as the anti-type of that seventh day, then we must still be considered as ignoring it. The theory that makes the seventh day typical of one thousand years in the future is purely inferential. There is not a text in the Scriptures in its favor. Neither will the "seventh day," as a type, fit the idea. It should be noticed that the six days were "evening-morning" days, while the seventh has no such limit. Now if the "seventh day" was designed, from the fact of God's resting upon it, to denote a rest in the future just one thousand years in duration, then it is incumbent upon those who hold that view to prove that the seventh day was not only a limited day, but that with its end God resumed the work of creation. The fact is, that God has "rested from his work" ever since the "seventh day" commenced, which fact does not fit the idea of a rest in the future of a thousand years, but would rather prove that with the end of six thousand years there would come an eternal rest.

Peter's language is sometimes pressed into service to support the idea that "the day of the Lord is one thousand years long," but it was never designed for that purpose.

Peter had stated that in the last days scoffers would come saying, "where is the promise of his (Christ's) coming?" This they would say in unbelief, alleging as a reason that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Peter then disproves this statement, by citing the instance of the flood, as proof that "all things" do not so continue. He then asserts that the same God who threatened the world with this flood of water, and had fulfilled his word, has also threatened to purge it by fire at Christ's coming.

He then proceeds to refute the charge of "slackness" on the part of God in fulfilling his promises, by asserting the eternity of His being as proof that they will all be fulfilled.

He says: "But beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is, with the Lord, as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness."—2 Pet. iii. 8, 9. The simple idea is that time, be it short (one day) or long (a thousand years), is, with an eternal being, as nothing. The promise of God, though made a thousand years ago, is as sure of fulfilment as if made but one day since. This is what Peter meant and all he meant. David said, "a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."—Psa. xc. 4. If we were to apply this reasoning of our brother on Peter's language to this of David, we might be led to believe that a "watch in the night" typified "one thousand years."

Our reviewer next proceeds to say of the writer: "He undermines his own hope and loses his life amid the falling lumber of his own logic." Again: "If his argument avail at all to end the Mediatorial Kingdom at the close of this groaning, dying age, then it avails also to end his hope and portion in rayless night!" Still again: "The Redeemer's reign in the power of his promised redemption, he hides away from the face of the earth as if ashamed of it."

We consider these statements (for they are not arguments) and others of like character, in which the article abounds, unworthy of a reply, unless it be found in the language of the following Scripture: 1 Cor. iv. 3–5; Rom. xiv. 4, 12, 13; Matt. vii. 1, etc.

Such statements as the above savor strongly of that exclusive spirit which characterizes the so-called "brethren of one faith," or "Christadelphians," who shut the doors of the kingdom of God to all who do not believe in their "age to come" view, and submit to immersion into the same.

We most heartily believe that the "Mediatorial Kingdom" does end at the "close of this groaning, dying age." So long as mortality continues there will be groaning, sorrow, tears and death; but when the last trump sounds "death is swallowed up in victory." Amen. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

Our view accords more glory to Christ than our brother's, we think, for while he merely acknowledges him now as a priest, we believe that he is our priest and king in the "reign of grace," and will also be King forever, subject to the Father, in the future "reign of glory!"

Br. C. says again of the writer: "He reverses the whole, and puts Jehovah in the place of adonai. Psa. cx. 5, has the Messiah (David's Lord, adonai) withdraw," etc.

Our brother here virtually admits that, if Christ does withdraw and Jehovah takes his place when the "day of wrath" begins, his theory is reversed. Dr. Adam Clarke, after speaking of "sixty-two of Dr. Kinnicotts and twenty-three of De Rossi's and some ancient editions, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Arabic and Anglo-Saxon" (O. T. MMS.) says of verse 5: "Jehovah is the reading of a great number of the MMS. in the above collections." Adonai, then, does "withdraw," according to this "great numbers" of MMS., thus "reversing" our brother's theory. But we are not confined to this Psalm for proof of our position.

When the "seventh trumpet" sounds (at Christ's coming) there are voices heard saying: "We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come: because thou hast TAKEN TO THEE thy great power and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come."—Rev. xi. 17, 18. If language can prove any thing, this proves the assumption of power by Jehovah, and the consequent withdrawal of Christ (adonai) who had previously exercised it, and also proves that "the day of his wrath" (Psa. cx. 5), is the day of Jehovah's wrath. See also 1 Cor. xv. 24–28. The mistake, if any, seems to belong to our brother.

We quote again from our reviewer: "Zion was the site of David's throne, the throne of the Lord, Mount Moriah (not Zion, as the tract has it) was the site of the temple." Again: "The geography of the temple on Mount Moriah gave it an absolute distinction and separation from the throne in Zion. The king and the priest had each their separate place and special service. But in this tract the geography, history, typical and dispensational truth involved, are put in endless confusion!"

Our brother here supposes he has found another mistake—this time a geographical one, and if his harsh statements about "endless confusion" were true, it would not be surprising if such were the case! But let us see. Dr. Adam Clarke thus comments on Gen. xxii. 2: "The land of Moriah—this is supposed to mean ALL the mountains of Jerusalem: comprehending Mount Gihon or Calvary, the Mount of Sion, and of Acra." Calmet says: "The place that was pitched on for erecting this magnificent structure (Solomon's Temple) was on the side of Mount Sion, called Moriah." Again says Dr. Clarke on Psa. xlviii. 2: "The ancient city of Jerusalem, which David took from the Jebusites, was on the south of Mount Zion, on which the temple was built; though it might be said to be more properly on Mount Moriah, which is one of the hills of which Mount Zion is composed." Perhaps, if our brother had been aware of these facts, he would not have made such a wholesale charge of "endless confusion." David says, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." If the temple was in the city, and the city on Mount Zion, it follows that both temple and throne were on Zion. The temple was the place where God dwelt (see Psa. lxxxi. 1), and from whence he promised to hear and bless his people, and if the reader will examine the following Scriptures he will learn that God "dwelt in Zion:" Psa. ix. 11; xviii. 6; xx. 1, 2; xlviii. 1, 2; lxv. 1, 2; lxxxiv. 7; lxix. 1, 2; cxxxiv. 3; cxxxv. 21; Isa. ii. 3; viii. 18; Jer. viii. 19; l. 28; Jon. ii. 4, 7.

In view of this, the "geographical" error also must belong to our brother.

We believe that the offices of king and priest were separate during the Jewish age, and so state in our pamphlet; but before they were separated, by the introduction of that age, they had been united in the person of Melchisedek. Christ is not in the order of any priest of the Jewish, but of Melchisedek, hence the two offices which were separated during the Jewish age again become united in the anti-type of Melchisedek. This is designed to show the superiority of the gospel dispensation over that of the law. Zion, with its city and temple, were all typical of things above, where Jesus now officiates in the "heavenly Jerusalem."—See Heb. xii. 18–25.

Lastly, our brother says: "Many will argue away the 'age to come,' though it is the only time for the Mediatorial Kingdom. They can't see how it can be. Of course not. 'The entrance of thy word giveth light.'"—Psa. cxix.

We were once favorable to the "age to come" view (but it never affected us just as it seems to affect our brother), but upon a more careful investigation of the subject, the "entrance" of what we humbly conceive to be God's "word" so enlightened our mind, that we were led to regard it as an error.

We conclude with the words of Jesus: "The children of this world (aion, age) marry and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain THAT world (age) and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 34–36.

Springfild, Mass.

The War in Heaven.

BY W. GARDNER.

"There appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun."—Rev. xii. 1. Heaven and the woman are synonymous terms for the true church.

Ver. 3. "There appeared another wonder in the heaven (in the pagan church), and behold a great red dragon," (the pagan emperor) having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns on his head." The seven heads, the seven forms of Roman government. The ten horns are the ten kings or kingdoms that broke off from Rome.

Ver. 4. "His tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and cast them to the earth." Tail denoting sensuality. The "stars" were ministers of the true church, that went over to the Pagan or Papal church—for better pay. Rev. i. 20 shows that stars and angels mean ministers. These stars or ministers are the angels of Jude 16, "Who kept not their first estate"—the angels of 2 Pet. ii. 4, "Who were cast down to hell," to the Catholic church. Rev. xii. 5, And she brought forth a man child, Christ, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron, as per Psa. ii. 9; cxlix. 8.

Ver. 6. "The woman (the true church) fled into the wilderness, (of the people, Ezek. xxi. 35) that they should feed her (with the bread of affliction, Deut. xvi. 3) a thousand two hundred and three-score days," i. e., years, just as Daniel said.

Ver. 7. "And there was war in heaven (the church, between Paganism and Papacy), Michael the Pope fought, and his angels, or servants, against the dragon, the Emperor.

Ver. 9. "And the great dragon was cast out," of the Pagan church. The word shows this war, this casting out was in 508. Milmon says: "Paganism had ruled in Rome 1100 years." Now, i. e., from 538, the Catholics ruled, but less Christian than before.

Ver. 10. "I heard a loud voice in heaven, (the Catholic church) saying, Now is come salvation, strength, and the kingdom of God." This boast was by the Catholics after they got into power.

Ver. 13. "The dragon (the Emperor) persecuted the woman. The woman fled into the wilderness, for a time, times and half a time;" showing that John was quoting the terms used by Daniel, to measure the 1260 years of Papal rule.

Ver. 17. "The dragon was wroth with the woman." 'Tis as true now as then; the government, whether Pagan, Papal or Protestant, is opposed to true religion. But as the Protestant church has fallen, it is going hand and glove with the world—'tis "hail fellows well met."

Washington, D. C., Feb., 1871.

Children's Department.

For the Young.

LUTHER'S SNOW SONG.

On a cold, dark night, when the wind was blowing hard and the snow was falling fast, Conrad, a worthy citizen of a little town in Germany, sat playing his flute, while Ursula, his wife, was preparing supper. They heard a sweet voice singing outside—

"Foxes to their holes have gone,
 Every bird unto its nest;
But I wander here alone,
 And for me there is no rest."

Tears filled the good man's eyes as he said, "What a fine, sweet voice! What a pity it should be spoiled by being tried in such weather!"

"I think it is the voice of a child. Let us open the door and see," said his wife, who had lost a little boy not long before, and whose heart was opened to take pity on the little wanderer.

Conrad opened the door, and saw a ragged child, who said—

"Charity, good sir, for Christ's sake!"

"Come in, my little one," said he. "You shall rest with me for the night."

The boy said, "Thank God," and entered. The heat of the room had made him faint, but Ursula's kind care soon revived him. They gave him some supper, and then he told them that he was the son of a poor miner, and wanted to be a scholar. He wandered about and sang, and lived on the money people gave him. His kind friends would not let him talk much, but sent him to bed. When he was asleep they looked in upon him, and were so pleased with his pleasant countenance that they determined to keep him, if he was willing. In the morning they found that he was only too glad to remain with them.

They sent him to school, and afterwards he went into a monastery. There one day he found a Bible, which he read, and learned the way of life. The sweet voice of the little singer became the strong echo of the good news—"Justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Conrad and Ursula, when they took that little street-singer into their house, little thought that they were nourishing the great champion of the Reformation. The poor child was Martin Luther! "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers."

The following is the whole of the song which Luther sang on that memorable night:

Lord of heaven! lone and sad,
 I would lift my heart to Thee;
Pilgrim in a foreign land,
 Gracious Father, look on me.
I shall neither faint nor die,
While I walk beneath Thine eye.

I will stay my faith on Thee,
 And will never fear to tread
Where the Saviour Master leads;
 He will give me daily bread.
Christ was hungry, Christ was poor—
He will feed me from His store.

Foxes to their holes have gone,
 Every bird unto its nest;
But I wander here alone,
 And for me there is no rest.
Yet I neither faint nor fear,
For the Saviour Christ is here.

If I live, He'll be with me;
 If I die, to Him I go.
He'll not leave me, I will trust Him,
 And my heart no fear shall know.
Sin and sorrow I defy,
 For on Jesus I rely.

—Selected.

Remember, day by day, to ask God to bless and keep and care for you.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus. Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents; postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 23.
WHOLE NUMBER 357.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

NO CONDEMNATION IN THE ATONEMENT.

BY ALFRED H. CLEAVES.

IF words have a signification anywhere, they must certainly have one in the language of him who spake as never man spake; and of whom it is said, "his word was with power."

The characteristic of his ministry was health for the invalid; and comfort for the mourner was the charm that made his presence sought: life from the dead was in his word; and he brought immortality to light through his Gospel.

He declared of his words that they were spirit and life; and when a subject was required upon which to predicate a faith, he smote the enemy at the gate, and brought forth Lazarus from the prison house, a living witness and an infallible proof of his quickening power; and the poor of the people trusted in him.

While the weeping sisters sought his face, he proclaimed himself the resurrection and the life; and to those who believed in him he gave assurance that death should not destroy their life.

He testified that some should live and beleve in him who should never die; and an eminent apostle afterward spake by this word to comfort those who sorrowed for the sleeping, when he taught the Thessalonions, that God would raise the dead in Christ, and change the living saints.

This comforting language expressed no subordinate theme in the Saviour's teaching; it declared the aim and end of his undertaking.

When he appeared as a light shining in the darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not, this life was the light of men; which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

To as many as received him, gave he power to become the sons of God; and they passed from darkness into this marvelous light: there was no darkness in him; but, how great the darkness of those in whom this light has become darkness!

Is there any condemnation in him?—"He came not to condemn, but to save the world." "This is the condemnation . . . that men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

How does he affect wicked men, then, in the act of atonement? If a person should inherit an appetite for some pleasure procuring poison, like opium or tobacco, and find when tested that his lust controlled his will, he would seem an object of pity rather than censure; but if a reliable physician should offer him a remedy, or counterpoison, and he were to refuse the cure, his weakness would no longer present an excuse, and pity in those who beheld him would give place to contempt. So in the atonement of Christ; the condemnation of wicked men is not secured by his presence, but merely made manifest.

Had he not appeared, then no test could have been produced in the law as it came by Moses which would have made a distinction between the good and evil.

The law condemned all alike; while it convinced all men of sin, and its consequences, it made no distinction between those men, who knowing the judgment of God, that men who committed sin were worthy of death, took pleasure in sin, and in those who engaged in it; and those who felt to exclaim, in view of their condition under such an administration, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

It was to remedy this very defect that the atonement was provided: however the mind of man was affected by his outward circumstances, that law secured no advantage to the person who consented to its requirements in spirit while he failed to fulfil it in his actions; it was not applicable to the mind, it applied to the outward conduct, it came in the letter, its demands were specific, and it killed alike those who sinned wilfully, and those who sinned through infirmity: it was weak through the flesh, or an inability of men in the flesh to keep it: designed as a rule of life for the perfect, it gave life to such, and to none others; it made nothing perfect that lacked this quality; but the bringing in of a better hope did.

This better hope is made such by its being a better provision in the Divine government as it comes by Christ, than any thing which appears in the ministration of Moses.

As a law of sin and death; as an arrangement for wicked men, and a means of excluding evil, it was all that was necessary, and has never been superseded as a regulation for sin; but remains the strength of sin to-day; but as an agency for punishing the offender and leaving the innocent in purpose, it was insufficient.

The law of the Spirit of life in Christ is an application of the same law in a form which enables God to be just and the justifier of him who believes in Christ; it enables those who walk not after the flesh, or carnal appetites, to secure by faith what they fail to secure in moral training, or their walk after the teachings of the Spirit, or a spiritual law; for the law of Moses was the law of God, and this law was spiritual; but the best of men were carnal, sold under sin. God, in sending his Son into the world as he did, condemned sin in the flesh, and by this act made it possible for those who wish to honor the Divine government to secure in themselves a fulfilment of the righteousness of this law.

The atonement is a provision,—not to justify sinners unconditionally, and secure to them without exception, a resurrection from the dead, as church fathers and modern theologists have taught; but to enable those who prefer the presence and favor of God to their Adamic estate of depravity, to pass from death unto life; and to be accounted hereafter worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead.

There is nothing of threatening therefore in the atonement; it is not a means of condemning the world only in the sense of exposing guilt.

The words of Moses are sufficient for accusation, and the law which made sin known is calculated to condemn the offender; but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ: if all the world should reject him, their infirmities would furnish no excuse, for he furnished in his sacrifice an antidote and a corrective for the sins of inheritance: he was lifted up as Moses raised the serpent; not to impose a curse, not to make salvation compulsory; but, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life.

It is not requisite that all should live again in order to choose death; but with death upon them they may choose to remain under its reign, or turn to reign in life by one Christ Jesus.

He who was dead, but is alive, and alive for evermore, says, "behold! I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." There is a government which condemns; and a government which makes alive. God administers his law for the wicked by Moses; but "all who believe in Christ are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses."

BOSTON, MASS., March 3, 1871.

PROGRESS.

[WHEN such articles as the following appear in "Orthodox" papers, we may well say "Progress." It is the article referred to last week by Dr. Finley in his letter. It is taken from "The Presbyterian" of January 8, 1871, a leading paper of that denomination, published in Philadelphia, Pa.—EDITOR.]

MILK FOR BABES

IN JOHN BROWN'S SHORT CATECHISM FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

We are reminded, in several places in the New Testament, that babes in Christ ought to have a special diet. They are to be "fed with milk, and not with meat," for "strong meat belongs to them that are of full age." It is a matter of course that when we do give them a taste of meat, we choose that which is tender and sound; and as long as we use milk, we seek for pure milk—neither soured, skimmed, nor adulterated. We do not take its purity for granted because it is white and liquid. Bad meat proclaims itself at once, but bad milk needs tasting and testing. We get the force of the figure, therefore, if we are reminded not only to use milk and not meat for babes, but also pure milk carefully tested.

Our divinity doctors have been very careful to provide for the older children strong meat, fit to make sound men and women in Christ. Who can over-praise the Shorter Catechism? Who will make it, even more than it has been, a praise and glory through the Church? When our adversaries wish to make charges against us, they use the Confession; but it is the Catechism that strengthens our friends and builds up our children. It gives no uncertain sound any where. Every word makes its point—terse, rich, and full. The only regret that may be entertained is, that no edition has been authorized leaving the Ten Commandments to be their own interpreters, and so shortening, by twenty-seven not vital questions, the summary of the gospel. Of a truth the Church has been very careful for her children's meat.

But how about the milk for babes? Has the Church made provision for them, or is it satisfied that they are well provided for? Is it possible that they have been neglected? It would seem so. The Church has prepared only meat, but no milk. We have no catechism, prepared by authority, for that tender age when lisping lips first take up the form of sound words. Our publication societies and private publishers have tried to meet the want with various catechisms for young children, and our own Boards have not neglected the matter. But nothing as yet from any source has been so satisfactory that its worth has carried it into our churches. The supply is abundant, such as it is; but nothing has wide reputation, except perhaps that very Catechism named above, which least deserves it. The result is that we have, as it were, an open market, where milk for babes is bought and sold. All sorts of people bring it; almost every church and family buys it; and they take their own risk as to whether they are getting the pure milk of the word, or milk from unsound sources, or good milk soured, or hurtful compounds nicely labelled, in which Christ's name appears, but not Christ's grace and glory. Perhaps the most conspicuous instance of an old name and a good name carrying a bad article is in the case before us.

I heard lately a little, loving girl of seven reciting to her mother from the beginning of Brown's Catechism. She was not a "little innocent," nor a "little angel," but she had a tender place in Christ's regard, and she was a child of prayer and of loving Christian example, and Christ's arms were open for her. And she had a heart—well, what kind of a heart had she? That is just the question she was answering.

"Q. What kind of a heart have you by nature?

"A. A heart filled with all unrighteousness.

"Q. Does your wicked heart make all your thoughts, words, and actions sinful?

"A. Yes; I do nothing but sin.

"Q. Can you of yourself reform and renew your wicked heart?

"A. No; I am dead in trespasses and sins.

"Q. What, then, can change and melt your rebellious, hard, and stony heart?

"A. Nothing but God's almighty power and free grace."

What a natural, artful confession to put into a child's mouth! The only comfort was that the words were utterly unmeaning to her. And the mother's heart revolted at the hard sayings—not because they had no doctrinal truth in them—but because they had no spirit of Christ in them, and no aptness to touch the child's heart, but rather to make it hard and stubborn.

Let us examine this John Brown's Catechism a little more closely. It has served five generations. Perhaps it is time for it to die. It is possible that we understand the gospel in this nineteenth century—at least the gospel as applied to children—better than they did in the eighteenth. When we want to comprehend the richness, the fulness, and tenderness of the gospel for sinners, we go back rather to the seventeenth than to the eighteenth century. Can any one surpass Bunyan on his own ground? In reading almost any where in his century we are touched with wonder, that with all our modern thought, they are still our fathers in Christ Jesus. The eighteenth century dealt with coldness and blight. We are suffering from it even still. The presence and influence of this Catechism is a sign against us. If this needs proof, a slight examination will furnish it.

I have quoted some hard sayings—unnatural, almost repulsive from a child's lips or a child's heart; shall we go on with such quotations?

"Q. What will become of you if you die in your sins?

"A. I must go to hell with the wicked.

"Q. What kind of a place is hell?

"A. A place of endless torment; being a lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

"Q. What is original sin?

"A. It is that sin in which I was conceived and born.

"Q. Doth original sin wholly defile you, and is it sufficient to send you to hell, though you had no other sin?

"A. Yes.

"Q. What other sin besides original sin have you?

"A. I have actual sin also.

"Q. What is actual sin?

"A. It is the sin which I daily commit in thought, word, and deed.

"Q. What are the wages of sin?

"A. Death and hell.

"Q. What are you then by nature?

"A. I am an enemy to God, a child of Satan, and an heir of hell.

"Q. What will the wicked for ever do in hell?

"A. They will roar, curse, and blaspheme God."

What shall we say about this? Is it pearls and rubies of wisdom as it drops from infant lips? Does it really give them a true idea of their condition? Is it food fit for children? It seems to me rather as if it would spoil what little of the sweetness and savor of the gospel they might get elsewhere.

Let us go on, into questions that are wrongly conceived, and answers that are untrue. We can find plenty of them, for this is a hard book—not like the gospel. There is no love in it, no sorrow for sin, no loving help, no dear Saviour with open arms. Salvation from wrath is the end; heaven is a refuge; Christ is a door; holiness is a condition; God a terror, and death is at hand. What else could have inspired these questions?—"By whom, think you, to escape God's wrath and curse?" "What is the only way of getting safe to heaven?" And notice the answer to this question:—"Why must you be so earnest in prayer for an interest in Christ, newness of heart, and pardon of sin?" Answer—"That I may live always in readiness for death." And he leaves Christ altogether out of his final question—"What will your sincere prayers and holy life end in at last?"—as if these were the end of the law for righteousness.

This failure to give the children simple and true views of God, Christ, faith, and holiness, is continued in the pictures of heaven:

"What will the righteous for ever do in heaven?"

"They will behold the glory and sing the praises of God in Christ."

Would that heaven enchant either young or old, if the Bible did not add to it Christ's blessed presence and face, and the re-union of saints, and rest, and peace, and purity, and glad service, and glory? No wonder that a book like the "Gates Ajar" has run through so many editions, when this Brown's Catechism is in so many of our schools and houses, to create the home-sickness and the weariness of them that have no hope.

We might find fault with the taste that speaks of the Virgin Mary as "a mean woman." We might find fault with the theology which teaches us that Christ bore "infinite wrath;" or that teaches a purely Episcopal or Romish view of baptism, with fictitious engagements which must have been made by sponsors, and where there is no mention of the parents. But though these points are highly important, they are too far above the children to harm them, except as they cling to the memory, to be stumbling-blocks by and by. But what shall we say of this in italics, as if it were a scriptural assertion?—"God, out of Christ, is a consuming fire." And what will pastors say when that famous unscriptural text, over which so many inquirers have stumbled, and which Dr. Spencer, in his "Sketches," tried so hard to root out, is located here at last also in italics—"The prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord."

We might gather other points, and we would do so if more were needed to draw attention to this Catechism. Enough has been presented by quotation to show its unfitness for use. Why may we not, then, hope for its disappearance? Let us do honor to the memory of the good man, its author, by conceding that he failed in his effort, and by letting his failure drop into oblivion. This tardy justice to him should have been done a hundred years ago. Let us be watchful over the tone of the piety of the coming generation. We want them to start right. We do not want them to learn a gospel of works or a gospel of fear. We want them to love Christ.

The idea of Christ which is impressed on their young heart will affect both the manner of their conversion and the spirit of their future service.

R. S.

IMMORTAL-SOULISM.

THE ROCK UPON WHICH CHRISTIANITY STRUCK AND HAS BEEN ALMOST DASHED TO PIECES.

How can we account for the acceptance by the Christian world of the unscriptural dogma, the immortality of the soul? The Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, holds out as clearly as the sun shining in his strength that "all the wicked will God destroy." This information our kind Father in love has given us in his word, which, if we will, becomes a lamp to our minds to enlighten them, but if men will not accept it as truth, God will send them strong delusion instead, and their religion will consist of beliefs even ridiculous for men whose minds were made capable of receiving the truth.

In 1 Timothy, vi. 15, 16, it is written that God is "the only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality." This is very emphatic; but our human creeds say that man also has immortality. We call Paul's writings inspired, we Christians profess to believe this. He also says that man is of the earth, earthy, that no good thing dwells within us. Now we ask, dear brethren, which do you believe—your creeds, which say you are immortal, or an inspired apostle, who says that God only has this attribute?

The prejudice in favor of creeds, and man's unparalleled carelessness in regard to what is truth, should startle and astonish us. Let us look at some things in regard to which God has allowed us to walk in gross darkness, for robbing him of the glory of alone possessing immortality. Of these delusions, we mention spiritualism, with all its abominations: apostolic succession of men, instead of God's Spirit to lead his church: the assumption of powers and titles, which detract from Christ's dignity and office. Again, as a result of this delusion, is men's fondness for such things as water baptism, restricted communion, etc., not seeing with Paul that there is but one baptism in the Christian system—that of the Holy Ghost: also, the doctrine of going to heaven at death, or down to eternal torments. And, notwithstanding Jesus said that by the preaching of the apostles he would tell the world of the truth plainly, which the apostles did without giving an intimation of immortal souls going to heaven or hell at death, yet men insist on taking Christ's parables, those beautiful figures, and creating out of them a literal place of torment on the one hand and an ethereal heaven on the other.

God, by his servant Moses, in the book of Genesis, tells us how man and the rest of the animals were made out of the dust of the ground. Theologians tell us God breathed into Adam's nostrils an immortal soul. Dr. Adam Clarke, referring to the death of Moses, twenty-five hundred years after the creation of Adam, says that up to that time the Jews had not heard of an immortal soul. Taking Clarke for authority, as most theologians do, how can they reconcile this great contradiction. Moses was the great lawgiver of the Jews, yet had never told them of an immortal soul.

Let us look at a little of the proof of what Clarke says. Moses informs us of Adam's creation, his fall, sentence and execution; says Adam's sentence returned him to the ground out of which he was taken; and not even in the promise of Christ to the seed of the woman, do we get from Moses one word about an immortal soul. Moses informs us of the flood, that terrible destruction of mankind, of beast and fowl: he tells us of God's familiarity with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob: of the birth of their children, concerning their marriages, etc.; God talked with them as friend talks with friend—but not one word does Moses say about an immortal soul within them. But the apostle Paul says, they "looked for a city which hath foundations," which he calls the hope of the fathers—the resurrection from the dead, and not a home in man's etherial heaven.

The Bible does not convey the idea that man was made for heaven, but for earth; was made conditionally immortal. It was on earth he was promised life if obedient: it was here he sinned, and was sentenced to return to dust again; it was here a Redeemer was promised, came, suffered for man's sin, died and was buried, rose again—the whole transaction, first of man then of his Deliverer, all had reference to this earth. Paul says that was not first which was spiritual, but natural—of the earth, earthy. The second Adam was the spiritual man. But we feel to lay down our pen when we reflect on the plain teaching of God's word regarding the total destruction of man by the flood, of the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, of Pharaoh and his host, of Korah and his company, of the Israelites bitten by serpents—whose destruction Peter says, was given for our examples.

What really Christian mind, taught of God, can fail, as he reads the book of Job, the Psalms, the Prophets, to see the distinct teaching of man's utter want of immortality, and his sure destruction if he dies in his sins. Paul and the rest of the apostles take up this great truth, so plainly taught by Christ himself, that the wages of sin is death—not torment but a return to dust. Could anything prove more clearly than does the animal sacrifices that we have no life in us but our blood life? As the victim's blood was poured out, man was reminded of his sentence to death—not to spiritual death, but to such a death as the animal died, a physical death—and as the remains of the animal were taken without the camp and destroyed with fire, man's complete destruction was represented.

We know it is humiliating for proud, boastful man, who has through false teaching assumed so much to himself, his titles, his theories, his supposed wisdom, etc., to take a true survey of himself as God made and sees him; no future life or goodness except as it flows from Christ our LIFE-GIVER. We hail Christ, then, as our spiritual life while here, and our resurrection life when he comes again, to give us immortality—the hope of the Gospel, and brought to light by the Gospel.

Before closing this subject, we wish to show some evidence from some of the laws that God gave to Israel. If any were taken in adultery, God commanded to stone them to death; if a man was born in certain particulars physically imperfect, he was to be put to death; if children were persistently disobedient, they were to be put to death. Now, we ask, had such persons immortal souls, and were they, as theology teaches, in value more than ten thousand worlds? Could a holy, merciful and all-wise God act so out of harmony with his just judgment and revealed goodness? If it were not for the spoliations of theologians and creeds, men would answer in a body, instinctively, No! The Jewish church—the priesthood, the ritual, the blood taken by Aaron into the holy place, representing man's doom as well as the life-blood of Christ—the coming Lamb of God who should atone for a lost world and restore life again—all showed most plainly that in us was no eternal life; that it was all to be obtained through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead.

All glory to Jesus; he is our life, the great conqueror of sin and the grave. And unto God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be glory forever. Amen.

A. N. B.

—The Nazarene.

A NEW THOUGHT—PERHAPS.

"THE GLORY OF GOD TO FILL THE EARTH."

BY ELD. J. B. COOK.

THERE are three leading thoughts to associate with "the glory" as seen by Moses, the prophets, and the apostles with Jesus in the mount.

1. The glory of God, when revealed, has enlightened, elevated and blessed his people. The clearest and most advanced stages of Divine revelation to our world have embraced the brightest displays of this glory. This is so.

Moses in the mount—Moses coming down from God, was enshrouded and infused with this glory. Then the revelation of Moses transcended all that had gone before, or after, for over 4000 years.

The most honored prophets and kings of Israel were those who shared most of this glory.

The Messiah was the Sun of the transfiguration glory. He was the centre of this Divine manifestation, from his birth at Bethlehem to his ascension from Olivet. Thus, those who have been most radiant with this glory have been the pre-eminent instructors and exemplars of mankind.

2. Those who have been best instructed, and brought nearest to Moses, under the law, and to Messiah through the gospel, have been the most favored, most enlightened, most civilized, and most blessed of men.

3. It follows, therefore, that the highest need of our world is, the further disclosure of this glory, and "Presence of the Lord." This will fulfil "the times of re-giving Life."—Acts iii. 19. This will consummate and crown God's "good-will to men." The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, end up in this glory and kingdom that will "fill the whole earth." Christ in his glory is Christ in his kingdom. 1 Pet. i. 17. And there is the blessing of the nations. Psa. lxxii. 17–20. "The glory of God" over Israel assured their deliverance—their national salvation. Ex. xiii. 21; xiv. 19. Thus it will be again. Luke ii. 32. It was not their calamity, but their unfailing security that God was over or among them. His temporary abandonment of them—his absence on account of sin—occasioned their calamity and curse. Deut. xxviii. 15–29.

But again: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he will appear in his glory."—Psa. cii. 13–21. His saints shall then "appear with him in glory." "Moses and Elijah"—the resurrected and translated—were in the mount and glory of the kingdom, while the remnant, in the flesh — Peter, James and John—found it "good to be there."—Matt. xvii. 4.

This subject of "glory" is thus sealed, sanctified and set home to the heart of every well-informed believer; so that all argument (based on our inability to endure this glory, to prove no proper age to come, and that all men, except the saints, must perish at its revelation) is formed in utter mis-apprehension of this subject, as a whole.

Truth is always consistent with the promise. Faith, hope and love all cry: Reveal thy glory, O God; and let "all flesh see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."—Isa. xl. 5; Zech. viii. 20–22.

The argument against the revelation of "the glory of God," in association with the fulfilment of his promise, is in principle like that of the popular preachers against the second coming. But, no! Christ will come in this glory, in order to accomplish "the fulness of the blessing of the gospel." He is the King of glory. Amen.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

RELIGION is something more than opinion; something more than ecclesiastical relationship; something more than ceremony. It is not only light, but life; its seat is not only in the head, but in the heart; it is a thing of the will, affections, and conscience, as well as of the intellect, and memory, and bodily organs. It is a deep conviction of guilt in the sight of God, a humbling sense of corruption of nature, true faith in Christ as the great atonement, peace through belief in the gospel, supreme gratitude and love to God, a spiritual and heavenly mind, and a holy life.

It is the mind of Christ, the image of God, the Bible lodged in the heart as the rule of the inward and outer life—a thing God-wrought, heaven-descended and eternal.

A KANSAS pastor declined an addition of a hundred dollars to his salary for this reason, among others, that the hardest part of his labor heretofore had been in the collection of his salary, and it would kill him to try to collect a hundred dollars more.

PATIENCE.

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

THE practical apostle, in writing to the twelve tribes scattered abroad says, "My brethren count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Many christians have felt and still feel that patience is about the hardest christian grace to attain to, and let have easy work in his or her heart.

It seems specially hard in these last days, when there is so much accomplished in a day, so much running to and fro, at railroad speed, and communications go like the lightning. We are apt to partake of the spirit of our surroundings, and feel that we must accomplish such and such things, when we ought to say in quiet patient submission, "If the Lord will, we shall live and do this or that."

The Lord sees this impatient ambition for worldly aggrandisement in his children, and he knows it would be for their hurt, so he lets them fall into divers temptations. They are apt to fret and feel badly about it; but what does James say? "Count it all joy." Why, this is hard to endure. What makes you talk so, James? This is a trial, but know that the trying of your faith works patience; and let patience have her perfect work.

Patience is not of natural growth. We are naturally self-willed and impatient. How is this to be got out of our proud hearts? for out it must come, if we are to be perfect and entire wanting nothing. Paul says, tribulation will do it. He says, "we glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience." But we must let the patience have easy, perfect work, otherwise the tribulation will do us no good. In another place Paul says, "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous, nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them who are exercised thereby."

How long are we thus patiently and quietly to endure? It is often hard when we are reviled, not to revile again. We go aside, choke down the grief that is rising up, or weep submissively before the Lord in our closets, then go out and meet the reviler just as if nothing had happened. We ask, how long? The same faithful apostle tells us, Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. So there is a time coming when the patient will be rewarded; when the meek shall inherit the earth. But we must see to it, that we are not impatient and expect the fruit before it is fully ripe. "Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Who would blame us for longing for the Lord to come? for then and not till then the meek are to inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

Concerning our blessed Master, it is written, "In the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayer, and supplications, with strong crying and tears unto him who was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. The servant is not above his lord. If the bitter cup is pressed to our lips, don't let us dash it from us, but drink it, knowing the jewel is in the bottom.

David says, I waited patiently for the Lord; or, in waiting I waited for the Lord, and he inclined unto me and heard my cry. We know that David committed rash and foolish acts, like other men, and was severely punished for them; but he always humbled himself submissively before the Lord, and tried to do better next time. He learned to wait patiently for the Lord, or the Lord's time, and so he was brought out of great troubles, his feet set upon a rock, and his goings established; also a new song put in his mouth. Praise to our God. So he says, "Blessed is that man who maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud." He also teaches others saying, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him; fret not thyself because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass. For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth."

Do we want an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that never shall fade or pass away. Also immortality and eternal life, so we can enjoy it all amidst unalloyed bliss? We ask, Do we really desire all this felicity? If we do, then let us wait patiently on the Lord, for "those that wait upon the Lord they shall inherit the earth . . . and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." O how glorious! What more can we ask? "Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he will strengthen thine heart: wait I say on the Lord."

NEW YORK, March, 1871.

GOOD HEALTH.—The March number is received.

CONTENTS.—The Water we drink; War Surgery; On Poisons; Public Murder and Suicide; The Opthalmoscope—What it Is and How it is Used; What to Eat; Condiments; Consumption—General Pathology of the Lungs; Prof. Brown Sequard in Boston; The Alchemists; Courier Pigeons.

TERMS.—Monthly 20 cents; yearly $2; three copies $5.

Published by ALEXANDER MOORE, 11 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 15, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

DEFERRED ARTICLES.

OUR correspondents must have patience at the non-appearance of their articles. We have a large package of them on hand which we have not had time or strength yet, even to examine. Some are long, and some badly written. These latter, especially, are hard cases for our head, however valuable the matter may be in them. We shall do the best we can, and as fast as possible.

THE CHRISTIAN PASSOVER.

OR, THE LORD'S SUPPER.

THE time for this "Feast" the present season, comes on the 5th of April. It will be celebrated on the evening of that day by such as choose to unite in it, in this city, the place is not yet fixed on, but most likely it will be in the Cooper Institute where it has been for two or three years past; but definite notice of it will be given in the HERALD OF LIFE before the time. All who love the Lord Jesus, and are disposed to unite with us on the occasion, even if they do not accept our belief, that the only scriptural season for its celebration is a yearly anniversary of its institution, will be gladly received, as it is the Lord Table, and each individual is responsible for his own act. Let each one examine himself or herself, and so let them eat.

CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

IT is not often that we find this grace in secular papers, and still less frequently in so-called religious ones. Hence, we were not a little gratified with the following notice in the "Granite State Free Press," published in Lebanon, N. H. With its Editor we never had any personal acquaintance. He is a prominent member of the Baptist church in that town, and his kind notice of us and our paper calls for our acknowledgment. We thank Br. CHENEY for his liberality in this matter; and say of his paper, it is the very best country secular paper we know of. We wish him all success in conducting it. He speaks as follows:

"We are glad to see that Rev. George Storrs, editor of the Herald of Life, New York, a native of this town, who during the winter lay for several weeks apparently at the point of death, has so far recovered as to be able to resume in full his editorial labors. His disease, we believe, was pneumonia. The Herald of Life is the organ of that class of Christians who call themselves Life Believers—that is, who think the reward of well doing is eternal life, and the penalty of incorrigible sin eternal death, and there will be no resurrection of the impenitent dead. Mr. Storrs is a vigorous writer, and urges his peculiar views with great force and in a most kindly spirit. This paper is a model of neatness typographically, and is published at two dollars a year."

MAN'S ORIGIN AND NATURE.

THE notion that man, by creation, is possessed of an immortal entity, called soul; and that he was created holy, originally, we think, is the foundation of nearly all the theological errors and superstitions that have bewildered, blinded, and made infidels of a large part of Christendom, or those where this corrupt theology has been promulgated.

The account of man's creation, as given by Moses, is very simple and easy of comprehension; and when duly considered commends itself as the only rational account of man's origin and nature: especially when we gaze on the facts in man's death, or disorganization.

Man's origin is the same as that of any other of the animal creation. Compare Gen. ii. 7 and 19. "The LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground." . . . "And out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air."

Thus it appears the origin of man is precisely the same as that of other living creatures on the earth. The only real difference is this—Man's organization made him capable of higher intellectual development than any other of the animal creation; and for this reason, he was placed at the head of all the others, and to have "dominion over" them.

As to holiness, there is no evidence in the Mosaic account that man was in possession of any such quality more than other animals. "God saw every thiag that he had made, and behold it was very good:" Gen. i. 31. All were alike good, but not a word of the holiness of any of them. Holiness is not a creation—it cannot be created—but it is a development. As such it can only be produced in a created being by trial. In order to its development there must be law to which the creature is required to yield obedience; and there must be intelligence sufficient to comprehend that law, without which no law can have any claim to active obedience. Where such intellectual capacity does not exist—whatever the nature of the life in possession—there can be no claim for moral obedience, and hence neither holiness or sin has any existence in that being—the thing is impossible.

Man, of all the animal creation, alone—so far as we know—had intellectual capacity sufficient to understand law—requirements or prohibition—addressed to mind; or a capacity to determine from words addressed to his understanding what his course of conduct should be. This capacity was the basis, the foundation, for the development of a moral character above that of a mere animal. But such development could not be made without a law addressed to man's intellect; and that law must be adapted to his understanding or comprehension. As yet he is but an animal and can only be approached as an animal man. Hence the law must relate to the action of his animal nature. In harmony with this fact we find his CREATOR thus approaching him, having provided for the new formed creature "every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food," He placed man in the midst of these delights and bid him regale himself without restriction, with one exception. That one exception constituted the law—a law the highest of which man's nature was then capable, and yet the most trifling that it was possible to give. This law was addressed to man's intelligence, and related to the regulation of his animal appetites; or was addressed to him as an animal, such as he really was.

Hence he was tested, or tried as an animal for the development of a moral character; which trial if man obeyed his CREATOR would have raised him above a mere animal—or above the government of animal appetites—and would have constituted him holy. It would have developed a mind having a supreme regard to his MAKER'S will. This is holiness. Such a development would have—if persevered in—proved him worthy of continued life; hence would have secured him access to the "tree of life," and he would have "lived forever."

But a contrary development would unfit him for life, by making him out of harmony with the CREATOR, preferring his own will to that of God's; hence the propriety of its being distinctly stated to the man, that if he did show himself determined to make his own will supreme he should "surely die:" discord under the government of God could not be tolerated. Every thing that has life must come into harmony with God or discord be eternal. Hence when Adam developed the fact that he chose to give the supremacy to himself, or to his animal being, rather than to his CREATOR, he, in fact, chose death rather than renounce animal gratification. Thus, Adam had "Life and Death set before" him. He chose the latter—fell under his animal nature, and shared the fate of all other animals, but death was just as much more to be dreaded by him as his intellect was greater than theirs. Not, however, because he had any sufferings to endure "beyond the grave," for his Creator made no such communication to him: it was, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." So far as we have any inspired authority, such was the end of the animal Adam.

In the whole account man is spoken of, treated as, and his destiny decided, as a unit; not as part mortal and part immortal. Such a position is a pure, unfounded, unscriptural, and mischievous assumption; and has filled Christendom with superstition, notions about purgatory, ghost worshippers, worshipping the dead, spirit-rappers, doctrines of demons, and infidelity; all the natural result and offspring of corrupting the word of God in relation to man's origin, nature, and destiny.

Adam's posterity are on trial as animal beings, like as he was. They are indeed, under another and different dispensation. His failure was final by one transgression, and the penalty certain to follow; admitting of no remission: His posterity have been subjected to death "in hope." That is—though they die their death may be abrogated, or abolished, by a union with the second Adam, Jesus the Messiah. The animal nature must be subjected, or brought under "subjection" to an intellect purified by the Spirit and word, or will of God. The dispensation we are under admits of repentance toward God, for past failures, and remission of sins past, through union with the second Adam—the LIFE-GIVER—so that death may be abrogated, or annulled. By this union with the second Adam, the Spirit of God is received, the intellect, or mind, becomes in harmony with God, and is subjected to His will, denying the animal nature, keeping it under and bringing it into subjection to the will, or word of God. See Rom. viii. 9–15; 1 Cor. ix. 26, 27. Thus living—thus dying—death cannot hold them; it cannot prevail to keep them under its power; they are members of the second Adam, and must share in his revival into life, clothed with incorruptibility and immortality.

It will be seen that men are still dealt with as units, and as animal beings; naturally subject to mortality, corruption, and death; and that in order to escape these, the animal, or flesh, is to be mortified—made to keep its place, as a servant—while the will of God is to be supreme, and the animal be made to give way wherever it sets up a plea opposed to the will of God, as revealed in His word of truth. Those who thus act, during their probationary state, continue to be temples of the Holy Spirit, which dwelleth in them, and whereby they are sealed unto the day of redemption. See 1 Cor. vi. 19; 2 Tim. i. 14; Eph. iv. 30. "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11.

The great work of redemption is to redeem, or deliver, men from sin—the dominion of the flesh, or animal nature—and from corruption, or death. To puzzle men with metaphysical and theological notions about immaterialism—immortal souls—undying souls—half alive and half dead—part in the grave and a part in heaven, or hell, or purgatory, and all such anti-scriptural fancies, is to "shut up the kingdom of heaven against men," by bewildering their minds, and making the impression that religion is all fancy, about which the priest alone has any concern; and in the final result to land men in utter indifference to all religion. Shall men continue to be thus deceived by traditions?

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD TO ABRAHAM.—NO. 1.

THIS subject we consider one of the greatest importance we have ever presented to the consideration of our readers; because, if this promise and oath are equivocal, or uncertain of fulfilment, what foundation have we on which to stand in relation to any other promise supposed to be made by God? All other promises are made doubtful, if this is proved of uncertain meaning. No promise of God was ever made with greater clearness or more solemnly proclaimed. To treat it, therefore, with neglect or as if it might be explained to suit human theories, is to undermine all faith in the words of God.

HAS THIS PROMISE AND OATH EVER BEEN FULFILLED?

Let us present the subject as it appears in the Bible. God had called Abram out of his country to go into another; "unto a land that I will show thee." He then told him, "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. xii. 1–3.

After this, when Abram was ninety-nine years old, God appeared to him, and said, "As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations: neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham; for a father of many nations have I made thee . . . I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant," etc. After this, when God was about to overthrow Sodom and Gomorrah, He said, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do, seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?"—Gen. xviii. 17, 18.

At length Isaac is born, the heir of the same promises, and when he was grown to some years, the LORD called Abraham to go to a certain place and offer up his son Isaac "for a burnt offering." Abraham made every preparation to carry into execution this command of God. He had gone to the place pointed out, erected his altar, bound his son and laid him on it. He then stretched forth his hand and took the knife to slay his son. At this point, "the Angel of the LORD called unto him out of heaven," forbidding him to proceed any farther. Then followed a second call out of heaven saying, "By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice."—Gen. xxii.

This promise was renewed to Isaac, Gen. xxvi. 4, as follows, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," etc. The same was more fully confirmed to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 14, "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Thus it is seen, by the language used by the LORD, that all nations embraced all the families of those nations. Peter, in referring to this matter, Acts iii. 25, says, "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed." Here all families of the earth are embraced. Paul, who, saith, "The scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."—Gal. iii. 8. Here is no limitation—"all nations," and of course "all the families of the earth" are to be "blessed" with the gospel proclamation in order that they may be "justified by faith;" that is by believing the message of God's love to the world, or to all the families of the earth. In order to believe it, they must have it proclaimed to them. How can a man believe in that of which he has never heard? Have all the families of the earth heard of the love of God, to "the world," in any age or dispensation past or present? Certainly no man living can prove that they have, and the evidence is clearly against any such assumption. If any age could boast of such a result it is the present century in which we live; but what are the facts?

In a work of a late date by Mr. Shimeall, of this city, who has written and preached much on prophecy, he gives the following statistics:

"The aggregate population of the earth is twelve hundred and twenty-five millions. They may be divided into the following religious systems, namely:

1. Of Brahminical Pagans, in Asia, - - -	650,000,000
2. Of Mohammedans, in Asia and Africa, - -	150,000,000
3. Of Pagans in a purely savage state, - - -	100,000,000
4. Of Jews, the kingdom of Judah, dispersed, -	14,000,000
In Christendom there are—
1. Of the Western, or Romish Church, - - -	170,000,000
2. Of the Eastern, or Greek Church, - -	60,000,000
3. Of Protestants, throughout the world, - -	80,000,000
Total population - -	1,224,000,000"

He then adds: "It results from the statistics, first, That less than one fifth of the earth's population are included within the pale of Christendom. Second, That of these latter, only about one-third bear the Protestant name. Third, computing, as we must, the real numerical strength of Protestant Christianity by the communion statistics of all the various branches of the Protestant Church, scattered over the world, they do not yield a total of over 15,000,000. of the [1,224,000,000]. What a picture."

All this, notwithstanding the promise and oath of God that in Abraham all the families of the earth shall be blessed. From facts like these, one of two things seem inevitable. First, there is an age or ages yet to come, in which the promise and oath of God will be fulfilled; or, Second, that promise and oath of God does not mean what it says, and it is impossible to tell what it does mean; and so, the "two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie" cannot be relied on to teach what truth is. No wonder if men are made infidels under the teaching which involves the possibility of the promise and oath of God meaning something entirely different from what is expressed, or is never to be fulfilled at all.

WHERE ARE MEN JUDGED?

THE general teaching is, that God investigates and decides on the characters of men in eternity, or in another life after a resurrection from the dead, while the Bible very clearly and distinctly teaches that he judges in the earth, as the following passages show:

"He is the Lord our God, his judgments are in all the earth."—1 Chron. xvi. 14. "He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth."—Ps. cv. 7. "Verily he is a God that judgeth the earth."—Ps. lviii. 11. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth."—Isa. xlii. 4. "For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isa. xxvi. 9. "I am the Lord which exerciseth loving-kindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth."—Jer. ix. 24. "A king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment in the earth."—Jer. xxiii. 5. "I will judge thee in the place were thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity."—Ezek. xxi. 30. "And Jesus said, For judgment am I come into this world."—John ix. 39. "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner."—Prov. xi. 31. "Now, is the judgment of this world."—John xii. 31.

This testimony is explicit and emphatic, and shows beyond all doubt that God judges in the earth. And there is no passage which teaches a different sentiment—in no single instance is it asserted that man is judged in eternity, We never read of men going into another life, or world, to be judged; neither do we read of judgment after the resurrection state. The resurrection and a judgment after are never associated together. Hence when we read of judgment, nothing is said of the resurrection from the dead; and when we read of the resurrection, nothing is said about judgment except it be an executive one. God judgeth in the earth; now is the investigating judgment; and often the execution immediately follows, as in the case of Sodom, the old world, Egypt, the Canaanites, Babylon, Jerusalem, and many cases that might be named; and when death overtakes the sinner there is no ransom that can deliver him from death's dominion; though as to the declarative judgment, fixing him in that state, it takes place at the resurrection of the just. The wicked dead being left in the state of death, are thereby declared "unworthy of everlasting life;" and so are judged to "remain in the congregation of the dead." Such is the Bible presentation of the subject; and let all men lay it to heart, and realize they are now passing through the trial judgment which is to decide their eternal destiny; and let them learn to live soberly and righteously in this present time, for soon the trial will be over and execution will surely follow.

"ETERNAL TORMENTS."

THIS doctrine, which is the legitimate fruit of the doctrine of inherent immortality, is productive of more real infidelity than any other error ever promulgated. The Life views are the real antidote for such a horrible and blasphemous doctrine. We have an illustration of this fact under the ministry of Eld. MILES GRANT in San Francisco, California, where he has been preaching for some weeks past, on the Advent of Christ and immortality only to those in Him. We take the following from the "World's Crisis," in a communication from Br. Grant. He says:

"An intelligent lady in San Francisco, who had attended our meetings for some time, and been blessed by so doing, being brought from the dark abyss of Spiritualism and infidelity to the comforts of christian religion, sent us a private note, containing a double gold eagle, as a token of gratitude for the light she had received while listening to the discussion, and lectures on the moral nature of man. In the note she says:

"'I see what mighty weapons they [these truths] are with which to fight error. . . . I believe it was the doctrine of eternal torment of the wicked more than any thing else, that led me, in early life, into utter disbelief of the Bible, as a revelation from God. For many years I honestly and earnestly labored with all my power to remove all faith in it from the mind of every one with whom I came in contact. Several have told me that I was the means of destroying their faith in the Bible, as a revelation from God. I would to heaven I could say as much in regard to my being the means of establishing the truths of that book in the minds of others. . . .

"'This same doctrine of eternal torment, which I never had a doubt but what the Bible taught, has made me often take refuge in that 'refuge of lies," Spiritualism.'

"Now, this lady's voice may be heard in the prayer and conference meetings, confessing Jesus. She now sees that the Bible does not teach the doctrine of eternal torment."

A FALL.

IT is perhaps pretty generally known by our readers throughout the country, that a certain political party in this state has for several years commanded the patronage of the Roman Catholic element, a very strong one, particularly in this city. Of course an enormous price has been paid for this, among the items of which is that of the large amounts yearly appropriated by the Legislature for the relief and assistance of charitable institutions, the greater part has been given to that sect. In one instance, when about $130,000 had been appropriated for the purpose named, the Roman Catholics obtained more than $100,000 of it. That is not far from the proportion they usually secure. Then, in this city, Catholic institutions have secured what amounts to perpetual leases of property worth millions of dollars per annum, at one dollar per year. This, as might well be supposed, has created no small outcry, not only among other religious denominations, but among very many who take no particular interest in any religious sects. These misappropriations of the State's money have been denounced as partial, unfair and unjust, while the city transactions have been condemned as fraud and theft, all Protestant religionists joining in the denunciation.

The popular outcry had become so loud and severe at times, that the spoilers evidently deemed it a matter of policy to do something toward silencing it. Their manner of procedure in all such cases is, where it can be done, to purchase.

In 1869 certain Baptists of this city organized themselves into a society, having in view the founding of a "Home for the Aged, Infirm and Destitute Members of Baptist Churches." During the session of 1869–70 the Legislature of the State empowered the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to lease to this Society certain lots of ground within the limits of the city, free of rent, on which to erect a Home. A few days since the patrons and members of the Society were required to act upon the question as to whether the trustees of the Society should be instructed to retain or to annul the lease. There were lengthy speeches and strong arguments on both sides, but, upon taking a vote, the action of the trustees in accepting the lease was approved by 126 to 36. How have the mighty fallen! The Baptists have not, we think, been behind others in condemning the course of the Roman Catholics in these matters, together with the party which serves them, but as soon as the mess of miserable pottage is offered them they yield their birth-right and take it. We cannot yet think the action of this "Home" Society represents the feelings of a majority of the Baptists of this city, and if it does not we trust the general body will treat the matter as it deserves, and thus remove whatever of undue censure now attaches to the sect.

Doubtless many of the Rev. gentlemen who voted for the measure have time and again denounced poor, nearly-famished Esau for selling his birth-right to obtain food to preserve life. They have no such plea as had Esau.

Do they say that we, aged and infirm as we are, are famishing? Then devote to erecting and otherwise honestly obtaining a "Home" some, only a comparatively small part, of the money now expended for costly edifices, with all their expensive and luxurious appointments, in which the more fashionably and lazily to worship God three hours each week. No, no, good Baptist friends, you have swallowed the wretched little crumb of bait that was thrown you, and now your lips are forever sealed to all protests against what the whole Protestant church has heretofore been crying against, and you have not even the plea of Esau to offer in extenuation. Hereafter when the R. C. Church wrings from its laboring masses the means to build costly cathedrals, and then sells its influence to the party that will steal for it millions of hard-earned treasure taken from the people by taxation or otherwise, you can only gaze upon your paltry free-lease of a few city lots, and open not your mouth. It will not answer the purpose to say, "if we did not take the lots, some other sect would." The principle that has been sacrificed was worth ten thousand times more than all the lots they or you can ever get or need.

And still the tempter is abroad and at work. Will another Protestant sect fall? Oh, the pride of life! How has it debauched the church! It has led it to waste millions for mere show, to gratify fleshly lusts, and now it impiously demands the sacrifice of precious principle. Who next will yield to the winning voice of the tempter?

L. C. T.

EUROPE.

If anything were needed to show the utter helplessness of Louis Napoleon at the present time it is found in the French treatment of the sort of proclamation recently made by him in the form of a communication addressed to the President of the Assembly. The deposed monarch protests against the legality of the vote by which that body declared that his dynasty had forfeited the throne. He affirms that the Assembly was created only to make peace, and hence has exceeded its powers. He contends that the foundation of all public right is the plebiscitum; to that he is ready to bow, and to that alone. This protest is as utterly unheeded, is treated with as much silent contempt as though it had emanated from some crazy peasant. The protest itself is but a wail from perdition whither, through the lake which burned with fire and brimstone, the treacherous beast which so long carried its harlot rider was unceremoniously hurried. Truly he is being tormented day and night.

A revolutionary outbreak of considerable proportions by the National Guard intrenched on Montmartre created a great deal of excitement and anxiety during the past week, but the disturbance seems to have been quieted without any serious collision. The following relating to the subject is dated London, March 11:

"Advices from Paris dated this afternoon and evening have been received. The news is somewhat conflicting. A dispatch dated this evening says that the insurgent National Guards still hold possession of 417 pieces of cannon. On the other hand, a telegram from Paris in the afternoon, after reporting that all is quiet in Montmartre, says the National Guards return the cannon in their possession to the Government on conditions that their organization is not to be dissolved and the continuance of the allowance to each member of one franc and a half per day until work is resumed. Referring to the same subject the "Times" special correspondent at Paris telegraphs that the National Guards holding Montmartre have surrendered the cannon held by them, and that the remainder will be formally summoned to surrender all their arms."

The Assembly have finally settled the somewhat exciting question as to what place shall be the seat of Government. One party has been urging a removal to Paris, another a removal to Versailles, and a third the continuance at Bordeaux. On Saturday the Assembly rejected, by a vote of 407 against 104, a proposal for an immediate removal to Paris, and then adopted a proposition for removal to Versailles by a vote of 406 against 104.

"The Times," of London, under date of March 9, has a letter from Madrid announcing that the Duke of Montpensier has been banished to the Island of Minorca because he refuses to take the military oaths to support King Amadens.

The German Landwehr have been dismissed from service and forwarded to their homes.

Advices from Rome under date of March 11 say,—"The public agitation which has prevailed for some months past in this city, particularly since the entry of the lay officers of Italy, is producing consequences which are not at all creditable to religion or useful in the discipline of society or for the cultivation of morals. The sanctuary is likely to be invaded by excitement. I have just heard that disturbances occurred this morning in the Jesus church, in which, though there was considerable fighting, no person was seriously wounded."

These disturbances were overcome and order restored by the interposition of the authorities.

L. C. T.

STARTLING FACTS.

We frequently hear it remarked in these days, that every description of evil is fearfully on the increase. People sometimes observe, on the other hand, that society is no worse than formerly even in this country, but with our unparallelled advantages for receiving intelligence from all parts of the world of events in a few moments after they have occurred, we hear of a vast amount of evil which would not otherwise come to our notice, and hence evil itself seems to be rapidly spreading, when it is in fact only our facilities for hearing and knowing of it that is increased.

The last time we ever heard Prof. Hudson in public was in this city. The position which he took on this point was that both evil and good were increasing. This is probably true. Society may, with respect to its especial alliance to good and evil, be divided into three classes, viz., first: those who progress in the practice and development of good; second: they who give themselves up to the power of evil, and are ever seeking out and practicing some new and unheard-of enormity of it; third: a middle class, who are not openly allied to or identified with either of the others, but who favor both as taste and circumstances seem to suggest. It may be urged that very much of the good which is credited to the first class, they are in great measure compelled to the practice of by the excessive wretchedness and woe introduced into society by the wickedness of the second class. This is true, of course, but no matter why or what the occasion for its practice, it is good nevertheless, and evidences a love of good if actuated by right motives.

The condition of society at the present day justifies, we think, the conclusion that not only is there a marked moral degeneration of the middle element spoken of, but a gradual giving way and settling also of the lower types of the higher class. In accounting for this men may hold and urge the adequacy of a multitude of theories combining a multitude of causes. That many causes do unite to this end there can be no reasonable doubt, and if we were asked to name that which is most powerful of all we would say, the corruptions of the gospel. We are thoroughly impressed that nothing would exert so vast an influence in turning this awful tide of evil as the going out of every true-hearted Christian into the world and publishing the pure, simple truths of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and showing forth the power thereof by lives of consistent godliness. We will not now attempt to show how such a result would be reached by such means, as that is not our present aim.

If we were asked to name the next greatest cause of increase of evil we would say, the use of spirituous liquors. No person who does not make this subject somewhat a study can form any adequate conception of its extent and destructiveness. It was formerly fashionable to use intoxicating beverages, but the Temperance movement of some twenty-five or thirty years ago wrought a great change, and the use of spirituous beverages became uncommon even in gay and fashionable circles. Too soon there came a reaction, and now it is as bad as ever, perhaps worse. "It is a startling fact," says a writer, "that full one third of the applicants for admission into the asylums for drunkenness, are women, the most of them from so-called high life. They started a new one near New York, two years ago, and before the first story was up they had 1,589 applicants for admission—22 ministers, 492 women—most of them from so-called high life. I have seen it stated in a leading journal and a popular literary magazine, 'that there are a number of the most costly and richly-furnished saloons in the city of New York, that are only open to rich aristocratic ladies; and they could be seen publicly there drinking all sorts of liquors, and in all stages of inebriation. There are costly suits of rooms to sleep off the effects of their liquors, if they get more than they can carry.' At social parties wine and strong liquors are passed around by fair hands, and urged upon the guests by smiling faces, in all our cities, and often in our smaller places that are only able to ape the vices of larger places."

Few, indeed, have any idea of the magnitude of the liquor business or of the immense capital invested in it. Let us look at some of the figures which show us the facts in this matter. T. E. Jackson, giving the statistics of New York city, says, "We have one million population" (these figures are shown by the census of 1870 to be a little too high)—"one half native Americans, the other half born in foreign countries, of forty different nationalities. Forty thousand kegs of lager bier are daily consumed. Fourteen million six hundred thousand kegs a year, and but 4,000,000 barrels of flour. The meat bill of the city was $30,000,000 last year (1868), and the liquor bill over $68,000,000. The amount of capital invested in manufacturing establishments is $65,000,000; invested in the 71 banks, $90,000,000; in the liquor business, $200,000,000—$42,000,000 more than in both manufactories and banks. There have been 68,880 arrests for intoxication and disorderly conduct during the past year, and there are 92,272 persons in institutions under the care of the commissioners of public charities." Of these 92,272 persons, nine tenths, it is safe to say, aret here on account, directly and indirectly, of intoxicating liquors.

To comprehend still further the magnitude of the cost of intoxicating drinks, let us look at the country at large, and compare the cost of its liquor with some of the great and necessary productions. It is said that "by the census of 1860, we find the value of the six leading productions of the country were, flour and meal, $524,000,000; cotton goods, 115,000,000; boots and shoes, $90,000,000; clothing, $70,000,000; woollen goods, $69,000,000; books, newspapers and job printing, $42,000,000. Total, $610,000,000. Thus we have the appalling fact, that the cost of liquors to drinkers in one year, was $1,411,403,624 more than the value of all the flour and meal, cotton goods, boots and shoes, woollen goods, clothing, and printing of books, newspapers and other printing produced in the United States in the year 1860.

The actual net cost of liquors in one year, is $2,021,403,624. Time lost by drinking men, 739,020,579. Cost of crimes caused by intemperance, $87,000,000. Cost of pauperism, $27,000,0000. Cost of litigation, $241,000,000. Total proximate cost of intemperance in the United States in one year, is $3,015,225,206.

All the extraordinary appropriations for the United States Government, including all army and navy expenses for 1862, were only $313,261,629. In 1863 the they were $882,238,800. During these two years of terrible war, of army-raising, equipping and clothing, ship-building and fortifying, the expenses of intemperance were $1,919,623,772 more than the war expenses of the nation.

If each of the 140,361 licensed rum-sellers in the United States have twenty customers, then we have 2,807,200 tipplers, taking the direct route to the drunkard's doom; for one out of every thirty, in the course of a year will become a confirmed inebriate. Hence 93,574 confirmed sots are annually manufactured in the United States. Again, we will suppose that the $3,015,224,202 that are directly and indirectly spent for and because of intoxicating liquors in the United States a year, are all in silver dollars. To count $100 a minute for ten hours a day, it will take 1,377 years to count them."

These are indeed appalling facts. What is to be end of these things? There is truly much good among men, but the evil greatly overtops it. Increasing as evil doubtless is, the lover of Christ, while doing all he can for humanity, for God and the truth, is often impelled to exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

L. C. T.

AN EXHORTATION.

BY A. BOYNTON.

"If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light."

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways."

Let it be understood that scriptural declarations, emanating as they do from a perfect being, are perfect in their declaration; and it is not expected that finite creatures will ever come up to their full import; but a perfect rule being given, an approximation towards it, as far as may be, is the life work of man.

While some passages have a specific application, others, like those we have selected, though perhaps spoken in reference to spiritual things, have a general application, reaching all departments and conditions of life. We think the two texts calculated to illuminate each other. Christ's teaching was by figures, and the figure used here, all will understand as referring to the mind, and its purpose or action.

In business affairs, we all know that success is generally in proportion to the singleness or unitedness of purpose and effort. A diligent application of the powers of the whole man, in any one given direction argues success, and such success as the capabilities of the man will warrant: for all men vary in this particular, at least as they are severally related to any given course of action. Men are like machines in this respect; some are of small power, can do a given amount of work and do it well; while others of greater power can do a much larger amount and do it as well.

We look around sometimes and wonder why men do make such poor steerage through this world, take such a zig-zag course to "get gain;" while any one may reasonably conclude that they never will succeed to competence or wealth; yet they are blind to facts, and persistently follow their way of folly to the end; and why? Because they are too wise, too blind to be taught of God. His word is both a rule of business, and of morals. Let us heed it then, on all occasions, and on all accounts.

But we designed to dwell more on the spiritual nature of our subject which lies back of, or is a foundation to all true success, which is only Godward; for, for this purpose was man created; and here he finds his true happiness for this and a future life; "to know (or glorify) God and enjoy him forever." But little progress is made in this direction by any with a double object of vision. Two objects of an opposite nature placed before the mind, the attention is constantly changed from one to the other, producing that very unpleasant state called "double-mindedness," which leads to feebleness of action; which is anything but happiness to its possessor, or efficient to his fellow man. He is "unstable;" stands doubtingly, timidly, as one in faint twilight sees but dimly; consequently, all his movements partake of more or less fearfulness and uncertainty.

In this age of haste, it is well to "inquire after the old land marks," or God's principles or laws of action; any other rule than this will surely lead us off the track, and end in wreck and destruction. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," is the 1st commandment in order and importance in the decalogue, and also the one soonest and most frequently broken in its true spiritual import. The glory or pleasure of God is to be the prime object of the creature and his peace, comfort, and joy follow as the result of that service or worship. But when self is the object of our action, an idol is erected on God's altar, and his holy temple, ("which temple are ye."—Paul) is profaned.

Dear brethren of our common Lord and Saviour, here we feel is the crying sin in the churches of christendom,—a want of clear eye-sight; a sort of quack process has been substituted, and submitted to by those seeking the way of Life, and a very obscure vision is the result. "No man can serve two masters," is as true to-day as when first uttered. We may please men perhaps with a cloak of religion; but God only accepts us as our hearts are pure; or, in the words of our text, "our eye is single." Here, as we hinted, has been a radical defect in our conversion; the intellect has been reached, the reason corrected, the passions moved, good resolutions made, followed by many good deeds, but the man has not had the "washing of re-generation, and re-newing of the Holy Ghost." "The creating anew in Christ unto good works," having the "law of God written in the mind and on the heart;" he has stopped in the temple court, where the law only is heard, while the gospel opens to Christ's children the "holy place."

No man can have a single eye to the glory of God who is not crucified to the flesh. This is a daily or life work, expressed by the apostle in his exhortation thus: "Present your bodies unto God a living sacrifice continually." This position only will insure unto us "light in our dwellings;" this keeps union among brethren: union not in sentiment which may cause a warm shake of the hand; but a union in affection which kindles in the heart; a love which warms wherever it reaches. The precepts of the gospel are of a spiritual nature, so much so, we fear the masses of those who accept them (intellectually) will fail of their chief benefit. May God in mercy grant us his Spirit, which shall lead us into the truth, and sanctify us thereby, that we may be saved in his soon coming kingdom. Amen.

West Batavia, N. Y., March, 1871.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM GEO. W. ALLSHOUSE.

Br. Storrs: I knew that on your recovery from your late sickness, so many of your dear friends would write you with joy and gladness, and with thanksgiving to God that he has raised you up again, so that you would have many letters to publish of so much more value than any I could write, I refrained from writing till I could no longer, for my soul yearns to express my gratitude to God in this way also, by a few lines to you.

The first paper I received after the annual meeting, which informed me that Br. Thorne had been appointed your assistant, I was full of fears, and strongly impressed that something was going to happen, and that perhaps the Lord would soon release his servant from his labors, and then, when the news came that you were sick, you cannot imagine my feelings, emotions and fears; but O, the wisdom and goodness of God, for He knew that his servant would be sick and made provision for it, thanks be to his holy name. No doubt many were the prayers and petitions addressed to Him for you; and who knows but that the Lord perhaps condescended to hear even my humble petitions and prayers in your behalf, though the least of all; for as such I must look upon myself; but bless the Lord, the cries, prayers, petitions have been turned, by the Lord, into praises and thanks to him for his goodness to you, and to us also; and how good the Lord is to you in giving such help as Br. Thorne. May the Lord bless him with every blessing that is for his good and comfort, and for the honor and glory of God.

I cannot write, nor express myself as I would, for I am yet in the furnace of affliction, though the fire at times is not quite so hot and fierce as it has been, yet the blinding smoke, and the suffocating dust from the FURNACE have often so bewildered and confounded me, that I could scarcely take a step forward, but must "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord," when he had cleared away the obstructions again. No doubt all my afflictions and adversity I needed, and will in the end be for my good, and the honor and glory of the Lord.

You cannot imagine my feelings and thankfulness when Br. Thorne stated that my paper was paid for. The Lord reward him and you for your kindness to me. It has been a source of trouble to me to be thus situated; but perhaps the Lord will be pleased to smile upon me again, in his providence; if not, may He give me grace to be fully and entirely reconciled to his will and dealings with me. We often need much hammering and squaring, in the wilderness and quarry, before we are fit to be placed in the Lord's building.

May the Lord spare and help you and Br. Thorne, and all his servants and children, and give us all eternal life, when the Life-giver comes.

Yours, in hope of that boon.

Rochester, N. Y., March 6, 1871.

FROM S. J. BRIMHALL.

Br. Storrs: We need a living Herald of Life in this country; one that will give the Life views in their purity. The life preaching we have is mixed with a mortal resurrection of the wicked, and then follows a difficulty on the question of the judgment, and putting the two resurrections one thousand years apart.

The world is becoming religiously radical and contentious, so that gendering strifes are frequent. We do need a living preacher to take the Book and teach the people the rich truths of that book, the same as a schoolmaster follows his author. A Life preacher could be sustained, and I believe would be very successful. The masses are ignorant of the Life views, yet they are very restless and are grasping at everything that is told, in hope of being saved; scarcely beyond the notion of "I hope to die and go to heaven." Most people here, as in other places, believe as they have been taught, and they must needs be taught different before they can believe the truth.

I trust that some good man, who can, will come and teach the people what they want to know. Send some minister of the Gospel of the kingdom of God, and we will be ever grateful, and do all we can to sustain him and help on the work.

Appleton, Kansas, March 1, 1871.

Wm. Brown, Chicago, Ill., writes: Unlearned as I am, and a foreigner, yet I love the truth as it is in Jesus, and am seeking to know more of Him, who to know is life eternal. About eighteen months since, God, in his great love, led me to see that man is all mortal, and that only by seeking for glory, and immortality, were we to have eternal life; and unto them that look for him will He appear again the second time without sin unto salvation. About twelve months since, I was, as I trust, learned, through the Herald of Life and the Bible, to see the way more perfectly, and that a resurrection to a future life is to those only who have the Spirit imparted to them which raised up Christ from the dead. O, how much more brilliant the love of God manifests itself to me since. I feel so thankful to our heavenly Father for restoring you to health again, and I cannot but pray that He will preserve you in life until you shall see the King in his beauty.

Yours, in hope of eternal life when the great Shepherd of the sheep shall appear.

W. H. Fahnestock, Harrisburg, Pa., writes to L. C. Thorne: I lately found among my papers a copy of Br. Storrs' "Bible Examiner" of Aug. 16, 1844; and it is truly delightful to look back twenty-eight years and know that the "truth," as made known by Br. Storrs, still lives, and is shining brighter and brighter as we near the haven of rest. "The day star" then arose in "our hearts," and the day dawn approached; the beams of the Sun of righteousness appeared above the horizon—his rays have spread far and wide; and before long every eye shall behold that "glorious appearing," for which we have been so long looking. I write to ask, Has the first article in the "Bible Examiner" of Aug. 16, 1844—"Probation after the Advent"—ever been published in pamphlet? I esteem that number of the "Examiner," (the only one I have) worth more than its weight in gold. Please let me know if the article is published in a tract, and what is its price.

Response by the Editor.

The article has not appeared in pamphlet form. We recognize Br. Fahnestock's name, formerly of Pittsburg, Pa.; but have heard nothing from him before, for more than twenty years. We hope we may hear from him again before long.

ANOTHER ACCUSATION.

Some of our opponents accuse us of only reading those parts of the Bible that teach the doctrine of no future life out of Christ. They are guilty, at least, of attempting to create an impression in regard to that which they know nothing about. However, we let that pass as a clever orthodox dodge, and admit the charge—not because we do confine our reading to any particular part, but because we do not know of any place that teaches otherwise. But the peculiarity of the accusation is in the fact that it admits that some parts of the Bible do teach such doctrine, while they maintain that other parts teach quite the reverse. Now this is placing the Bible in rather a suspicious light, and virtually charges it with duplicity. We are unwilling to admit that the Bible teaches opposing doctrines; we believe it to be consistent in all its parts, when properly divested of theological and sectarian contortions.

If the Bible does teach that man has an immortal soul—which it never mentions; that God, knowing the end from the beginning, makes creatures to be eternally tormented; that men are conscious when dead; then surely it does not teach—what it plainly affirms—that God "only hath immortality;" that "the soul that sinneth it shall die;" that "God is love;" that "the dead know not anything"—"in that very day their thoughts perish." On the other hand, if the Bible does teach the latter plainly expressed doctrines, it certainly does not teach the former inferential dogmas.

We reiterate our promise, that if our opponents will show us one mention, in the Bible, of an immortal soul in man; or one assertion that man has or can have immortality, except through Jesus Christ and his resurrection, we will at once accept it as truth.—Nazarene.

One of our New York city dailies contains the following:

"A Roman Catholic paper is looking forward hopefully to Romish supremacy in this country. It says in that case that the clergy will be out of the pale of the civil law, and no matter what the offence, will be amenable only by an ecclesiastical court."

APPOINTMENTS.

Concord, N. H., in the Bethel, Sundays, March 12 and 19.

Manchester, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

Middletown, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

West Meriden, Sunday, April 30.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

Wm. Stuart.

Meriden, Conn., Sundays, March 12 and 26.

Hartford, Conn., Talcott and Porter's Hall, Sunday, April 2.

Providence, R. I., Sundays, April 9 and 16.

Charlestown, Mass., Sundays, April 23 and 30.

Geo. W. Brown.

I am to preach in Onondaga county, N. Y., at High Bridge, near Fayetteville, March 2, and April 7. If there are any Life Believers near I shall be glad to see them there.

James H. Jacobs.

Charlestown, Mass., Sunday, March 19.

W. S. Campbell.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, March 19, at 10 1-2 A. M., and 3 P. M.

S. W. Bishop.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Dan. J. Esser, Dr. E. W. Welles, W. H. Whitman, Hannah Webster, Samuel Burpee, D. Cass, T. B. Rollins.

Two dollars each from—Mrs. Kate Hauck, Adam Friese, Samuel Snively, Lovilla Fidler, Henry C. Webster, S. J. Brimhall, P. W. Fuller, Mrs. E. S. Fenner, Andrew Whitcomb, Henry J. Brunner (we have not all the back numbers).

Various sums—W. Beatty, $5; Mrs. D. C. Corwin, $3; James Hays, $3; W. S. Olmsted, $50 on pledge—$50 for tract fund; Lucretia B. Lamb, $3.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Aaron Veeder, H. J. Orcutt, A. C. Jones (Oregon, two parcels), J. Hays, D. Cass (have none of Halsted's work; send to him, Box 91, Newark, N. J.

"Time is Stealing On."

Time is stealing, stealing on;
Its football is so light,
On, on through day and night;
Listening, we cannot hear,
Though its step is ever near,
Stealing on!

Time is stealing, stealing on,
Filling the air with sighs,
Filling with tears the eyes;
Anon with joyous smiles
Poor mortals it beguiles,
Stealing on!

Time is stealing, stealing on,
Filling the earth with graves
Of kings and groaning slaves,
Crumbling the giant tower,
Poor emblem of earth's power,
Stealing on!

Time is stealing, stealing on,
Bleaching the cheek with care,
Silvering the raven hair,
Dimming the lustrous eye
With age or misery—
Stealing on!

Time is stealing, stealing on,
Recording as it rolls
Judgment on human souls;
Bearing our toil-worn feet
On, on, our Lord to meet—
Stealing on!

Time is stealing, stealing on:
Poor loiterer on the way,
Up, up, while it is day.
Laborer, there's work to do;
The Lord hath need of you,
For time is stealing on.

—Selected.

Thoughts on Revelation x. and xi.

BY ELD. GEO. W. BROWN.

"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months."

The angel here brought to view is the one spoken of in chapter x., with the little book open; and this must have been in the future in John's day, as he is told by the one that talked with him, in chapter iv., that he will show him things which must be hereafter. Also, it takes place just before the sounding of the seventh angel, as he refers to what shall take place when the seventh angel sounds. (See chap. x. 7.) Chap. xi. 15, and onward, shows what shall then take place. "There were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever;" referring to the same time spoken of by Daniel the prophet, when "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom" (that which the four kings have held from Babylon to the end of Rome) "and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever."—Dan. vii. 18 and 22. This event is to take place at the day of judgment, as is shown by the following passage: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom."—2 Tim. iv. 1. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."—Rev. xi. 18. Then the location of this messenger (Rev. x.) with the little book open, is just before the day of judgment. Now, was there a book to be opened just before the end? I answer, "There was." What book was it? Ans. The book of Daniel; "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end."—Dan. xii. 4. To show that the time of the end is not the end of the world, he tells us in chap. xi. 40, that "At the time of the end the king of the South shall push at him;" and the king of the South will have no time to push when Jesus comes to judge the quick and dead, for Jude tells us he is coming to "execute judgment upon all."—Jude 15. And Paul tells us, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This event is to take place "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints."—2 Thess. i. 7 to 9. Now the question is, "Have we any proof that we are in the time of the end?" Let us see. We read, "And they that understand among the people shall instruct many: yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days."—Dan. xi. 33. And verse 35 tells how long: "Even to the time of the end." Now, have the people of God fallen in this way, in the past, for instructing people in the word of God, where they differed from the established creed? We must admit it or abandon history, for history does give an account of millions who have suffered in the way spoken of by the prophet in the last thirteen hundred years, which has exactly fulfilled this prophecy; and the question arises, "Are they that understand among the people and instruct many falling in this way now?" We must admit they are not. How long were they to fall? "Even to the time of the end." Then we must have struck sounding in the time of the end, if the chart is correct, and we know it is, by the fulfilment of prophecy. Glory to God! the land is nearing, and we have fallen upon just such times as mark the last days, on God Almighty's chart.

The religionists of the present day will take almost any thing but sound doctrine; that they will not endure, as God has foretold by the apostle Paul. When they are driven into a corner by the force of truth, they will tell you they do not want so much doctrine; but you will find by close examination, that it is not the quantity, but the quality that offends them. They do not like that which is proved by God's word; it comes in contact with their selfish interests, and they persuade themselves that they can get along better without it.

One preacher told me, not long since, while talking on a Bible subject, that he thought it more his duty to labor for the salvation of souls, than to be inquiring into such things. As if the salvation of souls was entirely a different thing from understanding God's word, when God tells us, it is by the foolishness of preaching that he will save them that believe. But what are we to preach? "Preach the word." "But," says one, "we want to get up a revival, and if you preach doctrine you will stop it. We want to get hold of the sinner's feelings, and we cannot do it by reasoning with him out of the Scriptures." But how does the Lord appeal to sinners in his word? "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."—Isa. i. 18. He then tells them the reward if they obey the dictates of reason, as given in God's plan of redemption: "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured by the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Here is a promise on the one hand to the obedient, and a threatening on the other to the rebellious; one is to have the land and the good of it; the other is to be devoured with the sword. Nothing said about eternal torment; nothing said about raising them at the last day to show them what they have lost; but simply, they shall be devoured with the sword, one of the agents God has chosen with which to execute his wrath.

Now, who would ever decide from this language, that the sinner would ever have torment after this life? Surely no one, if he would let reason have its sway; but tradition has taught differently, and they must hush the voice of reason, to keep their own tradition: the same influence that the Jews had, when they rejected the commandments to keep their own traditions. God save us from this influence, is my prayer; so we may let the Lord talk and we will obey.

Perhaps I have wandered somewhat from my subject in bringing up the present state of things, but it all goes to show that we are in the time of the end, when this little book is to be opened. Now what would be likely to follow the opening of this book? Why, we open a book to read its contents. Now has any thing occurred, in the last fifty years, to show that this book is opened? Let us look at the facts. Before the year 1830, Joseph Wolf began to proclaim in the land of Judea, and other eastern countries, the coming of Jesus Christ at a definite, given time, the figure for which he found in the book that was closed till the time of the end, viz., the book of Daniel; and very soon the fire caught in Germany and in England, and soon God raised up men on this side of the Atlantic to preclaim the same message, and the news of Christ's second coming shown to be near at hand by the fulfilment of prophecy, signs of the times, and the prophetic period, has gone East, West, North and South, to warn the inhabitants of earth of the approaching judgment, and thousands who are now indifferent on the subject, listened tremblingly to this message more than twenty years ago. But does this prove that God was not in the message, or has it filled the picture marked in his word? What was the first message after the book was open, to be like? Like the roar of a lion. Does the roar of a lion fill the beasts of the forest with fear? So did this message fill the inhabitants of the earth with fear, and many a church member went to his minister to do it away; but all the arguments brought against it were like straws thrown against a hurricane; they only came back in the face. And why this? Because the time had come for the messenger with the little book open, to cry as when a lion roareth; and it shows the second woe was past, and behold, the third woe cometh quickly; and when the third comes, it is the time the dead are judged, as you will see by comparing Rev. viii. 13, and xi. 15.

"But," says one, "the message was not of God; if it had been, Jesus would have come; it only carried you forth to meet him, and left you in a disappointed state." Well, that is just what Jesus said would take place just before his coming. The kingdom of heaven would be like ten virgins who took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom, as you will see by reading Matt. xxv. Jesus Christ is the bridegroom. See Matt. ix. 15.

Now let us look a little farther at some of the characteristics of this angel. He was clothed with a cloud, and his face was it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire. The cloud is an emblem of the presence of God. When the Lord delivered Israel from Egypt, he went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, and by night in a pillar of fire. See Ex. xiii. 21. Here we have, in this symbolic angel, both the cloud and the fire; showing that this is the antitype of their deliverance from Egypt. As they were brought out of the land of Egypt, we were brought out of Egyptian darkness; as they had trials and disappointments we shall have the same; as they murmured at the trials, so will some here; as they tempted Christ, saying, "Is the Lord among us or not?" so will some do here; as Korah had a company who were ready to cover up the sins of the people, saying, "All the congregation are holy," we shall have the same here; as they were required to watch the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, so shall we be required to watch God's hand in this great movement, and follow light as it shines. There is everything in the description of this angel to show that he gives light. "His face as the sun." As the sun is the only source of light in the natural world, so this angel will have the word of God, which is a "light shining in a dark place." He is said to have a rainbow upon his head, which is the token of God's covenant with the earth All these things have been brought out by this message of the coming of Jesus Christ. What was this first message on time? The angel "sware by him that liveth forever and ever, that time should be no longer;" showing he is positive time is to close up; so much so that he is said to swear to it. See verse 6. We know the people who were looking for the Lord in 1843 and '4, were so certain that they would not admit of an "if" in the matter; thus completely fulfilling the 6th verse.

Now, is there any thing more to this thing; or does the disappointment, on time, leave us in sadness till the Master comes? Let us look at the 8th verse. "And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel." The very fact of his speaking again, shows he has spoken once, and stops speaking, and then speaks a second time and calls attention to the very book which was spoken from the first time. The command is now, not only to take the little book, but to eat it up. We all understand this expression when applied to a book. A man that eats up a book gets what there is in it. Now whatever there is in the book of Daniel, when the people of God in the time of the end eat it up, they will get it. If there is time running to the resurrection of the dead, they will have it; but let all understand that in devouring the contents of this book, they will have bitter as well as sweet; disappointments as well as joys, as we learn from verses 9 and 10. Now has this been the case with those who have been examining this book for the last thirty years? We answer, "It has." After our first disappointment, the great body of Adventists thought we never should meddle with time again, but after some eight or ten years, the subject was again brought before the people, and a large company again embraced the idea that the Lord would come in 1854; but this was not like the roar of the lion; it did not alarm the inhabitants of earth as the first message on time did, although the argument was much stronger. The first disappointment quieted the people, so they felt safe in a measure. They said, "You were wrong the first time, and you will be again;" but notwithstanding this, many believed, and it was a mighty cry answering to the cry at midnight (Matt. xxv. 5, 6), as it pretty thoroughly aroused the "virgins," (the Advent people) and started the paper called the "World's Crisis," which has since been the principal organ of that body of people.

It appears, after taking this book again, they not only have joys, but sorrows; bitter as well as sweet; and some of us know by experience what this means, for we confidently expected our Lord would come in 1854, and sacrificed everything in this world on that issue. We were left in this cold-hearted world with our hope deferred and our hearts sick, and our inquiry was, "What do these things mean?"

Some told us we ought not to have taken the little book at all, and we should have been saved all this trouble. Others said, You believed too strongly; if you had not swallowed the book, it would not have been "bitter in the belly." But then, we thought we were doing the best we could. We read in Peter that we do well to take heed to prophecy, as unto a light shining in a dark place; and we know if we are going through a dark place, and have only one light, we take strict heed to it. We have tried to do the same with God's prophetic word, and although we have had trials, we expect it will yet be seen we have done well, and Peter's testimony will prove true. But after all our disappointments and trials in taking the book twice, we are to prophecy again, for in verse 11 we read, "Thou must prophecy again," and that was accomplished in 1867, with a little more light from the little book, but not quite enough to bring the end of the days where Daniel is to receive his lot or portion, with all the saints in the immortal state, which is to take place when the dead shall be raised incorruptible, at the sound of the last trump.

[To be continued.]

David's Sin.

When Israel cried unto God for a King, he gave them a man after their own heart. "There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than Saul; from his shoulders and upward, he was higher than any of the people." But when Saul was forsaken by the spirit of God; too proud and self-willed to be of any more use, then God chose the second king, and this time it was "a man after his own heart."

How charming is the picture of David from the moment when he was summoned from the sheepfold to stand before Samuel: "He was ruddy and withal of a beautiful countenance and goodly to look to." And yet it was not for external gifts that he was chosen, "for man looketh at the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh at the heart." David's heart was right in the sight of a holy God, and he was called and anointed to be king of Israel.

As we follow David's course through its varied scenes of romantic and touching interest, we find it always true, noble, modest unselfish; loyal to his king and his God, while patiently waiting the coming day of exaltation. No eager, unseemly haste for honor or office, but a patient waiting for the Lord's appointed time.

But David, the chosen of the Lord sinned: and the sacred page tells the sad, dark tale without one extenuating plea or screening message. One dreadful sin of passion and blood-guiltiness is written against the good king David, for which he was led to conviction, confession, and true repentance. But for this sin, there would have been no fifty-first Psalm, no such voice for the sinning and sorrowing: nor such a heart-cry going up from the deepest depths of guilt, to search and find a father's hand. But now there is no one so low, so tempted and lost, but may gather courage from David's cry to say, "Have mercy upon me, O God," for "I acknowledge my transgression and my sin is ever before me." Myriads of sinners, since David's day, while on their knees, with streaming eyes uttering the broken petitions of this Psalm, have found the way to peace and God; and realized with repentant David, that it was not enough to be forgiven, they wanted new hearts and right spirits; purged, cleansed, washed, renewed, made whiter than snow.

Oh, the importunity of a soul that feels its sore need while gazing up at infinite holiness! Whiter than snow! Impossible with man, but possible to God!

Besides this penitential Psalm, there is one more born of the dark sin of David which sings the glad theme of forgiveness. "Blessed," oh, how blessed, "is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."

The thirty-first Psalm was written after the clouds rolled away, and faith had grasped the promise of God; when David could say, not only am I pardoned, but my sin is covered, hidden from sight, cast into the sea, no more to be found!

There may be many of earth's pilgrims who do not attain to some of David's highest spiritual experiences of joy and exultation as poured forth in the Psalms, but there are few who do not need to borrow his very words of penitence and faith, when they would tell their case to the ear of Divine mercy.

The ways of God are past finding out, and it is not always safe to judge of his dealings with man; but the case of David gives us warrant to think that, even the sins and sufferings of God's people on earth may be useful for the warning and succor they afford to others.

"For David's psalms had ne'er been sung,
If David's heart had not been wrung."

—American Messenger.

"Near Calistoga, California, there is a petrified forest, embracing about ten acres. All the trees are in a state of complete petrifaction. Most of them have fallen to the ground, but a few are still standing. They comprise redwood, madrone, manzanita, and oak, and contain specimens eleven feet in circumference. The petrifaction of the fir species is the most pleasing in appearance. The pitch layers have formed into beautiful quartz crystals, and are really handsome ornaments. Savans say that the forest standing was ages ago immersed in water, and the petrifaction took place while so immersed. A few weeks ago one of these petrified trees having been split open, a live creature, about two inches long, and resembling a lizard, jumped out. By counting the layers in which it was imbedded, it appeared that the tree was five hundred years old when it began to petrify."

King William, on being asked what he thought was the most wonderful thing in Versailles, replied by quoting the words of the Doge of Genoa to Louis XIV.: "C'est de m'y voir." (It is to find myself here).

Children's Department.

Two Sad Sights.

I saw two sad sights the other day, which made my heart ache. The first was a drunken boy; yes, a drunken boy. He was not more than ten years old, yet he was so drunk that he reeled along the side-walk, making tracks like Z.'s, and kept falling to the ground. Presently he passed a chair-mender's cellar. To keep himself from falling, he grasped one of a pile of chairs, which, not being fastened, fell to the ground and the little drunkard fell with it. The next moment he was on his unsteady feet again; then he dashed into an alley, where, as I supposed, he lived.

Do you wonder my heart ached at that spectacle? If it hadn't, I should have thought myself unfit to write another word for children as long as I live. But it ached keenly, and I said to myself—

"I hope all the boys and girls will never drink their first glass of any drink which can make the drunk come."

What was the second sad sight I saw that day?

This: Scarcely had the boy reeled down the alley, before the chair-mender, who had seen him overturn his chairs, rushed after him, seized him by an arm and a leg, brought him back into the street, and dashed him with all the might of a strong man in a passion on the hard flag-stones. The boy was struck senseless, and, for aught I know, dead. He was taken to his home, and the furious man was arrested by a passing policeman. Do you wonder my heart ached at this sight also?

"Ah!" thought I, "there are two drunkards; the boy is drunk with whiskey, the man with passion. Both are slaves—poor, pitiable slaves. I am sure that man was once a passionate boy. He never learned to be his own master; and now it is likely his temper has made him a murderer. Alas for the poor drunken boy! Alas for the still poorer furious man!"

Children, believe me, appetite and passion are hard masters. Be sure you get them both under your feet now. Keep the first down with the brass chain of the teetotaler and with prayer. Kill the second with the grace of God and kind words. Angry words make bad tempers strong; silence and kind words stifle them to death.—S. S. Advocate.

The Right Pattern.

The old farmer sat down to his supper tired and hungry. His joint of meat was before him, which would relish all the better, he thought, with a drink of ale to wash it down.

"Go, my boy," he said, "and fetch me home a jug of ale from Dick's."

Thomas went. The shop was full of idle fellows, and among them his older brother, who lived more in the beer-shops than he lived at home; more on beer than on bread; more on others than on himself; so that all he was good for was good-for-nothing, which is a very sorry sort of excellence, you know. Drink, strong drink, made him quarrelsome, and the sight of Thomas with his mug, and especially his mug full of foaming ale, as it soon was, quickly excited him.

"Give me a swallow," he cried roughly.

"No, you don't," said Thomas; "no you don't; this is father's;" and he was hastening out of the door, when Jed caught him by the arm; a tussel followed, ending not only in spilling the ale, but in spilling the jug also, which fell on the floor and cracked its bottom out. Thomas caught it up, and hurried home with the story to his father. "Bottom's out, is it?' said the old man, after a moment's thinking, "well," he said, bringing down his hard fist with a bang upon the table, as if it meant something—"well, then, that's the last ale-jug for me. Put it down."

"Yes, father, but it will not hold any thing."

"Thomas, that makes it the very best ale-jug for me, I say. If it had been the kind I had always used, your brother might never have been the poor creature he now is."

That is so. And if this is the best ale-jug, it is the best whiskey-jug; and if it is the right pattern for a whiskey-jug, is it not the best pattern for a gin bottle, and a brandy bottle, and a wine bottle? Perhaps it is not exactly in style; but why not let reason and conscience, and health and industry, and Scripture sometimes set the fashion? I think they could be trusted, and in this matter we should; I doubt not, find them on the side of the old farmer's jug; do not you?—Child's Paper.

Two Ways.

I know a boy who, when his lit-tle sis-ter runs up to see what he is do-ing, and he does not want her so near, says:

"Please, sis-sy, go away, now; go, sis-sy, please."

Is not that bet-ter than to cry, "Get out!" as some boys do, and per-haps make it rough-er with a kick?

I know a lit-tle boy who, when he comes home hungry from school, runs into the kitch-en and says:

"Bid-dy, if you are not too busy, will you be kind enough to give me a cookie, or spread me a slice of bread and but-ter?"

Bid-dy is hap-py to leave her work and oblige a boy who speaks so. Is it not more po-lite than to rush into the kitch-en and cry out, "Give me something to eat, quick?"

I know a lit-tle boy who says, "Moth-er, if you are will-ing, I should like to go to Ed-die Brown's candy-pull to-night." And I know another who says, "I am going to Ed-die Brown's, wheth-er or no."

Which way of speak-ing be-comes a lit-tle boy best?—The Young Pilgrim.

Little Mary's Thought.—It was a most glorious sunset. The western sky was mantled with clouds of the most gorgeous hue, upon which little Mary gazed with thoughtful pleasure.

"Papa," she said, "do you know what I think when I see those pretty clouds?"

"No; what do you think, Mary?"

"I always think they are God's veils. Does'nt he have beautiful veils, papa, to hide him from us?"

True enough, thought I; the clouds which veil him from our sight now are beautiful. There is a rainbow on them, if we will see it; they shine with mercy and truth, and remind us of the time when the veil shall be parted, and He shall come in the clouds, and every eye shall see him.—Selected.

"God's Angels."—A sailor talking with a friend one day about his conversion, said: "It was caused, under God, by a story I read in a child's paper of a little girl praying for her impenitent father. I never see a little child now without thinking it may be one of God's angels." "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou perfected praise."

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 24.
WHOLE NUMBER 358.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.
The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.
We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

WILL THE WORLD BE BURNED UP WITH LITERAL FIRE?

BY ELD. THOMAS K. ALLEN.

"BUT the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which, the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up.—2 Peter iii. 10."

The above passage of scripture must either be understood figuratively or literally: if in a literal sense, then all of it should be taken literally, inasmuch as this class of scriptures will not admit of symbols and figures, as do the symbolic and figurative.

Let us then see how a strictly literal rendering of the text would appear.

In the day of the Lord, referred to, the heavens (the space above the earth, the expanse of air and sky), is to pass away with a great noise; and the cause of it, according to verse 12 in the same chap., is "The heavens being on fire, shall be dissolved." This word translated dissolved, we are told, means to release, to unfasten, to set free. The airy regions then being unfastened and released by fire, will pass away with a great noise, and the elements (primary matter) shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are within shall be burned up, (like a building set on fire) burned down; it shall burn until there shall be nothing left. Then the earth being burned up, and the heavens passing away, will leave a vacuum or empty space for a new heaven and new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness. The word new here, in a strictly literal sense, means thoroughly, entirely new; not the old one purified and changed, as we sometimes speaking figuratively of an old garment or structure, when remodelled; when literally speaking it would not be true to call them new. We should understand the word new, in the above passage of scripture, the same as in Heb. viii. 8, "He will make a new covenant with the house of Israel." Who will say that the new covenant only means the old one remodelled, changed, and revised? Surely no one would understand that scripture in a literal sense.

If then our text is to be understood in a literal sense, we are forced to symbolize many other scriptures; as for instance, Psalm civ. 5, "Who laid the foundation of the earth that it shall not be removed forever." Eccl. i. 4, "The earth abideth forever." We are also forced to spiritualize God's covenant with Abraham. Gen. xiii. 15, "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Dan. ii. 44, "In the days of these kings (not after their day is passed, and they shall have been destroyed and passed away) the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and shall stand forever." Dan. vii. 14, "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom, that which shall not be destroyed." How can all people, nations, and languages serve and obey him, if they are all destroyed, burned up, and have passed away? Psa. lxxii, "His enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him."

All of these texts of scripture, I repeat, will have to be taken in a symbolic and spiritual sense, if our text in Peter must be understood in a literal sense. Is it possible that God will literally melt the heavens, and burn up the earth, so completely as that there will be no more of it to burn, and it shall go out of itself, in order to destroy the world of ungodly, and to root the wicked out of it? O no; this earth is to be the everlasting abode of the saints. The inspired writer says, "the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from (not with) the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it (not burnt up with it.) —Prov. xi. 21, 22."

Our Saviour, in explaining the parable of the tares of the field says, "The Son of man shall send his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom (not the righteous) all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Prov. x. 30, "The righteous shall never be removed; but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." Thus it is sufficiently evident that the apostle Peter's language cannot be understood literally; it must then be figurative. In my next I will endeavor to give the true meaning of the text.

WINONA, MIN., March 2, 1871.

BAPTISM.

BY W. H. WHITMAN.

BR. STORRS: We had just read a tract on baptism, written by a Baptist, when we received the HERALD of Nov. 9. In reading Br. Thorne's article on baptism, it made us feel like asking a few questions, and making some remarks on the above subject. We wish to ask Br. Thorne if this subject is entirely clear to his mind? or, is there not some difficulty attending the subject? We have been raised under the influence of A. Campbell's teaching; and it is hard for any one to give up their early instilled ideas. We have studied the Bible independent (as much as we could) of all denominations since 1854; and the above subject has been the most difficult one to us that we have ever studied.

The first difficulty presented to our mind was this: John says, "He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Spirit." Jesus says, "John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit." Here are two baptisms distinctly taught; and it is also distinctly taught, that Jesus was greater than John. Then Paul says, "There is one Lord, one faith, and one baptism." Now if there is only one baptism in this dispensation, which one is it, the lesser or the greater? Here is the difficulty that we could not reconcile with the view that water is the baptism. And we have asked a great many water baptizers to reconcile it for us: but it has never been done yet.

Again, if Peter meant water, on the day of Pentecost, and that was God's plan for men to obtain the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, why did he change the programme at the house of Cornelius? If a person believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and is then dipped in water for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit, why is there no record of such an event since Pentecost? Why do men put water in Peter's mouth, when he could have said water as easy as they? Peter said "repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." And it seems on such an occasion as that, Peter meant just what he said, and said just what he meant. We must become crucified into the world; and hid from it by being baptized into Christ, "the one body."

For Noah being hid in the ark, is a type or figure of the baptism that will now save us. Christ is the antitypical ark; and to be saved we must be baptized into him, and remain in him all through the deluge of sin; as Noah was in the ark all through the deluge of water.

It is one thing to be baptized in water; but another thing entirely to be baptized into Christ, if we have studied the Bible right. It is said, the apostles practiced water baptism; therefore, there are many travelling through the land following the same thing. Will such practice all the Apostles did? Will they practice circumcision? Paul did. Acts xvi. 3. Will they shave their heads, make vows, and let a Jewish priest make offerings for them? Paul did: Acts xxi. 23-26. Will they dissemble? Peter did. Gal. ii. 11-16.

Br. Storrs, the above letter was written last fall, just before we heard of your sickness. We did not send it to Br. Thorne, because we did not wish to encumber him. We now send it to you.

GALESBURG, ILLS.

AN EXPOSITION OF REV. XX. 12.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

(Concluded from Feb. 15.)

WE have previously shown, in our investigation of this passage, that the expression, "the dead" of necessity refers only to the righteous, and hence has no reference whatever to the wicked dead. Among the arguments and proofs offered to sustain this conclusion is the convincing fact that "the dead" are represented as standing in the presence of God. This is a divine favor, which is granted only to "the pure in heart." We have also shown that the whole scene is located in heaven, and therefore furnishes positive evidence that "the dead," whom John saw standing before God, cannot embrace the ungodly dead. To show that this is unmistakably the meaning of the passage, we will examine one more fact therein stated.

IV. The great object for which saints, "both small and great," stood before the throne, in the vision under consideration, appears in the conclusion of the passage: "They were judged every man according to their works."

With the fact in mind that this judgment scene is located in heaven, in the immediate presence of God and amidst the heavenly hosts,—thus showing that, in the very nature of things, the wicked cannot be included in the multitude there assembled,—we are forced to the conclusion that this judgment will not take place till after the resurrection; or, in other words, till after the coming of Christ. Therefore, "the books" out of which they were judged do not embrace "the book of life," as this book is opened prior to the resurrection.

Doubtless few will assume that in this symbolic account a literal book is meant; but none will deny that a knowledge of our works are represented as being in the hands of God as a record by which he will render His judgment decision.

The "book of life" contains the names of all who shall "put on immortality" at the coming of Christ. His coming will take place "at the last day,"—i. e., end of this age,—according to revelation, and it is indisputable that the destiny of the whole human family is then at once decided from the "book of life." A distinction should be recognized between the decision and the execution of the decision. The rendering of the decision precedes its execution; but they are so intimately associated together that they culminate in one event at his coming. Hence the opening of the "book of life" makes known whose names are written therein, and the execution of this decision brings "the dead" (none but the righteous, 1 Cor. xv. 42-44) forth from the grave "in incorruption," and they shall be "caught up" to meet the Lord "in the air" (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17), while all others meet an ignoble fate in "the lake of fire.".

The "books" mentioned distinctly from the "book of life," therefore, must contain a record for another purpose, as they have no relation to the wicked, for the righteous alone are judged out of these books. The purpose of this record appears from other portions of Scripture.

The preceding remarks regarding the "book of life" and "the books," which contain a record for a different purpose, may produce the query in some minds whether there will be two judgments. We believe that such is the testimony of Scripture; not that the whole world will be judged twice, but the destiny of the race will be decided by one judgment, and the various positions which the saints will occupy in the kingdom will be decided after the resurrection by another judgment. The "books," distinctly mentioned from the "book of life," contains the record of what the righteous have done, by which they are judged. The Scriptures do not teach a gradation of happiness in the kingdom, but a gradation of position,—a distinction which is even now recognized in the mortal church. Such a gradation is plainly taught by Paul in his masterly argument in 1 Cor. xv., when he says: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory."—1 Cor. xv. 41. In harmony with this testimony of Paul the Revelator speaks of the immortal multitude who stood before God as composed of "both small and great."

To show the certainty of the saints being judged for the purpose which we mentioned, we will produce the testimony of Paul in 2 Cor. v. 10. He says: "For WE must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Paul does not here speak as the representative of Christians, and has reference to the judgment of Christians brought to view in Rev. xx. 12. The saints are to be judged according to the things done in this mortal state, which Paul in another place is careful to explain. He says: "Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labor. . . . For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall SUFFER LOSS; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." —1 Cor. iii. 9, 11-15. It will be noticed that Paul here speaks only of the saints. He compares their good works to gold, silver, precious stones, and those whose works are of the abiding character shall "receive a reward;" and those whose works are compared to perishable material, like wood, hay, stubble, shall "suffer loss," though they shall be saved.

We think enough has already been said to convince any one that there is a judgment in the future specially for the saints; and we think no one can disprove but that Rev. xx. 12, refers to this judgment, and therefore affords no evidence in favor of the theory of the revival of wicked dead; and a candid consideration of the evidence we have brought forward in our examination ought to convince any one of the inconsistency of making such an application of this passage.

In contemplation of the glorious future that awaits the church of Christ, each of us should strive to be more fully endowed with the Holy Spirit, and labor earnestly to have our works of that imperishable character that in the day when our works shall be made manifest we may not suffer loss, but hear the merciful words of our Saviour thrilling through every fibre of our being: "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

Beloved in the Lord, let us continue earnestly to hold up before a perishing world the only hope of the gospel—life eternal through Jesus Christ alone,—and let us cling steadfastly to the precious promise that the "just by faith shall live again."

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

NOTE.—An apology is due for my delay in preparing the concluding portion of this Exposition of Rev. xx. 12. The past few weeks' labor has been so taxing upon my time and strength that the delay was unavoidable. W. H. S.

FROM J. F. LEE, M. D.

BR. STORRS: What shall I say? Things new and old? Look and see—take and read, . . . "The man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." Every like begets its like. There is a knowledge of good and evil in all the offspring of Adam and Eve. Every one of the human family, possessed with common sense, has a sense of right and wrong, and knows good and evil. Love and hatred are common to all; so are wisdom and folly. If evil is pursued a sense of guilt is realized, and "a sense of guilt is a sense of Deity." Self-condemnation, remorse, is the result of sin. It is said, "The heathen in his blindness bows down to stocks and stones:" and are there professing Christians who bow down to dollars and cents, worshipping the creature more than the Creator? But what of all this? Had the heathen no light? Did they not know good and evil? Did they not see? How then could one of them, commit infanticide, saying, "Vedeo meliora probogue, deteriora sequor:"

"I see the right, and approve it too,
I know the wrong and yet the wrong pursue"—

if so knew not right and wrong, good and evil? Was she blind? Let inspiration answer. "For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law, are a law unto themselves. Which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing, or else excusing one another." The goodness, forbearance, and long suffering of God, who is love, not willing that any should perish. He alone is the judge of all the families of the earth. His promise to Abraham has not yet been fulfilled. The time of its fulfilment has not yet arrived, and the mode, with all the particulars, are not so clearly revealed as to justify any one in saying in what way and when it will be accomplished. Who preached the gospel to Paul? Who gave him faith? Who inspired and illuminated him? Are we better than heathens? Who can say, who dare say, no heathens, to whom protestants have not preached the theological gospel, can possibly be saved? Is not the law written in their hearts? And may not God reveal the gospel of Jesus Christ to them as he did to Paul? Who knows? Who presumes to set as judge of all who never heard Methodists, Baptists, or any other sect preach hell and damnation?

Man is not utterly blind, and he cannot palliate or exculpate himself if he chooses the evil instead of the good, or death in preference to life. He is so constituted that, so sure as he transgresses the law written in his heart, so sure does he become a self-accuser, and realize remorse, shame and confusion; feelings wrought by the goodness of God to lead him to repentance. Let any Christian call to mind his first transgression, his first sin, and ask himself what were his feelings when his first sin was finished. If it were lawful to name one man now living in N. Y., and such a question were proposed to him, he would perhaps be astonished, and almost believe that some one betrayed the confidence reposed in him 52 years ago, or that in his dreams, he might have given utterance to the feelings of remorse —remorse—remorse.

Nominal Christians are sometimes very proud and haughty and censorious, and think they are better, one hundred fold, than heathens or Roman Catholics, and that their great city is far superior in point of intelligence, refinement and christianity to Paris, Rome, or ancient Babylon! never once imagining that they themselves with their 400 churches are vessels of wrath fitted for destruction. And this is not all: They are wise to do evil: they are as blind as the heathen, and more abominably corrupt and polluted. In addition they usurp the seat of God, denounce sentence of perdition on men whom they never saw, and ask God in prayer (printed) to execute their sentence, and send them into hell quickly to suffer eternal torments!

Is there any one good among us? Any one wise enough to act as judge of the living and the dead? Let him beware who is wise in his own conceit, or usurps the attributes of God. Humility is a lovely, shining grace, self-knowledge imparted by the Holy Ghost. "Blessed are the poor in spirit." "Judge not, lest ye be judged." "Who art thou that judgest another?"

"Preach the gospel to every creature—which was preached to every creature which is under heaven—and the gospel must first be published among all nations—and this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Since the days of the Apostles, has the gospel been preached down to the time of Luther, Calvin, Zuinglius, Knox, etc., and since the days of the latter to our day? Is thus another gospel (which is not another) preached by the various sects? a gospel not like that which Paul preached? Early in the days of George III, Blackstone said, "That he went from church to church to hear every clergyman of note in London, and that he heard not a single discourse which had more christianity in it than the writings of Cicero; and that it would have been impossible for him to discover, from what he heard, whether the preacher was a follower of Confucius, Mahommed, or Christ."

In conclusion, I now say, that I have never believed that the promise to Abraham has been fulfilled, or will be, previous to the appearing and kingdom of our Lord and LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ. I never wish to act hastily, and I am sorry that any good brother should express his fear relative to what you have already written. I hope none will act too hastily. It is time enough to form an opinion when all the testimony is heard. Finally, I am really surprised to find that any one thinks the promise has been fulfilled.

MONROE, N. C., March 1871.

A QUESTION ON THE 2,300 DAYS.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

CAN the 2,300 days extend beyond the year 1873? The time given to Daniel for the length of the vision, (2,300 days) during which "the Sanctuary and the host should be trodden under foot, at the end of which the Sanctuary should be "vindicated," or "justified," must commence at the time the Medo-Persian had reached its highest glory; not much later than that. For "the two horns were high, and the higher came up last." The highest point of greatness must have been during the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, who reigned "from India to Ethiopia, over a hundred and twenty and seven provinces."

The empire must have begun to decline before his death, which occurred in the year B.C., 426. The "Encyclopedia Americana" says, "that the first symptoms of decline in the Medo-Persian Empire were during the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus." The Medo-Persian power reached its height and began to decline under the Prince. For proof observe: That Egypt and Greece revolted from him; he could not subdue them; but was obliged to make peace with them. There was trouble in his household, with his brother; and there prevailed one of the greatest plagues ever known in the the world. See Rollin. His death occurring B.C. 426, take this time from the 2,300, and have 1874; but we must subtract one year for the bridge between B.C. and A.D.; therefore, we have 1873.

To illustrate the reason for this subtraction: If we date an event in B.C. one, and another in A.D. one, we shall make them two years apart, whereas we have but one year in time, in point of fact.

CHARLESTOWN, MASS., March 10, 1871.

NOTE TO ELD. W. N. PILE.

BY ELD. J. B. COOK.

FOR obvious reasons I forbear to reply to yours in the HERALD of March 8th, beyond a note to avoid misapprehension. 1. The promise and oath of God to "bless the nations" by "the seed"—"The 7th Day"—the "REST that remaineth." Heb. iv. 1-9, "The times of the blessed and only Potentate.—1 Tim. vi. 15; Psa. lxxii. 17; Isa. xi. 4-7; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; Dan. vii. 14; Rom. xv. 8-13; Rev. xx. 5-7, and the reign of Christ on the throne of his father David—the governor of God's people Israel—all belong in the Bible yet; with a thousand fold more.

Words about what I say aside from "the word of the Lord," that I quoted, avail nothing. Great men think their talk against the Second Advent supersedes it; but still it IS THERE! 2. "From one (example) learn all," and note the utter failure even to see the points before and between us; much less meet the case—Psa cx. was quoted in the tract—as it stands. As such I noted it. But now in your reply you make out a new text (at v. 6—from other authority) too easily, but rather superficially. You thus augment and aggravate the error of the tract—ignore the perpetuity of Messiah's royal priesthood (v. 4) and the doctrine of the entire Psalm quoted so often in the New Testament, and thus unwittingly, I presume, assume to subject Jehovah to the human conditions of the Son of man!—v. 7. As if "He who never fainted nor is weary," has need to drink of the brook, like Jesus! Or, as if this injured and amended text, (v. 5) would alter the Lordship of Christ's priesthood, which the WHOLE PSALM so solemnly ASSERTS. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear," that Christ cannot WITHDRAW on such short sighted amendments. The old doctrine is still there. Br. P., though personally a stranger, I have become interested in you. Please accept the "word of exhortation." Please, as the Bible is our platform of principles, or the standard of faith and mortals, try this plan: Instead of toiling against and explaining away "the word—that abideth forever;" take up those portions that I try to bring before you. Please pray and sing in the spirit of all God's "good will to men" that breathes out through all the promises in Christ. Preach and pray and publish in the strains of this majestic Psalm, and in the power of Christ's unceasing priesthood. Admit that God can see the harmony, though you don't; and that Christ's second coming is itself the greatest hammer of truth that knocks the hub out of your whole wheel, to dash it to pieces. Do consider that Christ cannot come to Zion and the throne of David, when Zion has been removed and gone away to him. The "King of Salem" cannot come in his kingdom; when, after having had the kingdom, he must now "WITHDRAW." No, no. "You do greatly err" in all this.

Again I exhort you to pray, preach and print in the spirit and truth of "the gospel" before preached to Abraham, that Christ confirmed; that St. Paul proclaimed; and observe the sweet and enlightening power of it in your soul, and in your hearers.

Sure am I that you cannot come up into this mount of revealed glory—even a little way—without a shout; "Lord it is good to be here." May this reserved note be to thee, brother, "an excellent oil, that will not break," serve to heal and replenish and bless. "The gospel" will then, I trust, seem just grand and good enough for God to give, and then fill FULL, to accomplish "the FULNESS of the BLESSING of the gospel of Christ." Amen.

The Lord Jehovah, is indeed in "the word," He "is in Christ reconciling the world to himself." HE will judge, destroy, and redeem and save—but all by Christ, WHOM HE hath ordained and assured to all, by his resurrection "from the dead." If you would have Christ "withdraw," you would annul the whole gospel. It would be like having the sun "withdraw" from day, while yet the sun is God's ordinance to make the light of day.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

LIVING EPISTLES.

CHRISTIANS are epistles to be read. The world reads them every day. How important that this living gospel which walks and talks and stirs about in public places should be correctly printed! Yet how many of these living epistles have been printed from battered type, from mixed fonts, on spotted paper, and in dim ink. But after all, orthodoxy is safer in the consecrated heart than in the theological library. Evangelism is an upright, open-eyed, warm-handed, advancing thing, not the fiat flimsiness of a mere programme, to be written and put away on the shelf for safe-keeping; it is always alive, alert and growing; it is not dead Latin, but vital mother-tongue in this country; it is not steepled in church, cadenced in ritual or robed at the altar, so much as hearted in living people and radiated in work-day duties.—Selected.

GENUINE CHRISTIANITY.—We want in you a Christianity that is Christian across counters, over dinner-tables, behind the neighbor's back as in his face. We want in you a Christianity that we can find in the temperance of the meal, moderation of dress, in respect for authority, in amiability at home, in veracity and simplicity in mixed society. Rowland Hill used to say he would give very little for the religion of a man whose very dog and cat were not the better for his religion. We want fewer gossipping, slandering, gluttonous, peevish, conceited, bigoted Christians. "To make them effectual, all our public religious measures, instructions, benevolent agencies, missions, need to be managed on a high-toned, scrupulous, and unquestionable tone of honor, without evasion, or partisanship, or overmuch of the serpent's cunning. The hand that gives away the Bible must be unspotted from the world. The money that sends the missionary to the heathen must be honestly earned. In short, the two arms of the Church, Justice and Mercy, must be stretched out, working for man, strengthening the brethren, or else your faith is vain, and ye are yet in your sin."—Huntingdon.

SERVE God; let him be the author of all thy actions; commend all thy endeavors to him who must either wither or prosper them: please him with prayer; lest, if he frown, he confound all thy fortune and labor, like the drops of rain upon the sandy ground.—Raleigh

AN EXPOSITION OF 1 COR. XV. 24–28.

BY HENRY YOUNG.

"Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power: for he must reign till he (the Father) hath put all enemies under his (the Son's) feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed" or put under his feet, "is death. But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is exempted which did put all things under him. And when all things are subdued unto him, then shall the Son also, himself, be subject unto him that did put all things under him, that God may be all in all."

I will now give a short exposition of the above texts, by asking and answering five questions.

Nearly the same questions have been asked already in the HERALD, though not fully answered; the three first not at all. They are as follows:

1. What is "the end" here spoken of? "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God," etc. 2. What is the kingdom here referred to? 3. When is it delivered up? 4. What are the ideas in the apostle's mind when he says, "the last enemy that shall be destroyed," or "put under his feet," or "subdued unto him, is death?" 5. How is all this accomplished?

These five questions I regard as very important, and their correct answers will be found to cover very important ground in the exposition of the Scripture here considered, as also very many other parallel texts.

First, then, What is the "end" here spoken of? I answer: It is the end of the time mentioned in Psalm cx. 1: "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." And 1 Cor. xv. 25: "For he must reign till he (the Father) hath put all enemies under his (the Son's) feet." But reign where? This brings us to our second question, viz., What is the kingdom here referred to, which the Son is to deliver up to the Father? I answer: It is none other than the Father's kingdom and throne, where the Son sits for a limited time, until there is done a specific work.

Now the 3d question, which is, When is said kingdom delivered up? seems quite easy, though it has caused not a little perplexity; for it was not strange that men should be troubled to find when the Son would deliver up his own throne and kingdom, seeing we are everywhere in the Bible assured that the reign of Christ on his own throne, and in his kingdom, will be perpetual, though in subordination to the Father, who did set him on his (the Father's) throne "until" the proposed work was done; i. e., done in council and purpose; and then did set him on his (the Son's) own throne, there to carry into execution the mighty work which was done only in purpose and council, while he sat at his Father's right hand.

It is plain that the delivering up of the kingdom to God must be anterior to his taking his own, however short the intervening time; for he does not occupy both thrones at one and the same time. Are we not, then, prepared to say, that the Son delivers up the kingdom to his Father at his second coming? Now if this is not the delivering up spoken of in these texts, then I am willing to say that I know not what the language means.

4. What are the ideas in the apostle's mind when he says, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed," or put under his feet, subdued unto him, is death? We have already anticipated the answer to this, by saying that all that is done, while the Son sits in council with the Father, is done by legislation; and we have no doubt but this was Paul's view when he wrote, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." As if he should say: This act of legislation concerning the last enemy is the last act. This finishes the work to be done while the Son sits with the Father on his throne.

And as we read the preceding context, the 23d verse, which reads, "But every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." It would seem that the last act done in legislation, is the first act to be done in execution, when Christ the head of the Church shall come. Then the church of the first-born will also be born. And this seems necessary, as the living head and living body, joined and complete, are to carry into execution, under God the Father, all the remaining work which was done in council, while "the wonderful Councillor" sat in council with the Father. What dreadful, and yet glorious, and, I had almost said, unending work is here presented to the mind! for, as we write, utterances of God and Christ, and prophets, and wise men, who have spoken in the inspired volume, crowd upon our mind almost without number, touching the execution of this purposed work, which we have here no space to quote.

5. How is all this accomplished? We are now ready to say, that it can be done only in purpose, in legislation. And we ask, Is not this sufficient? It might not be if it were only men's legislation; for we could not then be sure of its execution. But "My council shall stand," saith God, "and I will do all my pleasure." Then we will not fear for the performance. "Fear not little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

In conclusion: I wish to inquire, by what law, or rule in argument, are we compelled to decide that when death, the last enemy, is destroyed in the case of those who are made alive at Christ's coming; it cannot be destroyed in the same way to others, if God pleases, after that?

PITTSFIELD, N. H., March, 1871.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 22, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE MAILS.

We have much complaint that our paper is not received till it has been out nearly a week, even within from ten to a hundred and fifty miles of this city. We have spoken to the chief officer of the newspaper department here, and he gave us assurance it would not occur again. Still the complaints continue. We put the paper in the New York Post-office Wednesday morning, uniformly. Why it cannot reach R. I., and Philadelphia before the next week Monday or Tuesday is marvelous to us. Such neglect in the Post-office is highly censurable; but we have no means to enforce a a reform.

NEW TRACTS.

WE have issued four new Tracts, which will be ready for delivery in a few days. Some of these were commenced last October, just before our sickness. That has been the cause of the delay in their appearance. They are all added to our "Campaign Documents" as follows:

No. 27.—THE KINGDOM OF GOD: What is it? and where Located? Also, TRUE LITERALISM: and "MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM." By the Editor of the Herald of Life.

No. 28.—THE DESTINY OF THE WICKED. An Examination of John v. 28, 29: By Jacob Grim. THE NATURE OF DEATH: By Bishop Law. THE PUNISHMENT OF THE WICKED: By Joel Simonds. THE "MORTAL RESURRECTION:" By Stewart Carlisle. MATERIALISM VS. IMMATERIALISM: By W. H. Spencer.

No. 29.—THE DEAD ARE DEAD. Does the spirit live when the man is dead? What is death? The old claim disproved: By the Editor of the Herald of Life. A DEFENCE OF THE LIFE VIEWS: By Stewart Carlisle. PERVERTING THE WORD: Selected.

No. 30.—INHERENT IMMORTALITY: ITS ORIGIN AND BLASPHEMY: Also, A SERMON ON CHRIST AS THE LIFE-GIVER: By the Editor of the Herald of Life.

The foregoing tracts will be sold at two cents each: postage to be added; which will be two cents on seven copies.

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD TO ABRAHAM.—NO. 2.

IF we put in connection with that promise and oath certain other statements of the Bible, we see not how any impartial student of scripture can come to any other conclusion in regard to the meaning of this engagement of God to Abraham than its obvious sense. It either belongs to the past or future ages of this world's history. That it has been fulfilled in any past age, or ages, it is impossible for any one to prove.

Let us now look at corresponding testimony, and see if the Bible does not re-affirm the same idea of a period in which all the families of the earth are to be blessed in Abraham and his seed.

Jesus was introduced into the world with this proclamation by "the angel of the Lord:" . . "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people: for unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke ii. 10, 11. This is the same, in substance, as "the angel of the LORD" uttered to Abraham when He "called to him out of heaven." Gen. xxii., after the trial in offering up his son Isaac. "All people" are announced, by the angel at Jesus' birth, as those who "shall be" the recipients of the "good tidings of great joy," thus proclaimed.

Again. When the child Jesus was brought into the temple at Jerusalem to be "presented to the Lord," old Simeon, full of the Holy Spirit, took the child in his arms and said, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people: a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel."—Luke ii. 28–32. "All people" have not yet seen this light in any age past: then it will have a fulfilment somewhere in the future.

John says of "the Word made flesh," "That was the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."—John i. 9. Is this not equal to saying, "All the families of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham's seed?" Take this in connection with Jesus' words, John iii. 16, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." If God required belief in his Son, in order to the reception of eternal life, then He is pledged to have all the world, that is, "all the families of the earth," blessed with the knowledge of His love and gift. How else could they believe in his Son? To us, this text, in connection with the promise and oath of God to Abraham, is demonstration that in some age "all the families of the earth" are to be blessed with the knowledge of God's love to them, and so have a chance to believe the good news.

Again. After his resurrection from the dead, Jesus commanded his disciples, saying, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark xvi. 15. Was not that command based on the promise and oath to Abraham? and was it not an announcement and pledge that said promise and oath should be accomplished under His superintendence? and will not He, who was the "propitiation for the sins of the whole world," fail in the work He came into the world to accomplish, if "every creature" does not, in this age or "the ages to come," hear the "glad tidings" under circumstances which shall enable them to embrace or reject the offered mercy? The command was given to the apostles, and through them to the Church universal. But it has never yet been carried out. Will this age close without its being done? Certainly it will, if it is to close near the time in which we live. Does not this fact involve another age or ages in which the promise and oath of God, and the command of Jesus shall all find a full and perfect fulfilment? We have no doubt such will be the fact. Does it not follow, that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all who belong to the seed promised, viz., all of the true Church of Christ, must first have their resurrection from the dead, or, if alive when Christ returns from heaven, be changed to immortality?

Abraham did not receive the land God sware to give him, during his natural life; therefore, you all say, he must be raised from the dead to have the promise and oath fulfilled. The gospel has never yet been preached to "every creature." Yet the command has never been revoked and must some time be carried out: else how are men to be judged? Justified or condemned? "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved;" or, have life; "but he that believeth not, shall be damned;" or, be condemned. Here the principle of judgment is laid down. Faith brings the life which is eternal. Unbelief is that which brings the condemnation to death eternal.

Here, then, we see that the proclamation of God's love and good will to men must be proclaimed to "every creature" before their final state is determined, or made permanent; i. e., the Gospel message is to be proclaimed to men first; and their reception or rejection of it determines their final state. The Gospel message is that by which they are to be judged. In no age or dispensation has that message ever yet been proclaimed to "every creature:" therefore, an age or ages will be employed to carry out God's promise or oath that all the families of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham and his seed.

Again: "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."—1 Tim. ii. 5, 6. Here the fact is set forth that Christ gave himself a ransom for all "men;" and that fact is to be testified in due time to all for whom he gave himself a ransom. In other words: "all the families of the earth shall be blessed" in the seed of Abraham according to the promise and oath of God.

Yet again: "We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels . . . that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man."—Heb. ii. 9. "All the families of the earth" are embraced in this language. But, the beloved John says, "Jesus Christ . . . is the propitiation . . . for the sins of the whole world."—1 John ii. 1, 2. This expression covers the whole ground—all men, all families, all nations. Still more, John adds, "We have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour" (LIFE-GIVER) "of the world." "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent His Son, to be the propitiation for our sins."—1 John iv. 9, 10, 17.

Do not these testimonies cover the whole ground of the promise and oath of God to Abraham, that in him and his seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed? We think they do, and see no way to escape that conclusion; hence, believe a time is to come, in a probationary state, when the promise and oath will be carried out in all their fulness according to God's design and intention. Whether it embraces all that ever have lived, or some one age in the dispensations, it may not be so easy to prove; but it cannot fail of being in an age when men are in a state of probation. If, then, no such universal blessing of the families of the earth has taken place in any of the past ages, there must and will be an age or ages in the future when the promise and oath of God will be seen not to be an unmeaning pledge, but will have a fulfilment which shall justify it in all its fulness and beyond all finite conception.

We do not hesitate to admit, that we are inclined to believe the promise includes all those who have died without any knowledge of God's love to the world; that by some means, God will, hereafter, cause all men to see the love He has had to them in giving his Son to give them eternal life. What God has promised He is able also to perform; no matter how impossible or improbable the thing may appear to finite wisdom. After God had promised Abraham that in Isaac his seed should be called, He commanded him to offer up this child of promise for a burnt offering. Did Abraham stop to find fault, and say, God cannot fulfil His promise, if Isaac is to die? No: he "accounted that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead;" and his faith embraced the fact that such would be the case, if Isaac died; for, "he staggered not at the promise," though all appearances were against it in that hour of the trial of his faith. Is God less able to raise all the dead to whom the blessing of Abraham and his seed has never yet appeared, than He was to raise Isaac, to fulfil His promise of a multitudinous seed? We hardly come up to the Abrahamic faith in these days, though we perhaps think ourselves strong in faith; yet too many, if they cannot see just how a thing is to be done, reject it, as if it were impossible for God to do it because they cannot see the process.

We, however, are not disposed, on this subject, to press the idea that the promise and oath embraces all the past, but if not, it must relate to some dispensation in the future; and hence there must be a probationary age or ages yet to come, beyond this.

AN EXHORTATION.

Finally. be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another: love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise, blessing: knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing.—1 Peter iii, 8 and 9.

"Finally"—telos—at length—"be ye all of one mind"—omophrones—be united, unanimous, like minded: especially relating to that spirit of order and subjection of which he had previously spoken: without that there can be no unity, but rather division—"having compassion one of another"—sumpatheis—sympathising one with another. Here the sympathy of one member of the body for each and all the other members is hinted at as illustrating the state of mind each member of Christ should have for his fellow member in all things, and graciously growing out of the one mind they were exhorted to. "Love as brethren"—philadelphoi—exercise and exhibit that mutual affection to each other which your relation to Christ demands: hence—"be pitiful"—tender-hearted—"be courteous"—friendly-minded, affectionate—"not rendering evil for evil"—not giving back evil for evil—"nor railing for railing"—reproaching, opprobrious and abusive language:—"but contrariwise blessing"—on the other hand bestow blessings—strive to make happy. The evil actor, who uses abusive language and reproaches others, does so because he is himself unhappy; do not add to his unhappiness by acting as he does, but by an opposite course strive to lead him to repentance and reformation: "knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing:"—by pursuing the course pointed out, whatever is the result on the offender you will find a blessing to yourselves: for so hath God appointed, that no effort to do good or be good shall go unrewarded.

MAN NOT IMMORTAL.

REVIEW OF N. D. GEORGE ON "ANNIHILATION."

No person familiar with the history of Israel under the Thearchy is unaware that in distrusting God's word, lacking faith in and sometimes forgetting His promises, the chosen people fell into many and sore difficulties. When the journeying multitude had come to the wilderness of Paran, Moses was commanded by the Lord to choose a leading man from each tribe, and send them forward to "search the land of Canaan which I give unto the children of Israel." Moses selected the men that were to "spy out the land" of promise, and told them to examine it carefully, see "whether it be good or bad" land; "and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many;" what kind of "cities they be that they dwell in; whether in tents or in strongholds." So the men went up and searched as Moses had told them, and the people anxiously awaited their return. Finally they came back laden with figs and pomegranates and one certain cluster of grapes so large that it was borne upon a staff between two men. There was great rejoicing in the camp when the good news had spread about. Then the men "came to Moses, and to Aaron and to all the congregation of the children of Israel," and said, "we went up into the land and examined it, according to instructions, and surely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it;' but, but there are giants there: 'we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants."

Joy was at once turned into sorrow. "All the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night." They murmured also "against Moses and against Aaron; and they said, would God we had died in the wilderness!" But Caleb and Joshua, having more faith, said, "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." They acknowledged there were giants in the land but, said they, "their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us; fear them not."

They who in these last days of increasing religious and theological enquiry have sought to enter into possession of the pure faith as it exists in the word of God, but which has been grievously corrupted by such human speculations and inventions as inherent immortality, with all its long and forbidding train of consequent error, including that of eternal suffering for the finally impenitent, are menacingly met by the raging, dark-visaged giants which inhabit and undertake to defend the land of latter-day theology. These giants are many, and they have a king of "fierce countenance" ruling over them, whose name is Prejudice. He is associated with and assisted in his rule by many ministers, wielding various degrees of power, and prominent among them is one Ignorance. The subjects of these are, in many respects, alike. You cannot approach them with any item of truth which has not been taught them from their earliest conceptions of any truth without exposing yourself to denunciation in terms not remarkable for beauty nor suggestive of eminent spiritual attainment on the part of the authors. They will regard you and treat you as religious enthusiasts, or as doctrinal adventurers, and will have none of your, to them, new ideas though what you present them be shown to be the eternal truth of God.

Then there is a third, whose name is Creed. His subjects have usually no sympathy or patience whatever with any thing which enters into conflict with what he has told them. If one of their number happens to attain unto a knowledge of some truth which thus conflicts and, glorying and rejoicing in it, he labors to enlighten others, he is cast out of the synagogue, so to speak, an ejecting process usually being selected more with reference to expedition than ceremony or christian love and tenderness. There is also a fourth, a mild, good-natured and smooth-tongued but, withal, a stubborn giant who seldom offers any opposition, and when he does it is of a negative sort. He nevertheless possesses an influence inferior only to that of Prejudice. His name is Indifference. But however many and strong are these giants and their emissaries, we do not share in this matter the distrust betrayed by ancient Israel under the circumstances noted, for, like Caleb and Joshua, we know "their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us."

Although the author of the work under consideration has introduced no new argument against the unity of man's nature, his unconsciousness in death, and the literal destruction of the finally impenitent; nor, consequently, adduced anything in support of the theory of inherent or natural immortality which has not already been repeatedly presented and refuted, he has dashed into the subject at some points with a boldness not unfrequently bordering upon recklessness, often evincing, seemingly, a determination to sustain at all hazards certain notions, even where the current of Scripture testimony sets so strongly, nay overwhelmingly against them as to baffle and turn to utter nought the most skilled and learned efforts to so much as create a ripple on the surface of its calm, majestic flow. Whenever he has met with an opposing argument that is susceptible of being by any adroit manœuvre turned from its proper and legitimate course, and carried to ludicrous conclusions, he has diligently sought to accomplish it. This style of warfare must, as all know, to effect its purpose, be waged with both ability and dexterity: but so far from this his movements in that direction are, as must be apparent to any practiced eye, usually so clumsily effected and fall so far short of their aim, that they can be said to rise no higher than mere attempts, and must be seen by even casual observers to recoil upon the theory in the interests of which they are instituted. Some Scripture passages that must ever be regarded by unbiased minds as arraying themselves in opposition to the popular theological views on the subject named are confronted and treated in a manner clearly suggestive of giant presence, while others, mighty bulwarks of truth, are left untouched because to touch them would be to bring his theory and the truth into a contrast strikingly unfavorable to the former.

Before proceeding further let us consider certain of his plainly stated propositions. On page 184, he says: "We remark, too, that physical death is not the penalty of sin." Again, p. 191: "And also that death, when threatened as a penalty, is not extinction, but conscious suffering." It is "spiritual death."—P. 189.

There is no better understood nor more rigidly observed rule in the creation of penal laws than is that of defining the penalty of violation by the use of terms the most unambiguous, comprehensible and unequivocal; nor is there a principle more strictly regarded in any department of human action than that which in the establishment of the penal code makes the penalty proportionate to the offense. This principle was not always formerly recognized, the most extreme penalties being not unfrequently imposed for the most trivial offences. When, however, under the increasing light of divine truth, the principles and requirements of justice became better understood, its administration was purged of many of the barbarous usages previously attending it. Since, then, in divine truth inheres the power to direct the human mind to something like proper conceptions of justice in the enactment and execution of those laws which govern men as communities, we are certainly bound to believe that in the dealings of God, the Author of truth, with the race will appear the very perfection of justice in all its parts. Do the Creator's dispensations to mankind, as recorded in sacred history, justify this truth? None, we think, will deny it. But still more, do they not confirm it? We affirm they do. Much might be adduced in proof of this, but one or two instances will fully suffice.

When God, by Moses, gave the Decalogue to the children of Israel, He said: "Thou shalt not kill." That was a clearly stated law. He afterward defined the penalty of its violation in the following explicit terms: "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death." Again: "Thou shalt not steal." . . . "If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, . . . he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep." There is no ambiguity in any of this language; and it was understood by the people. They did not understand the death threatened them in the event of commission of murder to be any thing more or less than a literal deprivation of life. So with all the laws, general, and special, which God has given to men. Unless the Edenic circumstance be an exception, He has never expressed an extreme penalty by the use of terms calculated to leave in the mind of the creature a doubt as to its nature. With this fact, then, in view, we are prepared to examine the Edenic law, and see whether the penalty of its violation was designated by the use of terms so equivocal and obscure as some assert.

The clearly announced penalty of the simple law given to Adam was, "Thou shalt surely die." No person would for a single moment entertain the thought that any thing was here meant to be understood other than just what this language implies, did not a theory of man's nature demand it. The meaning of death, here, is, says Mr. George, "Spiritual death," "conscious suffering." That he affirms to be the threatened penalty: and the "conscious suffering" he, of course, holds to be, in the case of the impenitent, eternal. There, dear reader, you have the theory of this profound thinker, with one of its beautiful features unveiled. Just look at it! God gave to Adam a law expressed in plainest literal terms. He desired, of course—to suppose otherwise would be to charge Him with wilful deception—to state the penalty also, which was unending existence in suffering, in equally comprehensive, unmistakable language. That, therefore, His creature Adam might not misapprehend it, but should know it perfectly to be eternal suffering, He said, "Thou shalt surely die."

What mind of even the most ordinary intelligence does not revolt at the simple thought? Into just such surpassing folly does the theory of inherent immortality lead; just such untoward deception does it impute to an infinite, all-wise, loving Father; and all because considered indispensable to the preservation of a dogma. A doctrine which is so much a libel upon the character of God, and the existence of which demands of its votaries such wallowing in the mire of such extreme absurdities may be thought by Mr. G.

a proper one to be cherished by him and all predetermined to its defence, but it will always immediately cease to be so estimated by as many as become more properly learned, as we believe, in the school of Christ. The tendency of belief in natural immortality to so far blunt and divert men's moral and intellectual perceptions of divine government as to render the occupation and defence of such positions even possible is of itself overwhelmingly condemnatory of the theory.

Profound John Foster, essayist, and clergyman in a Baptist church, asks the important question, "May we not think that if so transcendently dreadful a doctrine had been meant to be taught, there would have been such forms of proposition, of circumlocution, if necessary, as would have rendered all doubt or question a mere palpable absurdity?" To this there can be but one reply. Every enlightened and honest heart must respond in unqualified affirmation. To do otherwise is to charge God with being less, far less than He so positively declares Himself to be. Dr. John Locke, the philosopher, wrote concerning the text under consideration: "It seems a strange way of understanding a law which requires the plainest and most direct words, that by death should be meant eternal life in misery." Strange indeed is it beyond expression. The theory that requires an exposition so much at war with every principle of justice and sound sense, such wresting of the Scriptures to steady its tottering form is assuredly based upon a false foundation, and contains within itself the elements of its utter destruction.

Upon the supposition that by "death," mentioned in connection with the Edenic law, was meant something totally unlike that which the simple term imports, the question arises would Adam, without being fully informed concerning that unnatural and peculiar meaning, understand it in any other than its literal sense? There cannot be two opinions: all will agree that he would not. Well, does it appear that any such information was given him? It does not, and to maintain that he was so informed is to assert what not only cannot be proved, but also what must be esteemed an unwarranted assumption, since the record is silent on the point. That both our first parents understood the penalty to be literal death, deprivation of life, the circumstances attending the act of disobedience abundantly show. Mr. G. will find few indeed even among advocates of inherent immortality, to agree with him that spiritual death, a condition of "conscious suffering," of "wretchedness and sin," was the penalty threatened.

Dr. Lange, writing upon the words of the serpent, "For God doth know that in the day," etc., says: "The imitation of the divine language contains a species of mockery. Your eyes, says the voice of the tempter, instead of closing in death, will be, for the first time, truly opened." What a resemblance is there between the serpent's language as paraphrased by the Dr., and the sentiment pronounced from many pulpits in the present time! Dr. Adam Clarke says of the words: "Ye shall not surely die:" "The tempter insinuates the impossibility of her dying, as if he had said, 'God has created thee immortal; thy death, therefore, is impossible; and God knows this.'" The undying soul is the real man, says popular theology, and as that is immortal its "death is impossible." How like what Dr. Clarke imputes to the serpent!

The author of the work under notice chafes under the pressure of the stubborn fact that his position respecting the nature of man, and that literal death was not the penalty of sin, so exactly corresponds with the words of the serpent, and he finally endeavors to show there is some agreement between our position and the serpent's lie. This, however, as few of his readers will fail to see, is a sort of forlorn hope, a desperate attempt to turn attention in another direction. Eve, until her unfortunate intercourse with the tempter, believed that eating of the forbidden fruit would result in her death, literal death, of course. She informed the wily tempter that God had said so. This was met by the assertion, "ye shall not surely die;" and it was added, "God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened." The first assertion is in perfect harmony with the theory we combat. It says, "our first parents did 'not surely die.'" The condition into which it is claimed the guilty pair in consequence of transgression were plunged is by no means altogether unlike that which the serpent declared they should experience.

Nothing can well be more clear than that the death threatened as a penalty of violation of the Edenic law was a literal one, deprivation of life, extinction of the conscious being which God had so recently given them. This is incontestably shown by the sentence pronounced upon Adam; "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." On page 63, Mr. George says: "who believes that corpses are men? They are only the remains of men." The man, then, the person does not die at all. If this were true, how wrong was God, how right the serpent! Christ and others, too, must have done the serpent great injustice in saying he lied, since Mr. G. has shown so conclusively that he told the truth. But then they of course erred ignorantly, for the wise men of modern times were not there to instruct them. According to Mr. George, God committed a great blunder in saying, "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return, for the man, the thou was not dust, did not die, was not taken from the ground, neither returned unto it. But more upon this point hereafter. All the circumstances connected with the giving of the Edenic law, and the announcement of the sentence combine to prove that the penalty was literal death. L. C. T.

[To be Continued.]

The Passover.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

As the time draws near for our annual observance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, a few thoughts as to the time of its observance may not be amiss.

Dr. Adam Clarke clearly shows, in a lengthy article on the subject, that the Lord's Supper, like the Passover, its type, is a memorial feast. This we think none will deny.

The great apostle has said, 1 Cor. xi. 26, "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." Other Scriptures, such as Luke xxii. 19, clearly convey the idea of a memorial feast. Being such it is very reasonable to suppose that there should be a specific time for its observance. To keep a memorial feast on any other day than the one on which the event occurred which we design to commemorate, is to disregard the fact that it is a memorial feast. It seems important, then, that we know the precise time when the feast should be kept. We think a clue to the time is found in 1 Cor. v. 7, 8: "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." "Let us therefore keep the feast," etc. Murdock translates this, "Therefore let us celebrate the festival," etc. How can we appropriately observe a memorial festival on any other day than the very one on which the event occurred, that the festival is designed to commemorate? Who would think of observing the Christmas holidays every month in the year? Would it not be entirely out of place, as to time, to set apart every first day of the week in memory of the birth of George Washington? or to celebrate St. Patrick's day on the third of August? No more so than to observe the memorial of the death of Christ at any other time than on passover day. It is our settled conviction that no other time is appropriate for keeping this feast.

Passover day falls on the fourteenth day of the first month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year. See Lev. xxiii. 5. As to the time where this day occurs in our Roman year, we remark, it must come late enough in the season for the barley harvest to be ripe in Judea. See Lev. xxii. 10, 11, 15; Deut. xvi. 9. Now as there are two different reckonings of time for the commencement of the sacred year, our inquiry is, Which is the right one?

It is a well established fact that the Jewish months were regulated by the changes of the moon. The month always commenced with the new moon. We copy a few quotations from "Bible Dictionary," published by the American Tract Society. "The Hebrew months were lunar months; that is, from one new moon to another. The new moon was always the beginning of the month, and this day they called new moon day, or new month." This being true, the passover cannot be regulated by the time when the moon fulls, but must be reckoned from the new moon only. As to what new moon we are to count from, we quote from Kitto's Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature:

"J. D. Michealis clearly shows, First: That the new moon in March would be too early for the wave sheaf, for the feast of weeks, and for the feast of tabernacles. Second: That the Syrian Calender, which has essentially the same names for the months as used by the Jews, makes its Nisan to correspond, in its beginning with our April new moon." Ideller says, "So much is certain, that, in the time of Moses, the month of ears, (Nisan) cannot have commenced before the first days of our April, which was then the period of the vernal equinox."

After quoting these authors, Dr. Kitto then remarks, "As Nisan commenced with the new moon of April, we have a scale for fixing the commencement of all the other months with referencc to our calender; and we must accordingly date them one whole month later than is generally done: allowing, of course, for the circumstance that, as the new moon varies its place in our solar months, the Jewish months will almost invariably consist of portions of two of ours." Much more testimony of a similar character might be brought forward, but the above is sufficient, we think, to show that Nisan, or the Jewish first month commences with the first new moon after the spring equinox.

The first new moon after the sun crosses the equinoctial line this year falls on the 19th of April. This day is the first day of the first month.

We would here correct a misapprehension of those who suppose the time begins when the new moon is seen. The reason why the Jews stationed men in different localities, on elevated positions of the country to watch for the moon, was from a want of astronomical calculations to fix definitely the time of its change. All that is necessary is for us to look in our almanacs and see when the new moon occurs.

Fourteen days from the April new moon will bring the passover evening, Tuesday evening, May 2d. Let there then be uniformity in this matter; and let us all observe the same time in keeping the feast.

The only point of difference that can be raised among us as Life believers, is on the question as to the time of observing this memorial feast. Whatever of importance we attach to the observance of this sacramental feast as a yearly feast, must also hold us to getting the right time. If a month out of time "makes no practical difference," on the same principle a variation of six months would make no practical difference. If there is any thing to this question of time, it is necessary to get the right time.

Lastly: As to the bread to be used. On this point we quote from Dr. Adam Clarke, for he speaks our sentiments exactly. He says, "Now if any respect should be paid to the primitive institution, in the celebration of this divine ordinance, then, unleavened, unyeasted bread should be used."

"Let us therefore keep the feast . . . with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth," trusting that very soon he will come whose death we now commemorate, and bid us welcome to the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

Note by the Editor.

When we first took the position that the Lord's Supper was a yearly Feast, we were disposed to the same view that Br. Bishop advocates above. There are two classes of Jews who still keep their passover: viz., the Rabbinical and the Caraite Jews. The Rabbinical only, are much known in this country, and they observe the Passover on the first full moon after the Spring equinox. The Caraites keep it a month later. Thus divided as to time, it may not be so easy to determine which is right. Br. Bishop has made much the same argument we did when the question was first up for discussion among us in 1864; and at that time we, with others, observed the feast on the Caraite time. We found the converted Jews in this country observed the Rabbinical time, and finally yielded to that time for the sake of being in harmony with the converted and unconverted Jews on the subject. It is desirable that there should be harmony among ourselves on this point; and we are ready to take the Caraite time, if, on the whole, that appears to be the best established period; but we are not yet prepared to accept, as a positive fact, that the "first-fruits" of the harvest, in Judea, could not have been ready for the Rabbinical time in the days of our Saviour on earth, and while God's blessing rested on the land of Palestine. In a more northern latitude on our Pacific, or western coast, it can be done now, if we are not misinformed. It is not so easy then, to say, with positiveness, which time is right, the Rabbinical or the Caraite.

Till the subject is further illuminated, it is our judgment that those who are disposed to keep the yearly feast, should elect for themselves the time which seems to them the most likely to be correct. It is not essential to keep it in an assembly. One's own house, for himself and family, or himself alone, if he has no family to unite with him, is as truly the proper place as any other. For the present year, we prefer to take the Rabbinical time, April 5. If unable to get out, we shall keep it at home.

Paris.

It will be remembered that reference was last week made to the revolt of the soldiery occupying the Montmartre. Hopes were then entertained that it would be overcome without difficulty, but matters have grown rapidly worse. M. Thiers issued a proclamation which concludes as follows:

"The Government, hoping the malcontents will return to their duty as good citizens and obey the laws, still withholds orders to proceed to extreme measures to free the country of a new enemy; but it is determined to act when necessary, and deliver the principals over to justice. The Government relies on the co-operation of all good citizens. After this warning we shall proceed to force peace; if necessary, at all hazards."

This not having the desired effect, an attack was made on the insurgents by the Government forces. This movement was signally unsuccessful, the insurgents capturing a large number, including several Generals, three of whom were tried by what purported to be Court Martial, condemned and shot.

The "Journal des Debats" says:

"Yesterday will be considered as one of the gloomiest hours in the history of France. The Revolution, under the banner of Pillage, is the mistress of Paris. France will condemn these horrible assassinations and this odious insurrection, which is without pretext or purpose. Will the Provinces come to our aid, or must the Germans re-enter the Capital? This terrible day has wrought more damage to the Republic than all the Bonapartes."

The truth of the matter seems to be that the revolters have control of Paris, and a reign of terror has commenced. The Government is powerless unless the Provinces or the Prussians come to its aid. This the latter may do as the work of evacuating France has, since the trouble assumed alarming proportions, ceased, which indicates a willingness on the part of Prussia to protect the Government. L. C. T.

Letters and Extracts.

From A. N. Blake.

Br. Storrs: I send you an editorial article, from H. C. Benson of the California "Christian Advocate" in reference to Elder Miles Grant, who of course you are aware is on this coast. He is preaching at present for the Methodest Church South, whose pastor's name is Bailey, a somewhat advanced Christian, having less bigotry than most men found in that denomination, whether at the North or South. The Editor above alluded to asserted a few days ago, "perhaps brother Bailey's pulpit is the only one in San Francisco where such abominable teaching would be allowed." The Elder has been engaged in discussion with a Mr. Loveland on the immortality of the soul. I saw a few things said on both sides reported for a secular paper, the religious press taking but little notice of the discussion, though attended by crowds of hearers. The reporter invariably said the Elder was the victor, both as a Bible student and in argument; and said if Grant does no more he will shake a tottering and ruinous doctrine now altogether on the wane or downward grade.

It does seem too ridiculous for belief, such things as Grant says about two resurrections, but I look upon him as I look upon others who have made up their minds that God shall not fully control their belief, reserving to themselves just enough of their own wisdom and folly, so that Christ cannot, or rather will not bring them into the full liberty of the gospel faith, hence their blindness. How easy, my dear brother, we may prevent the full light of the gospel from shining upon our minds. It seems sometimes to me that Christ in his gospel has made the Life views so clear and transparent, that 'tis no wonder even sincere persons grope in darkness by the rejection of such plain truth. Is it not possible that all heavenly intelligence gaze on the children of men with astonishment as they behold, if behold they can, man's conduct in relation to Bible truth?

Let us, brother Storrs, keep praying, hoping, writing, that God's spirit may help their infirmities, to let go their creeds, self, and all else which hides Christ, our new man and second Adam from their true knowledge.

Brother Glenn still continues our dear little paper, the "Nazarene," but has thought it must be stopped for want of time and health. God bless it aud continue it. I thank God for your recovery. May he yet see fit to continue your work on earth, and finally give you a resurrection, the hope of the gospel in the last day.

I am your brother in Christ and in hope of the one resurrection of the gospel, the saints' reward through Christ' atonement.

Stockton, Cal., Feb. 28, 1871.

The following is the "editorial article" of which Br. Blake speaks, from the "Cal. Christian Advocate:"

"Who Knows?—Do the Second Adventists believe that the wicked will have a resurrection? We have been asked such question by those who are anxious to know. How can the answer be stated? They clearly deny that man has any inherent immortality. His soul or spirit is his breath. "God breathed into him the breath (or soul) of life." "His blood is his life." Death is an end of him. This is clearly taught by Second Adventists. We have thus heard them affirm from the pulpit. And thus they teach through the press.

"But after the thousand years of millennial glory, we are told, there shall be another resurrection; the wicked shall come forth. But what shall be raised? Shall it be the particles of the material body simply? And shall God restore to the clay the same breath and the same blood, which according to the theory, must constitute its soul and its life? The design of such a resurrection we cannot comprehend. The man being wholly corporeal and material, must be as much out of existence at death as if he had never been created. So, it seems, if such doctrine be accepted as true, that Adam, and all of the earlier generations of men, have been destroyed during the long centuries that intervene between the period of death and the second advent of the Lord Jesus—why after so long a time recreate them?"

From William Steele.

Br. Storrs: I would have written before this time, if I could have seen that I could spare the two dollars which I now enclose to pay for the Herald of Life for this year.

We were very sorry that you were so sick. We thought you would never be able to edit the paper again, because you are so far advanced in life; but it seems you have more work to do yet for God; who, I trust, raised you up for that very purpose. Our prayer is for you, that you may ever be willing to do his holy will, and that you may look unto him for all needed help, and that your last days may be your most useful ones.

Great credit is due to Leonard C. Thorne for his faithfulness and ability in conducting the paper while you were sick. I always admire the good spirit that he manifests, though differing widely on the subject of baptism.

The important truths, advocated in the Herald of Life are making certain progress here. I am accused of teaching infidel doctrine by the church dignitaries; but I can stand it; and they are not all alike, for there was a Disciple teacher here awhile, who would reason like a Christian; and on one occasion he said to me, "Brother Steele, I wish I could see as you do on these subjects."

The church people here are mostly Methodists; and I think they are so more by prejudice than intelligence. A Baptist preacher comes here sometimes, who is very bitter toward those who don't understand things as he does. Now, every body knows that it is wrong to manifest an evil spirit, and yet how many there are who do it. I believe those who will tolerate least are the worst class of religionists. May God give grace to enable us to be free from that which we condemn in others.

Your brother, looking for the mercy of God unto eternal life.

Arkansaw, Wis., March 7, 1871.

From William Beatty.

Br. Storrs, Dear Sir: I have been receiving your paper for the past three years, sent me by a friend. I know not how the subscription stands, but have come to the conclusion that I cannot do without it. I herewith enclose five dollars, and wish you to send it to me, with the back numbers since it was discontinued.

The doctrines taught were all new to me, and not very palatable for a long time; but now I think I can heartily endorse them. I have loaned the papers out, and I think they have done good service. I have been threatened to be called before the church for introducing heresy into the society. Some are afraid to read, and others read to condemn. Two prominent men (a father and son) have been reading. After the first few numbers, the father remarked to me, that at first he thought the doctrines could not be sustained without doing violence to the scriptures, but found they fully sustained them. The son has since joined the Episcopal Church; but before doing so argued all the points with the Rector, making it a condition that he should not renounce those views. All efforts failing to convince him of error, he was received. He is now a bold advocate of those peculiar views.

Not feeling that I can do much to advance the cause, owing to want of ability, I say but little, lest I might do harm. You will oblige by sending me the following tracts, which I think may be of some use, if judiciously disposed of. Yours in hope.

Vicksburg, Miss., March 1, 1871.

From Eld. S. R. Clinkinbeard.

Br. Storrs: I am still alive and contending for Life only in Christ; that is future life in the kingdom to be set up under the whole heavens.

Those who make the saints the subjects of this kingdom, and rulers too, make it a sort of mixed up something, I do not know what. The saints will be the kings and priests, and the subjects those "left of the nations," if I understand the Bible; and no resurrection of the wicked: but some affirm there will be; yet they do not prove it, and cannot by Scripture.

I still have my regular meetings. Some will hear, and others will not; but thank God the truth is on the increase. I wish one of our preachers would come out here and locate. I sometimes have five or six at once asking questions. One asked me who the five brethren were, if the rich man represented the Jews and the poor man the Gentiles? Please give your views on that question.

If you have any tracts for distribution send them, and they will do the work. The people are stirred up here now, and I intend to keep them so, the Lord willing, till Jesus comes. I do thank God that it was my lot to get hold of the Herald of Life. I get nothing for talking to the people. I expect to get it in the world to come with God's faithful ones.

Yours, in hope of the soon coming of our Lord.

Moulton, Ills., March 2, 1871.

James M. Young, Denver, Mich., writes: About two years since I was brought to notice Jesus' answer to the Sadducees concerning the resurrection, and notice that the righteous only had promise of life. I have carefully examined the whole subject, and feel it to be my duty to promulgate Life only in Christ. I lately saw a paper of yours, and was delighted to learn that God had many witnesses of this great truth. I obtained your Essay—"Life from the Dead." It has helped me much. Since then I have wished for your paper very much. I am on a new farm, and owe for it in part, so it has not been in my power to raise the money to pay for the paper; but I believe I can in six months, if you can afford to wait so long, and will send it to me. God has brought me to see with you as far as I know your views. With sadness I hear that you are feeble. May the Lord preserve you, is my prayer. Yours in the love of God.

Note by the Editor.

We will send the paper as you desire. May the Lord lead you into all truth.

J. L. Knapp, Saratoga, N. Y., writes: I wish to say to the brethren in the ministry—we have a small church here, and hire a hall, where we meet every Sabbath day and Thursday evening. We shall be glad to receive an appointment from preaching brethren who wish to travel this way. Br. C. F. Sweet was here through December, every night and Sundays. Any brother wishing to visit this place and preach will send a notice to me, or Geo. W. Bishop, and if any other has an appointment here at the same time, we will notify them of it.

Note by the Editor.

Br. Knapp invites us, personally, to visit Saratoga Springs the coming summer, and promises to take good care of us. We thank him for his kindness, and may accept his invitation if circumstances seem to allow it, or health may require.

Aaron Veeder, Albany, N. Y., writes: I am highly pleased with your articles on the future reign of our "Crown Prince," Jesus. The old theory of Christ's reigning over the immortal saints (who are joint heirs with him) will not stand the test of the prophets. See Isaiah ix. 6, 7; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6, 7, 8; Ezek. xxxvii. 24 to 28; Daniel vii. 13, 14, 18, 27. Gabriel, Luke i. 30 to 33, and Jesus, Luke xxii. 28–30.

There are 630,000 Protestant inhabitants of Berlin, only 11,709 of whom are habitual church-goers. Out of 23,699 interments in that place, only 3,777 were accompanied by a pastor.

Perform a good deed, speak a kind word, bestow a pleasant smile, and you will receive the same in return. The happiness you bestow upon others is reflected back to your bosom.

A man may well bear his cross patiently while on the road to wear his crown.

When a good man dies, the tears he in life prevented from flowing are shed.

Obituary.

Scruton.—Died in Strafford, N. H., Feb. 1, 1871, Mrs. Mary Scruton, widow of Mr. William Seruton, late of Strafford, aged 77 years and nine months.

The subject of this notice was converted and united with the Freewill Baptist church in early life. In 1842 she became a believer in the immediate coming of Christ. She has ever lived an humble and devoted life, beloved and respected by all who knew her. For many of the last years of her life she suffered much from weakness and infirmities; all of which she endured with Christian fortitude and patience. Her last hours were peaceful and happy. She was sensible to the last; selected a man to preach the funeral sermon, and gave other directions; sent a message to her children, that lived far away, that she died happy; prayed and conversed with all the family, and peacefully fell asleep in hope of a resurrection at the last day. Words of comfort were spoken at her funeral by Eld. John Parsons, from Matt. xiii. 28.

Joshua Roberts.

Notice.

The Lord's Supper will be celebrated on the anniversary of the Passover Feast, Wednesday evening, April 5, 1871, at the house of Br. J. L. Boyd, 1330 Columbia Av., Philadelphia. All in this vicinity who love our Lord Jesus, and are desirous thus to "show forth his death," are invited to meet with us on that occasion. J. L. Boyd.

From April 1 the Post Office address of Eld. S. W. Bishop will be, Eatontown, N. J.

Eld. J. Lewis' Post Office address is now, Mode, Ill.

Appointments.

Manchester, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

Middletown, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

West Meriden, Sunday, April 30.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

Wm. Stuart.

Meriden, Conn., Sundays, March 12 and 26.

Hartford, Conn., Talcott and Post's Hall, Sunday, April 2.

Providence, R. I., Sundays, April 9 and 16.

Charlestown, Mass., Sundays, April 23 and 30.

Geo. W. Brown.

I am to preach in Onondaga county, N. Y., at High Bridge, near Fayetteville, March 2, and April 7. If there are any Life Believers near I shall be glad to see them there.

James H. Jacobs.

Hartford, Conn., (Talcott & Post's Hall), March 26. W. S. Campbell.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Mrs. M. Whittlesey, Mrs. Henry Andrus, Mrs. N. B. Smith, C. B. Randlett, Jas. W. Smith, Wm. Johnson, Mrs. Eld. Bachman, Sarah Sidders, Joel A. Simonds.

Two dollars each from—Mrs. Gaius Wood, Thos. M. Clary, Joseph W. Purdy, Wm. Steele, J. O'Conner, A. Hoffman, M. R. Burnham, Nathan Tefft, Isaac Young, P. Flickner.

Various sums—Mrs. Huldah E. Wood, $5 on pledge; Mary P. Hart, $5 on pledge; Julia L. Hart, $5 on pledge; Mrs. Wilbur A. Hart, $5 on pledge; Mrs. S. F. Hurlburd, $1 20; Thos. M. Clary, $50 on pledge; "A Friend," $10.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Mrs. J. McClean, Wm. Beatty, W. H. Whitman, Aaron Veeder, F. W. Kremer.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Thos. McClary, $10.

Deeds, Not Words.

Not forever on thy knees,
Would Jehovah have thee found;
There are burdens thou cans't ease,
There are griefs Jehovah sees;
Look around.

Work is prayer if done by God,
Prayer which God delighted hears.
See beside yon upturned sod
One bowed 'neath affliction's rod;
Dry her tears.

Not long prayers, but earnest zeal;
This is what is wanted more.
Put thy shoulder to the wheel;
Bread unto the famished deal
From thy store.

Not high sounding words of praise
Does God want 'neath some high dome,
But that thou the fallen raise:
Bring the poor from life's highways
To thy home.

Worship God by doing good;
Help the suffering in their needs.
He who loves God as he should
Makes his heart's love understood
By kind deeds.

Deeds are powerful, words are weak,
Battering at high heaven's door.
Let thy love by actions speak;
Wipe the tear from sorrow's cheek;
Clothe the poor.

Be it thine life's cares to smother,
And so brighten eyes now dim.
Kind deeds done to one another,
God accepts as done, my brother,
Unto Him.

—Selected.

[Concluded.]

Thoughts on Revelation X. and XI.

BY ELD. GEO. W. BROWN.

"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months."

Now the inquiry is, how is this thing coming out? Is there any thing more to be done? and if so, what is it? The next verse tells you: "And there was given me a reed, like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is within the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months." Now what was the reed given? I answer: "It was the rod forty-two months long." Where are we required to put the rod on? Ans. "The temple, and leave out the court." There would be no necessity for requiring us to leave out the court, unless we were in danger of measuring it, and as the rod is designed to reach from the temple to the time that the holy city should come out from under foot, if we measure more than the temple, it will not come out right. Therefore the caution is, to leave out the court, which is only a preliminary step to entering the temple.

Now, what is the temple here spoken of? It could not be the temple at Jerusalem, for that was destroyed some twenty-five years before this revelation was given; and keep in mind that he is not giving us a history of the past, but, "things that must be hereafter." Then what can it refer to? It must refer to the temple under the new covenant. And what is the temple under the gospel dispensation? Turn to the word and read: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?"—1 Cor. iii. 16. Here is the same expression, and Paul applies it to the church at Corinth. The same expression is also used in writing to the church at Ephesus. Speaking of how the church was built he says, "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord."—Eph. ii. 21. In writing to the Thessalonians, in order to show that Christ was not coming in that day, he says: "There must come a falling away first, and that man of sin revealed, the son of perdition;" and gives his character thus: "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God."

You see, the description given of the man of sin, by Paul, is the same as the Abomination of Desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet. Dan. xi .36 says: "He shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every God." Paul says: "He shall exalt himself above all that is called God;" and Daniel says: "He shall exalt himself above every God." You see they are both describing the same. Paul says, he sitteth in the temple of God after the falling away. Daniel says, he pollutes the sanctuary of strength. Sanctuary and temple are one and the same thing. Jesus, in speaking of the Abomination of Desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, says, he shall stand in the holy place. Paul says the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are, referring to the church at Corinth. Now if the church in some locality is where the man of sin is to sit, the question arises, What church is it, and when did he get his seat? In answering this question, we refer you to some other parts of this book, where all admit that the thing is brought to view under other symbols.

We turn to Rev. xvii., and we see a woman sitting on a scarlet-colored beast. Here are two symbols used, beast and woman. Beast, we know, means a kingdom; so explained in the prophecy of Daniel. Now what does woman symbolize? We see the church is compared to a woman, both in the Old Testament and the New. Paul, speaking of the church at Corinth says: "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you a chaste virgin to Christ." God, in speaking of the Jewish people, accuses them as a woman who hath forsaken her husband and chosen other lovers. Ezk. xvi. (The reader can look it over at his leisure). This woman is said to be a harlot, in consequence of her connection with the kings of the earth, while she professes to belong to Christ. She is drunken with the blood of the saints, which shows it is the same church that is united with the eleventh horn spoken of in Dan. vii. that wore out the saints. Now, if I can find out what church this woman represents, I shall find out what church or temple the man of sin took his seat in; or where the Abomination of Desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, was set up.

Now let us look at the angel's explanation of the matter. "I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her."—Verse 7. Here we have a positive promise, from the angel, that he will tell the mystery of the woman. Now look at verse 9. "The seven heads, are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth." The 18th verse says: "And the woman is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Now if any thing in God's word is plain, it is that this woman has her location in the city on seven hills, for that is the great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth. That city is Rome; therefore the church of Rome is the temple of God, or holy place, where this Desolating Abomination is to be set up. Was this once a pure church? Read Paul's letter to the Romans, 1st chap. 7th and 8th verses: "To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints: Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world." Could he have given a better recommendation for any church than he has for this? I answer, "No." But there came a falling away, and it would be natural to take the church located in the seat of empire (which for this reason had more influence than others) to issue the laws from, that were to tread under foot the holy city for forty-two months. Now if we can ascertain when the laws that were to tread under foot the church of God, could be issued from this city with power to execute them, we shall find when the Abomination of Desolation is set up, or the man of sin takes his seat in the temple of God, which are one and the same thing. May God give us the influence of his Holy Spirit to guide us into all truth while we examine this subject.

It has been very clearly proved for about twenty years past, that this war was commenced on the saints by Justinian, the Emperor of the East, by the edict which he issued in A. D. 532, to unite all men in one faith, giving only three months before it was executed with the utmost rigor. This was the very power that subdued three kings in the Roman Empire, and therefore must be the king that began this war; and if so, the Desolating Abomination, spoken of by Daniel the prophet. As we have proved that Rome is the holy place or temple of God where this power is to take his seat, then when he gets his seat in Rome, is the place or time to put on your reed like a rod, and from that time the Gentiles will tread the holy city under foot forty-two months. Then she will come out from under foot, and have the privilege of enjoying her faith, and preaching the truth as we find it in God's word. Now who governed Rome when that edict was first executed? I answer, "The Arian king." What were the laws by which he governed? I answer, "By the most just and equitable laws." Bower, Vol. i. p. 334. What were the principles by which he governed? In his letter to Justinian he says, "I believe every man should enjoy that kind of religion he thinks best," showing that Christians in his dominions had the privilege of enjoying their faith and offering up their spiritual sacrifices; but when the Emperor gets possession they will have that taken from them, and the Abomination of Desolation will be set up there. Now how is this to be set up? I answer, by force of arms or military power. Now what are the facts in history? In A. D. 536 we find Belesarius in Italy with an army by order of Justinian; and after taking Naples he marched directly to Rome, and after a short siege, the city surrendered on the 10th day of December, in the year 536. Thus Rome became united to the empire after a separation of three-score years, and the keys of the city were sent to Constantinople with the governor of the city. After some little space the Goths return and besiege the city. The siege lasted one year and nine days, when they raised the siege. After this time, for some fifteen years, the Goths obtained temporary possession of Rome several times, and were driven out by the army of the emperor, and in 553 they were finally subdued. Now as to the exact point where this power was set up. I am not certain whether it was when Belesarius took possession of Rome in Dec. 536, or after the Goths raised the siege in the commencement of 538, but am satisfied it was within the compass of two years, the earliest point being Dec. 10, 536. If we put the rod on here, forty-two months carry us to Dec. 10, 1796, where we find Napoleon in Italy at the head of the French armies, driving out the Austrians. If we take the latest point, it ends in the beginning of 1798, when we find Berthier entering the seven-hilled city, taking the head of the church, and carrying him to France, where he died in 1799; and we know the French gave the same liberty in religion that the Goths gave before they were driven out by the Imperial armies.

Let us compare the principles of the two. Says the Gothic king, in writing to the Emperor, "I believe every man should have the privilege of enjoying that religion he thinks is right." Says Napoleon, "Opinions shall be free." And from this time to the end of the war in 1815 men are not killed for their religion, and then it was settled by the Alliance on the principles of religious freedom. These principles have been spreading among all nations ever since that time, and it seems to me it must be apparent, to every candid mind, that we must have reached the time of the end when many should run to and fro, and knowledge should be increased on the subject that was closed up and sealed till the time of the end.

But our former mistakes seem to make an examination of this subject objectionable, or perhaps it would better express my meaning to say, that it would seem that if the work had been of God we should have had it right the first time; but in that case how would there have been an increase of knowledge? It shows on examining this subject, light will increase until those who are "wise shall understand."—Dan. xii. 10. While we have such a promise we are still encouraged to "Search the Scriptures which are able to make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2 Tim. iii. 15.

Now can we tell why the rod, or measuring line, as it has been put on in the past has not brought us to the end of the wonders, which is the resurrection of the dead. See Dan. xii. 2, where many of them that sleep are to awake to everlasting life. Every one must admit that this is the final reward of the people of God, as Jesus says in John vi. 40: "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Where does he raise them from? From where they are sleeping. And where are they sleeping? In the dust of the earth; and Jesus says, they are raised up at the last day. Paul tells us it will be when "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." —1 Thess. iv. 15. In another place he tells us, "We shall not all sleep (in the dust of the earth), but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump."—1 Cor. xv. 50 and onward. So we see this waking up time is to take place at the sounding of the trump of God, and that brings the end of the wonders, and comes at the end of the days, when Daniel has the promise of coming from his resting-place to receive his lot or portion, which is the gift of God, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

It seems from verse 2 we have measured too much. He tells us to leave out the court of the temple, and measure nothing but the temple where the man of sin sitteth. Now we go to the ancient temple, and we find that no one could enter the temple without passing through three courts: first, the court of the Gentiles; second, the court of Israel; third, the court of the Priests. So we see there were three steps to be taken before the man of sin, or Abomination of Desolation could get his seat in the holy place, or temple of God. Br. Miller supposed that when Paganism was so far subdued as not to stand in the way, the man of sin took his seat; hence he concluded that the commencement of the period of 1290 was in A. D. 508, and the period of 1260, 30 years after, in 538, and according to that argument the 1335 days would end in 1843; but time did what none of our opponents could do, viz., proved our mistake. We concluded at that time that we never should have another time; but about the years 1851 and '2. after examining the subject over and over again, we saw that the creed of the Roman church did not become the creed of the Empire until A. D. 519, when we supposed the Abomination of Desolation was set up, and that the period commenced then, and so must end in 1854; and, believing this to be the truth, published it to the world. The result is known. Many were converted to God. The little book was sweet in the mouth when we supposed that deliverance would soon come to every one found written in the book of Life; but after making all our calculations to go into the kingdom in 1854, we were again destined to drink the bitter cup of disappointment, and it was rightly named "bitter in the belly." O the sadness of having our hope deferred. We were looked upon with scorn and contempt, and for what? For having done as Peter told us to: "taken heed to prophecy as to a light shining in a dark place." We had taken the little book and had devoured its contents. We were having the bitter when the same messenger spoke again saying, "Thou must prophecy again." But where could we find a starting point? We saw that the Greek empire must be the horn that was more stout than his fellows, and also the one that had plucked up three by the roots, and that the creed of the Roman church was established as the creed of the empire in A. D. 519; but did they then commence war on the saints? We found by the Emperor's letter, which was written several years later, that he was utterly averse to persecution, until A. D. 532, when "he issued an edict to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians, and such as did not in the term of three months embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared infamous, and as such excluded from all employments both civil and military, and their property confiscated, whether real or personal; and the edict was executed with the utmost rigor."—Bower, vol. i. p. 334. We were satisfied we had now found where the war commenced, and put the rod of forty-two months on in 532, from which point it reached to 1792, when the last head of the leopard beast was carried into captivity by the French infidels. Add 75 to 1792 and we have 1867; and also 1335 from 532. But Jesus did not come, and Daniel is still resting in the dust of the earth; hence the 1335 days have not ended, and it becomes us as believers in prophecy to look the matter over and find the mistake, if possible. We see by looking the matter over, that we must have measured more than the temple, or, in other words, we have put the rod on before the man of sin took his seat in the holy place.

Now, where does this period of 1335 days start from? I answer, "From the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate in the temple of God or holy place." Now mark: it is the abomination that maketh desolate before it is set up in the holy place. What does it make desolate? The saints of the Most High, or God's elect. See Matt. xxiv. 15 and onward. Now when did this horn begin to desolate? I answer, "When it executed that edict." How is it to be set up? By arms. Those armies did the work in A. D. 536 by driving out the "Arian king who was ruling by the most just and equitable laws." And then, says Gibbon, "During ten centuries of blindness and servitude, Europe received her religious opinions from the Vatican." When could this king govern Europe by the laws from the seven-hilled city? Surely not until he had possession of that city, which must have been as late as the 10th of Dec., 536, and may have been as late as 538, when the Goths raised the siege. Here is where the man of sin got his seat in the temple. If in 536, forty-two months would end in 1796; if in 532, it would end in 1798; add 75, making 1335, it would end in Dec., 1871, taking the earliest date. If we take the latest, it would end in 1873, and I am satisfied it cannot go beyond that time.

Then "all tears will be wiped away from off all our faces, and the rebuke of his people will be taken away from off the earth, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Then "God's people will be delivered every one that shall be found written in the book." Then will those awake who have died for the faith; the great cloud of witnesses, spoken of by Paul in Heb. xi., "who were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection." Better than what? Better than that of "their dead raised to life again," whom the "women received," for although they were restored to life, it was not eternal life. But now the awakening will be to eternal life. They are raised incorruptible, immortal; as Jesus says, "Neither can they die any more, but are equal to the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Now the question is, "Who will be there?" Will you, brother, who have thought at times that you would have to give it up, the trials have been so severe? Thank God they are almost ended! Christ is coming to take his people home. The promise, "If I go away I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am there may ye be also," is soon to be fulfilled. Does thy heart falter, and say, "It is not for me?" Remember, "we are bought with a price." "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" Take courage! "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life." And you sinner, who are yet out of Christ, what do you say? Will you come and accept of salvation while it is offered to you without money and without price? O come before it is too late, and you find God's people are saved and you are left out. Why will you sell your birthright for a mess of pottage? While all heaven is waiting to be gracious do not slight offered mercy. Ask the Lord to help you to come, and he will not turn you away.

Children's Department.

Try, Try, Try Again.

"Oh, I shall never do it!" And, with that, Freddy Smith flung down his tools, and the ship he had half made. I was going to say, too, that he had shed a few tears of vexation; but I remember Freddy was ten years old, and thought crying babyish; so we must suppose a sudden cold came on just then, and made his eyes water a little.

"What is it you will never do, my son?" asked his mamma, coming into the room as he spoke.

"Oh, it's this tiresome boat, mamma. The wood won't cut!" said Freddy, despairingly.

Mrs. Smith sat down, and called him to her side. Minnie, his little sister, came too.

"How long have you been working at your boat, Freddy?"

"Half an hour," replied Freddy. His mother smiled.

Have you ever heard the old saying, 'if at first you don't succeed, try, try again?' You should hear the story I heard yesterday."

"A story! Oh what was it, mamma?" said Minnie. Her mother was willing to repeat it, for she wished Freddy to learn the lesson it taught.

"I will tell it you," she said, "pretty much as I heard it, only leaving out a word here and there. You must fancy a gentleman is talking."

Mrs. Smith then proceeded as follows: "My first desire, when I was apprenticed, was to make a work-box for my grandmother. She had been kind to me since my mother's death, which took place when I was quite young. I tried to see as many work-boxes as possible, and at last, after much consultation with some of my fellow-workmen, I settled the shape and size. I had very little money, and was often working thirteen hours a day—even more in summer—and I had to snatch time for making my box before and after meals. Some repairs had been going on inside Windsor Castle, and a quantity of old oak had been sold for firewood. I thought it would be a fine thing if I could make my box of a piece of wood taken out of the Queen's castle. So, for a shilling, one of my mates sold me a bit. This I split into veneers; that is, very thin slices; no easy thing to do. Then I bought some pieces of ebony, tulip wood, and satin wood; and I had the idea that if, with different colored bits, I could represent on the lid of the box a shepherd dog, that had often been a favorite companion of mine, I should have done something that would make me famous in my native village. But the dog was a failure; and, with much regret, I had to take him out. No one who ever went to build a house, and found it would cost more money than he possessed, could have been more puzzled than I was over the lid of my box. I was determined to ornament it in some way.

About that time I heard that a new kind of wood, remarkable for its beauty had just been brought to this country, and I thought a piece of it would be just the thing to finish my lid with. So I saved up my money, until I had two shillings and threepence halfpenny of my own; and then, on Whit-Monday, (which was the only holiday I had in the year, except Christmas day), I started, at day-break, on my way to ——, with a light heart and my hard-earned pence; although I knew very little either of the place where the wood could be got, or the man who sold it. That day I walked thirty-six miles, spent two shillings in fancy woods, and was at my work by five o'clock next morning.

"Well, I spent my leisure time for three years upon that box; and what with alterations, and so-called improvements, it was very different from what I meant it to be. In some places the veneer was scraped away by constant rubbing, and a fresh ornament was needed. If there had been an 'Exhibition' then, I am sure I would have sent my work-box, so much did I think of it. That piece of wood kept me out of many scrapes: I was too busy about it to get into mischief, as so many lads do.

"There, Fred, what do you think of that? Three years over a work-box, and walking thirty-six miles to ——, and back, to get some wood for it, and at his master's shop next morning by five o'clock!"

Fred made no answer just then; he was thinking over what he had heard. His mamma continued:

"That boy is now a gentleman, and is employed by the Government to give lectures to working-men to teach them useful things. You see what he thought 'try, try, try again' meant." And, so saying, Mrs. Smith left the room.

Freddy did not say any thing, but he quietly went back to his boat; and, by obeying the rule he had just heard, he at last completed it very nicely. He has not yet forgotten the story of the work-box.—Methodist.

Finger-Marks.

A short time since, a gentleman employed a mason to do some work for him, and, among other things, to "thin-whiten" the walls of one of his chambers. This thin whitening is almost colorless until dried. The gentleman was much surprised, on the morning after the chamber was finished, to find on the drawer of his bureau, standing in the room, white finger-marks. Opening the drawer, he found the same on the articles in it, and also on a pocket-book. An examination revealed the same marks on the contents of a bag. This proved clearly that the mason, with his wet hands, had opened the drawer, and searched the bag, which contained no money, and had then closed the drawer, without once thinking that any one would ever know it. The "thin whitening" which happened to be on his hand did not show at first, and he probably had no idea that twelve hours' drying would reveal his wickedness.

As the work was all done on the afternoon the drawer was opened, the man did not come again, and to this day does not know that his acts are known to his employer.

Children, beware of evil thoughts and deeds! They all leave their finger-marks, which will one day be revealed. If you disobey your parents, or tell a falsehood, or take what is not your own, you make sad stains on your character. And so it is with all sin. It defiles the soul. It betrays those who engage in it, by the marks it makes on them. These marks may be almost if not quite, invisible at first. But, even if they should not be seen during any of your days on earth (which is not at all likely), yet there is a day coming in which every sin will be made manifest.—Selected.

Beware of evil deeds. They may be small acts of evil, but they are none the less dangerous for that. "It was that penny I stole when I was a small boy," said an old man, "that sent me four times to prison, and confined me there twenty-eight years out of sixty of my life, and all for stealing less than thirty-eight dollars."

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 25.
WHOLE NUMBER 359.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

MARY AT THE SAVIOUR'S SEPULCHRE.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

OF all the incidents recorded in the New Testament, none are so graphically described and possess such an inexhaustible interest as those related by John, for he seemed endowed with simplicity and pathos, as a writer, such as none have possessed before or since. He brings the scenes before us with such vividness and power that we are, as it were, carried back to the land of Palestine; and are eye witnesses of the tender sympathy of Jesus for those in distress; and we are at a loss to know which to admire most, whether his tears, mingled with those who wept, or his mighty miracle-working power, causing the dumb to speak, the blind to see, the lame to walk, and even the dead to come forth from the darkness and silence of the grave to attest his almighty power. But in the narrative of the resurrection of Christ, above all others, we meet the wonderful fascinating power of this inspired penman. Let us notice a single instance, John xx.

On the first day of the week, ere the morning light had dispelled the darkness, Mary Magdalene came to the sepulchre where Jesus had been laid, and beheld the stone, which had closed the entrance, taken away. In great anxiety and haste she ran to Peter, and to "the other disciple whom Jesus loved," to tell them that the body of Jesus had been taken away, and she knew not where it had been laid. Then they ran to the sepulchre, the other disciple outrunning Peter, and looking in, beheld the linen clothes in which the body of Jesus had been wrapped, lying in the sepulchre. John is particular to mention that "the napkin that was about his head" was "not lying with the linen, but wrapped up together in a place by itself," thus forever settling the fact that in their observations there was no possible chance for delusion, and furnishing testimony that the opponents of Christianity can never by any means gainsay.

After beholding these things "the disciples went away again unto their own home;" but Mary, in the fervency and devotion of her nature, "stood without the sepulchre weeping." Why did she weep? The cause of her grief is explained in what follows. "And as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre, and seeth two angels in white, sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain." The entrance of the sepulchre was so low that Mary had to "stoop down" to look in. Joseph of Arimathea, on the evening of the crucifixion, had closed this sepulchre with a large stone, and at the request of the suspicious Jews, Pilate had sealed it; but an angel had rolled away the stone, and two angels were now sitting where the Lord had lain. How intensely interesting every little particular is in relation to the death and resurrection of Christ!

"And they said unto her, Woman, why weepest thou?" What an instance of angelic sympathy is here recorded! And how brief and affecting is her reply as she turned away! "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." Though terribly agitated and distressed, she appears to have been entirely ignorant of the character of the persons who had just addressed her. The terrible heart-rending scenes of Calvary were yet vivid in her mind, and the thought that her Lord and Master,—who had been her comforter and joy,—had now been taken away, almost distracted her. The wicked men had truly taken away his life, and now they had taken away his body, were the thoughts that were uppermost in her mind. She had not yet comprehended the many predictions of his resurrection,—of his triumph over death,—so when she failed to find him in the sepulchre, no other thought entered her mind than that he had been taken away. But little did she surmise the joyful surprise that awaited her.

"And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away." Poor woman! She felt that her presence there was an intrusion in this worthy man's garden, and so naturally supposing the person who addressed her to be the gardener, she begged the simple favor of bei g allowed to remove the body of her dear Master to some humble tomb, where she would not be thwarted from carrying out her holy resolves of honoring his remains.

"Jesus saith unto her, MARY!" No human voice could utter that name as it now pierced her heart. The vail was lifted. All was told by this one word. He is alive; He has risen; He has led captivity captive, and has conquered death and the grave. "She turned herself and saith uuto him, RABBONI, which is to say, Master." One passionate exclamation told the depth of her surprise and joy.

In this touching and beautiful scene how much more forcibly the doctrine of the resurrection was revealed to Mary's mind than it was possible to do by abstract language! And when we realize that the Christian's entire hope of a future life rests upon Christ's resurrection, how deeply interesting the subject becomes to us! In the incident we have just noticed the certainty of his resurrection is placed beyond all disputation, and we know that "when He who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory."

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March, 1871.

SANCTIFICATION, OR SEPARATION.

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

"SANCTIFY them through thy truth thy word is truth."

The word sanctify has, to us, a little of indefiniteness about it. In the mind, it seems to need explanation. It is derived from agiazo, and the first meaning given to it is, to separate. Taking this word instead, the verse would read thus: Separate them through thy truth, thy work is truth. Or, separate them through thy word.

This is part of that beautiful prayer that Jesus offered to his Father, in behalf of his disciples, shortly before he left them. Neither was it offered for those few alone, but for them, also, which should believe on him through their word. We are included, if we believe through that word. Jesus did not ask to have his followers taken out of the world, but kept from the evil; kept separate. Did God always deal thus with his chosen ones? Let us see. Let us go back and investigate.

In Gen. xii. 1, it reads. "Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee. So Abram departed as the Lord had spoken unto him." Here is separation indeed, from country, kindred and father's house. So much may seem hard, but God saw it to be necessary. He would not have fulfilled the plans and designs he had, through Abram and his seed, if he had left him amongst his kindred, in the land of the Chaldeans, with their false gods. God knew whom he was choosing, whom he was separating out of all the families of the earth. He chose just the right man. What a faithful character. How obedient to God at all times. Prompt obedience too. Of him the Lord said, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." Separation from wrong influences was necessary to make the whole thing work well. So God gave him a good opportunity.

Hundreds of years afterwards, God gave commandments, ordinances, and Sabbaths to the descendants of Abraham. What was it all for? To keep them separate from the other nations. He knew if they mingled with the idolators, they would worship, and eat with them; in short, they would soon be of them, and he could do nothing with them.

What was God's design in all this? In, so many hundreds of years, keeping up this strict separation? He had a grand object in view. A seed was to come through that particular line, that was Christ. Soon as he came the wall of separation was broken down, and the law of carnal commandments abolished.

Away back, there were great blessings to Abraham and his literal seed, through keeping the law. Now the blessings come on Jew and Gentile alike, through Jesus Christ, and the promise of the Spirit, through faith.

The law of commandments being abolished, the middle wall of partition broken down, and Jew and Gentile alike, through the blood of Christ, we ask, is there no separation now? No difference between the worldly man and the heir of glory? Let us see.

Jesus, in exhorting and comforting his disciples, before leaving them, said, "I command you that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own." Here is separation still. Not of the world, but hated by the world, and of course no assimilation. Again, in praying to his Father he says, "I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them." Jesus gives them his word; they receive and obey it, and this word separates. He also says, "Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake."

Paul says, "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." If separate from the world what a precious union with God.

And some one may say, "There is no difference now. It is an easy thing to be a church member, a Christian nowadays." True, if you let your ministers do all your thinking for you, and go right along without investigating for yourself. But search the Scriptures for yourself; and when you find them teaching that God only hath immortality, believe it; that saints don't go to heaven at death, believe it. That the wages of sin is death, believe it. That the meek shall inherit the earth, believe it; believe all this because the word teaches it, and very soon a separation will begin.

NEW YORK, March, 1871.

"JUDGMENT TO COME."

IN the "World's Crisis" of Dec. 14, there was an article on this subject by O. D. Woodruff, which I wish to make some reply to. I feel as if justice demanded it.—S. COOPER.

Br. W. that God will yet in the future develop his love, wisdom, and justice in the judgment of mankind is not a subject of controversy. You have labored to make it appear that suffering is the penalty of both human and Divine law, ostensibly for this object, i. e., that the (so called) wicked dead should be reproduced in life again. We feel that your position is God-dishonoring; and that love to you and the truth demands a notice of your article to show your incorrectness.

I shall briefly notice a few of your statements in relation to human laws. But as God has said, "As the heavens are higher than the earth so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts then yours," I shall set them aside as possessing no proof as to what God has said or will do with the wicked or with the dead.

You say, "The law makes legal strangulation its penalty, and when the culprit is officially choked to death it is satisfied; a thousand other deaths would not suffice." . . "What new doctrine is this?" It is something of which I never heard or read before. Strangulation is cruelty, savagely barbarous, and disgracing to any civilized people. Our law makers were not so inhuman. They devised the scaffold with a drop, and slack rope, intentionally to dislocate the neck and sever the spinal pith, and thus cause almost instant death, making him an example, removing a dangerous cause in the community.

You say, "No other death of the culprit than strangulation would satisfy human law makers." I am happy to say, a man who bemoans "the death of a culprit in his cell" is possessed of a principle which will never be found in the kingdom of God.

Again: If, as you say, strangulation is the penalty, death forms no component part of the penalty; for there is no strangulation in death. Once more. You say, "Our Brother" (non-resurrectionist) "who would rescue a murderer from a burning prison, practically becomes a theoretical suicide. The case of the rescued murderer and resurrected wicked are precisely alike." One, (the murderer), you say, has got to die twice; the other once only. Is that precisely alike? Guess not quite. But it is easy to suppose cases, one of which might be and the other could never be, and yet call them parallel—"precisely alike." The case of the murderer might be. That of a resurrected wicked to life and consciousness you have no proof that such ever was or ever will be, for there is no declaration in God's word to that point. But to the contrary. "All the wicked will He destroy." "Like beasts that perish. They shall not see life. The wrath of God abideth on them." Such testimony is abundant. But of the rescued prisoner and the suicide; look at it. The principle of love, sympathy, kindness are the very elements of godliness, christianity and humanity; they would prompt to the rescue; and, if perchance he was burned, would apply the soothing remedy. These all have their origin in the attributes of our heavenly Father, whose tender mercies are over all his works. He has no pleasure in the death of him that dieth. The rescue would be in perfect harmony with God, and he in harmony with himself can never recreate untold myriads of conscious beings only to suffer and die, whose existence can be no blessing nor add to God's glory. We are not theoretical suicides as you say; for the "argument" which would rescue the culprit would forever leave the so-called wicked dead unresurrected, notwithstanding you say, "The argument that avails against the resurrection of the wicked is equally available against (the rescue) the act of our brother."

Here I leave this channel and turn back to your foundation text. Heb. ix. 27, 28, "As it is appointed unto men once to die, after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." "At death is the point where thoughts perish and consciousness ceases: after death is the point where revival is reached:" (in other words, "after death," according to your theory, never comes until a resurrection to consciousness takes place): "from the point at death to the point after death is the condition in death in which identity is lost, and not recognized except as its restoration is anticipated by a resurrection, for God is not a God of the dead, but of the living. The case of Rachel's children is proof of this fact."

Let us see what proof is contained in these two quotations or references. Matt. xxii. 32, "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Luke adds, "For all live unto him." When do all live unto him? In the resurrection state; for, they that obtain the resurrection are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Will the wicked be the children of God? If not, then they will have no resurrection. But why will God be the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? Because they believed, loved, and worshipped him, he was their God; therefore he will be in the resurrection. Have the wicked loved and worshipped him? Nay, therefore he will not be their God when all live unto him; they will have no resurrection, for all such live unto God. But how about Rachel's children? Would you have had any proof that they would come again from the land of the enemy, if God had not paomised it? Surely not. Has God promised that the wicked shall come from the land of the enemy? Never; no, never. Then neither of these texts afford the slightest proof that the wicked dead will ever have a revival into life. But you have taken after, found in your text, and joined death to it, not found there, nor in the scriptures so joined, and use them after death, as if they possessed great weight and authority, eight times in connection, and nine times italicizing after and using them as if your text read after death the judgment; striving to make "after this," in your text, mean a resurrected living state of all the dead, which, you say, is necessary to a judgment, and is "the after death condition."

Your position and language denies that "death is the wages of sin," as we shall show. It also, if true, proves eternal suffering. These points we shall notice hereafter. As you have tried to make your text mean what is not in harmony with the common sense use of language, let me read: "As it is appointed unto men once to die, after this the judgment" state. I ask, what follows dying to die? Is it not death? Certainly. Do not the scriptures positively declare that death is the wages of sin? They do. Then is not the state of death the judgment state into which men enter on account of their sin? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "Wherefore as by one man sin entered the world and (his) death by (his) sin, so (as with the one man) death has passed upon all men" (not for that the one man had sinned, but) "for that all have sinned." What is more plain and positive? That the sentence of death is passed upon all that have sinned needs no argument. That all men have sinned, who will deny? Why then contend that the "fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge," i. e., that we die for Adam's sin, which none other man ever did or will, but himself only?

In relation to the text, I would say, the main drift of the Epistle to the Hebrews is to show the superiority of the Melchizidec, or Christly priesthood over that of the Aaronic and these 27th and 28th verses were thrown in to show, as man dies only once, it was not necessary that Christ "should offer himself often," as a sacrifice for sin, or under the Aaronic; they had their yearly sacrifices for sin. As it is appointed unto men once to die, so Christ was once offered. It can have no other reasonable application.

You say, there can be no executive judgment without identity, and no identity without a resurrection; therefore "all parties in death must be raised out of death in order to be judged after death, as the apostle affirms." I would ask where has the apostle so affirmed? It is not found in your quotation.

Again you say, "There can be no after death to those who forever remain in death; the apostle, so in the 27th verse clearly demonstrates this." A strange clearness indeed! Is not to be dead, or in death, the same thing? Just hear what the scriptures and the apostle affirm. We read, "Isaac was comforted after the death of his mother." Was it after her resurrection, as you contend by your "after death?" Says Moses, "Ye have rebelled anainst the Lord; how much more after my death."

Again: "I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves." Did Moses mean to say they would do that after his resurrection? Omitting others, I will give the apostles affirmation. "A testament is of force after men are dead." When men are dead they (if any where) are in death; and the apostles after men are dead "clearly demonstrates" that it is after they come out of death, by a resurrection to life, if your position is true! That point I leave for candid minds to judge.

Again. You say, the second appearing of Christ depends entirely on the "after death condition." How is it, Br., that you should join three words together, never so found in the Scriptures, and attach an idea, and say the second appearing of Christ depends on that idea? I ask, has not God promised Jesus' second appearing? Is it not impossible for God to lie? How then can you say, it depends upon such an idea? To hang upon any dependency it is impossible, else it is not sure or certain. To say it depends upon God's veracity would be questioning his faithfulness. It has no dependency.

You say, "In the great redemptive scheme Christ is what the lungs are to the physical system, or the mainspring to the watch." A beautiful and truthful illustration. Let us look at it. The lungs are those organs which receive and diffuse by its assistant agent the blood, the life element, or principle, through every member of its own physical system, and no other. So Jesus Christ receives and diffuses, by the Spirit's agency, the life principle, or element, through every member of his redemptive body, the church, and no other. Therefore, the wicked dead can never live by him, as he has said, "They shall not see life . . . the wrath of God abideth on them." So with the main-spring of the watch. It is the only material power which moves all the time-keeping parts of its own compact, and no other; but without those other parts of the compact the main-spring is powerless. So in the "great redemptive scheme;" without those members of Christ's body, the church, Christ crucified is a dead letter. I repeat: As the wicked constitute no part of Christ's body, the church, it follows that they can never have life through him by a resurrection to life. I thank you, Br., for your truthful illustration, which stands squarely against your theory.

Again: You say, "A judgment to come is already revealed to the ungodly, together with a sure and unmistakable process to reach it by transition from unconsciousness to consciousness, they appear before the judgment seat of Christ after death, subjects of executive judgment." Again, I ask, where is such a revelation to the ungodly? Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; and in their writings I can truthfully say, I have never yet found such an unmistakable transition revealed through them. Why have you not given us one quotation to the point from the word of the Lord? Your quotations do not so much as cast a shadow that way. You say, "The Divine law-giver will allow no obstacle, not even death, to prevent the execution of sinners at his own appointed time; which is not before death, nor in death, but after death."

That "the execution of sinners" is their punishment for sin, you admit, and say, it is not "in death." Then it must be in life; for death (you say) is not allowed to prevent (stop or hinder). Then, of course, the punishment must be fully executed in life, and death can form no component part of the penalty, punishment, or wages of sin, which can be nothing else than suffering in life, which "death is not allowed to stop, or hinder."

Question. How long will be the suffering of punishment? Hear the sentence from the Judge: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment." Everlasting suffering is true, my brethren, or your position is false. Which will you admit? You claim a resurrection for the wicked. The Divine judge has positively said, "They that obtain a resurrection are equal to the angels, neither can they die any more, for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection:" so, if the wicked are raised from the death state, they are raised immortal; and if they suffer after being raised, that suffering is eternal according to your own language. Ignore and get away from this if you can.

Once more. If, as you say, "all parties must be raised out of death to be judged after death," it follows, that all must be swept off by a universal death to be "judged after death." Pray, tell me, would such a sweeping death be in judgment or mercy? If in mercy, you are in duty bound to show some good as the result. If in judgment, who will impeach the wisdom of God by saying, He has done an imperfect, inefficient, incomplete work, that it becomes necessary that he should duplicate his judgments? Again I ask, who will take the responsibility and say, that God did not sufficiently execute his judgments upon the Antediluvians, the Sodomites, Korah and his company for their sins? and that it becomes necessary in justice to repeat them? Who will presume to do it?

Again you say, "The race is not responsible for the loss of this present life, which is a calamity." Who is? Adam has turned to dust; Noah has gone the way of all the earth; they are not responsible. You say, to die is a calamity which "the utmost stretch of faith and holy living cannot prevent." What earthly parent would allow a calamity or affliction to befall his loving, obedient children if he could help it? How much less would our heavenly Father suffer a calamity to befall his believing, obedient children, who pitieth them that fear him, as a father pitieth his children. Oh, my Br., in what kind of a light does such language present our heavenly Father? For the righteous to die, it is not "a calamity." Are they not "taken from evil to come?" What says Job? "Oh, that thou wouldst hide me in the grave." Does Job pray for a calamity? "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Is a calamity precious? Nay, Br. But please write, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, that they may rest from their labors." Can you call that state a calamity which the Lord has pronounced "blessed?" Says Paul, "To live is Christ; to die is gain." Wherein is the gain? He rests from labor. "The Lord preserveth (in the death state) all them that love him." (Mark the contrast,) "But all the wicked will he destroy." (In the death state). The righteous "are kept by the power of God (in the death state) through faith unto salvation." Have the wicked faith? If not, there is no salvation for them: they "perish" in death; are not kept, will "not see life." But is it "a calamity" to the wicked to die? Does not God give them sufficient time to develop (if they will) a disposition toward righteousness? Is it a blessing to them to continue in rebellion and sin, which can only result in evil and no good? If not, is it a calamity to them to die to cease from sin? How can it be? Yet to the living it may be a source of grief and sorrow: but "God is love," his tender mercies are over all his works.

You say, Without identity by the resurrection of "all parties out of death" there can be no executive judgment. We read, "Jesus of Nazareth was ordained of God to be judge of quick and dead."

Again, "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom." Again. "Who shall give an account to him that is ready to judge the quick and dead." "For for this cause was the gospel preached to them that are dead, that they might be judged" (while dead) "according to men" (living) "in the flesh;" i. e., as character will be the criticism which will secure to or deprive men living "in the flesh" of the gift of eternal life, when Jesus comes; so the character of those who are dead will determine whether they remain in the congregation of the dead or receive the gift of life, "and live according to God in (or, by) the Spirit," through a resurrection by Jesus Christ.

These texts teach that men may be judged while dead; yea, more, will be judged while dead; and yet I add another. Says the Revelator, "I saw the dead small and great stand before God; and the dead were judged." None of this scripture language intimates a necessity of a resurrection to life of the wicked dead. I know of no text that does.

Br., I have not designed to follow you in a regular course, but have not misrepresented you, neither have I striven to present arguments to prove that the so-called wicked dead will not live again, and have but slightly touched that point.

One point more. God never deals with things that are not; and although we use the term wicked dead to convey ideas, there is in point of fact no such thing in God's universe as a wicked dead man; they have ceased to live; turned to dust, are not, whom the Lord rememberest no more. But not so with the righteous. They "are had in everlasting remembrance;" are subjects of promise: "Preserved —kept by the power of God—their life is hid with Christ in God"—will awake and sing.

Your Br. in hope of life.

WOODSTOCK HOLLOW, CONN.

"VALUE OF ACCURACY.—It is the result of every day's experience that steady attention to matters of detail lies at the root of human progress, and that diligence, above all, is the mother of good luck. Accuracy, also, is of much importance, and an invariable mark of good training in a man—accuracy is observation, accuracy is speech, accuracy is the translation of affairs. What is done in business must be well done, for it is better to accomplish perfectly a small amount of work than to half do ten times as much. Yet in business affairs it is the manner in which even small matters are transacted that often decides men for or against you. With virtue, capacity, and good conduct in other respects, the person who is habitually inaccurate cannot be trusted; his work has to be gone over again, and he thus causes endless annoyance, vexation and trouble."

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

MAN IN DEATH AND THE RESURRECTION.

BY JAMES H. JACOBS.

The word of God is, to our mind, the only safe guide to follow, and the very best authority to which we can appeal for evidence. It is the truth that enlightens, sanctifies and saves. It is the truth that purifies and makes us free from sin. Whatever therefore is opposed to the truth must be injurious upon all those who believe it. I read in the word of God that man does not think in death. Proof, Psa. cxlvi. 4, David says, Man's breath goeth forth, and in that very day his thoughts perish. If men say, that man always thinketh, and that death does not stop his thoughts, and the Bible says, his thoughts perish; which shall we believe to be the truth? Ans. "Thy word is truth." The word affirms that "the dead know not anything," and that "the dead praise not the Lord." To make it still more plain, it says, neither any that go down into silence. Eccl. ix. 5, 6; Psa. cxv. 17.

From the foregoing it will be seen how we look at this question. What does Christ teach concerning eternal life? He represents himself as coming into the world to rescue man from death. But this cannot be true, if man is immortal; for he cannot die. How then can Christ save him from death? He says, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John iii. 16. If man is in possession of immortality, how can Christ give him everlasting life? If mankind are immortal, they cannot perish. How then can it be said that Christ saves them from perishing? The Christian is said to hope for eternal life. But how can he hope for it if he is immortal, deathless? Does not the teaching that man is immortal and deathless ignore entirely the mission and work of Christ as our Saviour? He comes to give us eternal life; but how can he give eternal life to them that have it? If we are dependent upon Christ, the Son of God, for eternal life, we ought to know it, and cheerfully give him the honor of being the great LIFE-GIVER, instead of vainly trying to persuade ourselves to believe a lie, viz., that we are immortal and deathless when we are not. Immortality was brought to light through the gospel. 2 Tim. i. 10. It is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Rom. vi. 23. We are to seek for it by patient continuance in well doing.—Rom ii. 7; and, if faithful, we shall obtain it at the resurrection of the dead, when this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruptibility.—1 Cor xv. liii. Paul teaches that, if the dead rise not, then they (Christians) which have died in Christ are perished. But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruit, (or first resurrection). What next? They that are Christ's at his coming. Does not Paul plainly teach that all who have a resurrection will never perish? Is it in harmony with the word of God that all must have a resurrection from the dead, before they can perish? Does not nature, reason and the Bible, all say, No resurrection, no future life? Does not Jesus say, that all who have a resurrection will be the children of God, being the children of the resurrection? Luke xx. 35. This looks as though the resurrection saved from perishing. From my standpoint I do not see harmony in the teaching that all men must have a resurrection in, or by Christ, in order to perish, when it is admitted by all mortal soul men that if men do not have resurrection there will be no future life. Without a future life, men must perish. With a future life by a resurrection, they will be saved from perishing. Thank God.

BLODGETT'S MILLS, N. Y., March 12, 1871.

THE DISCIPLINE OF DIFFICULTY.

"Who will roll us away the stone from the sepulchre?"

GOD gives us difficulties in work the most sacred. Here was a difficulty, and Mary and her companions, in dealing with it, suggest the way in which we should deal with our difficulties.

Difficulties are not meant to prevent our going on with our work. There was the stone: they knew it was there: but they went on to the sepulchre. Difficulties, like the weights on a clock, are not meant to paralyze, but to keep us going; and further, they should be stepping-stones to higher things. The child at school is asked to master the difficulties of multiplication, not that he may be puzzled, but to enable him to go on to division.

Difficulties are meant to throw us on Divine assistance. And God will help us in two ways. (1.) By removing the difficulty when it is beyond our own power to do so. Here the stone was "very great," but when they looked it was rolled away. Man's extremity is God's opportunity. Our difficulties would be halved if we did not anticipate them. (2.) Not so much by removing the difficulty as by giving us grace to bear it; not so much by lightening the burden as by strengthening the bearer. Remove the thorn, prays the Apostle. The answer is not removal, but grace sufficient. Peter was not kept from Satan's temptation; but the Saviour prayed for him, and the disciple's faith did not finally fail. Only let us work up to the difficulty; God will then, not before, either help us through, or make a way for our escape.—English Paper.

To bring forward the bad actions of others to excuse our own, is like washing ourselves in mud.

THERE is a quaint old Scotch proverb which runs thus: "An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 29, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE CHRISTIAN PASSOVER: OR, LORD'S SUPPER.

THE annual celebration of this memorial feast will be held, in this city, at the Cooper Institute, Room 18, Wednesday evening, April 5; the same place where it was last year and the year previous; entrance on Eighth Street, from either the 3d or 4th Avenues.

Services will commence at half-past seven o'clock. All who love the Lord Jesus Christ, "our passover," are invited to be with us on the occasion. Please come early, so there shall be no delay in commencing the service.

We hope to be able to be present on the occasion, the Lord willing.

AN INQUIRY.

MYSELF and others wish instruction as to what may be gained, or what is the real benefit we may receive by partaking of the Lord's Supper, the breaking of bread and partaking of the wine. Do we receive the remission of sins for the past year? or, do we only do it in remembrance of Christ's death till he come again? Please give us a Scriptural answer as to the benefit that we may receive by attention to the Lord's Supper.

H. FINN.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Reply by the Editor.

When our Lord was closing the Passover Supper, "he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave it unto" his disciples, "saying, This is my body" [represents my body] "which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament" [covenant] "in my blood, which is shed for you."—Luke xxii. 19, 20.

Paul saith, by doing this, "Ye do show the Lord's death till he come."—1 Cor. xi. 26.

In the first place, the Lord's Supper is a commemorative institution: it is to remind us of Christ and of his sacrifice. "This do in remembrance of me," said Jesus. Of this cup, Matthew records that, "He [Jesus] took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, [covenant], which is shed for many for the remission of sins."—Matt. xxvi. 27, 28.

In all covenants, in ancient times, the covenant was not ratified till the victim, whose blood was to seal it, had been slain. The new covenant, which God made with men after the sin of our first parents, embraced the shedding of blood, without which there was no remission of sins. Christ was the true Lamb—in the purpose of God, "slain from the foundation of the world."—Rev. xiii. 8. Hence, various typical sacrifices were used from Abel to Moses, and from Moses to Christ; all of which were to express the faith of the offerer till the true "Lamb of God" should come and offer himself "once for all." With his sacrifice, or the shedding of his blood, the new covenant was sealed or confirmed. God accepted that sacrifice, on His part; and when men accept it, by faith, they set their seal to the new covenant, which embraces the remission of sins, and brings us into harmony with God.

Partaking of the Lord's Supper, in faith, we call to mind the Victim who redeemed us to God by his blood, and sealed the new covenant therewith; in which God is pledged to remit the sins of the other party to the covenant, when they accept the "days-man," or the party who came between God and men, and shed his blood to ratify the agreement between the two parties who had been at variance.

We do not obtain remission of sins by eating the Lord's Supper; for it is simply a memorial of the act of Jesus in shedding his blood that we might have remission of sins on our exercising faith in the new covenant promises.

There is no more offering for sin; but by commemorating the event of the "one offering," we express our faith in its sufficiency and our gratitude to the Him "who bare our sins, in his own body on the tree."—1 Pet. ii. 24. In other words, we do it "in remembrance" of Jesus.

The "benefit" we may receive from doing "this," depends on the strength of our faith in Christ and his mediatorial work in our behalf.

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD TO ABRAHAM.—NO. 3.

IN our previous numbers we have set forth this promise and oath as found in the Old Testament, and shown that the language of the New Testament, both in its letter and spirit, abundantly sustains the certainty of the fulfilment of the same: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

It is important that we understand what is included in blessing. Blessings are divided into two classes, which we call antecedent and consequent. The first is given to enable the recipient to secure the other. Man needs and desires an endless life; but of himself he has it not, nor the means to obtain it. God, in his love to man, provides the means entirely independent of man, and blesses men with those means without any effort on their part: they are presented as a free gift: without this gift, man never could attain to eternal life. This blessing is antecedent to any thing performed by man. God proposes to confer on him a life without end, if he will improve this blessing. This eternal life is a consequent blessing, and dependent on the improvement of the antecedent one. But in order to an improvement he must first be put in possession of the antecedent blessing; without which he cannot do anything, because he is destitute of any means with which to do.

To illustrate our meaning. God has not only given man natural life, but he has given him the earth or soil, the sun to warm it, rain to moisten it, and to man wisdom to know how to cultivate the soil, seed suitable to raise fruit for food, etc. All these are antecedent blessings, a free gift of the CREATOR. Without these blessings man, though he has life, could not produce food to sustain life. Notwithstanding these unsought and free gifts of blessings, we all see that, man must improve them, or he will not receive food or protract life. The product of improvement is the consequent blessing; and the man who would argue that because God had given him the antecedent blessings, therefore he need make no effort to secure consequent ones, for God is too good to withold them, seeing He has done so much entirely gratuitously,—we say, such a man would be condemned by all thinking persons: blessings consequent are always dependent on improvement; or, are conditional.

It is the antecedent blessings; or, those which are essential to put man in a condition to obtain eternal life by improvement, that man needs in his helpless state. These God has provided, richly and freely, in the Son of his love: but the provision itself would prove no blessing if never known, and no opportunity ever given to improve it. God, therefore has pledged himself, by promise and oath, that "all the families of the earth shall be blessed" in Abraham and his seed: that is, they shall have those antecedent blessings which are necessary to enable them to secure eternal life; making that further blessing dependent upon improvement—or, conditional.

"Faith" is the first and principal condition. "The Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."—Gal. iii. 8. Is he a preacher of the gospel who does not give the same testimony, or who denies that all nations, not excepting the heathen, are to have the gospel proclaimed to them, and an opportunity to secure eternal life? "All nations" includes all the families of the earth; and "all families" includes every individual of those families; hence, Jesus said, "Preach the gospel to every creature." That commission, or command, as we have said, embraces all that the promise and oath of God to Abraham embraces, and is a pledge of the fulfilment of it; and God gave Jesus "power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as" God had "given him."—John xvii. 2. "All flesh"—"all the families of the earth" then, are to have an opportunity, or the means granted them to secure that eternal life. The proclamation made to them of God's provision in Jesus, His only begotten Son, "he that believeth and is baptized shall have life;" that is, "eternal life." "He that believeth not shall be condemned;" i. e., to death; or, "not to see life."

Our Lord thus fixes the final doom of the sinner on unbelief; which would be no sin, if the individual had never heard the proclamation of a provision made for him: hence, in order to a final condemnation to death, men must have been blessed with a knowledge of God's merciful provision for them; a rejection of that provision fixes their destiny in the dominion of death.

But the idea of a provision made, yet never proclaimed to men, and death eternal inflicted for a sin of which they never could have been guilty, is too much like the administration of an ancient tyrant, who caused his laws to be placed so high as to make it impossible for the people to read them, and yet punished them for not conforming to them. Such an administration is not to be attributed to the God who gave his Son up unto death for us "all, to be testified in due time."—1 Tim. ii. 6. God's time is not so limited as our finite minds may suppose; and His will surely come, in this age, or, "the ages to come," (Eph. ii. 7), when "all the families of the earth will be blessed in Abraham and his seed;" which "seed is Christ;" and "if ye be Christ's, then are ye," also, "Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. iii. 29. Hence, Abraham, personally, and all his seed, by faith, will be concerned in carrying out God's promise and oath of blessing all the families of the earth: therefore, if this present age is soon to end, another age, or ages, is inevitable to complete the work of the promise and oath.

It seems to us that Christians, generally, do not yet understand for what the present age was given. It was not given to "convert the world;" for God well knew it would be a wicked and corrupt age; "evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived;" (2 Tim. iii. 13); and that "the time would come when" men would "not endure sound doctrine; but, after their own lusts," would "heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and . . . turn away their ears from the truth, and be turned unto fables."—2 Tim. iv. 3, 4. Such is the history of the present age; and God foresaw that it would be so. Hence, He provided for "ages to come," (Eph. iii. 7), "that He might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."

The nation of Israel having failed to become "a kingdom of priests," (Exo. xix. 6), by rejecting their King, God determined to "visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name;" (Acts xv. 14); a people to do the work that ancient Israel was called and set apart to do, but utterly failed by their unbelief and final rejection of God's chosen King and Leader in the work of blessing "all the families of the earth." From that time, the grand privilege of doing this work was taken from the nation of Israel, "according to the flesh," and thereafter a people taken "out of the Gentiles" were to constitute the "kingdom of priests," at the head of whom, Jesus was to be placed, as their King and High Priest, to carry out "God's promise and oath to Abraham," that, "In thee and in thy seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed."

The present age or dispensation has been, and still is, the age in which God is gathering that seed of Abraham, of whom Christ was and is the "first-fruits," and preparing them for their work of blessing "all nations" and "kindreds of the earth." This dispensation, or age, in which we now live, was not designed to witness the fulfilment of the promise and oath of God, but to prepare a people, freed from carnal and selfish designs, earnestly desiring not only to see God's promise and oath to Abraham carried out, but a like one to Moses, by the same God, viz., "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD."—Numb. xiv. 21.

This age, then, so far from being the final one, is only a preparatory one, to prepare men and women for the great work of blessing "all the families of the earth" in "the ages to come," of which Paul speaks. Let our hearts be enlarged, then, on the subject of God's love to "the world."

MAN NOT IMMORTAL.

REVIEW OF N. D. GEORGE ON "ANNIHILATION."

THE system of offerings and sacrifices under the Mosaic dispensation presents an unanswerable argument against the theory that spiritual death, conscious suffering, is the penalty of sin. Paul says, "And almost all things are by the law" (Mosaic law) purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.—Heb ix. 22. The life is declared to be in the blood, and when that is shed, death results. "But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat."—Gen. ix. 4. It was the death of the sacrifice that satisfied, for the time being, and procured remission. Death, then, deprivation of life, was what violated law required: it was the wages of sin. In harmony with this Paul declared: "The wages of Sin is death."—Rom. vi. 23. The question as to the nature of this death, this penalty of sin, is further settled by the character of the sin-offerings which effected the "remission" under the law.

With Israel the "tenth day" of the "seventh month" was set apart as the day of yearly sacrifice of atonement. "For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that you may be clean from all your sins before the Lord."—Lev. xvi. 30. Again: "This shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year."—ver. 10. What was it the blood, or life of which was accepted in the place of that of the sinner? "And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin offering." . . . "Then shall he kill the goat of the sin offering, that is for the people."—Lev. xvi. 11 and 15. All this means death, and there is no conscious suffering anywhere hinted at. Such an idea is nowhere recognized because it forms no part of God's plan, it having sprung up by human invention, many centuries after the giving of the law. Suffering exists, of course, in consequence of sin, and in connection with the infliction of the penalty, but it is incidental merely, and forms no part of the penalty proper.

"For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul."—Lev. xvii. 11. Here we have it again distinctly stated that the "life is in the blood;" and also that it was given "to make an atonement." But this text, says one, teaches that men have souls. Yes, in much the same manner that all other texts so confidently relied on teach it. He must be dull indeed who cannot see at a glance that souls in the text are the children of Israel themselves. If any do not see it upon reading the verse, they cannot fail to do so upon reading the following one. "Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood." Theological souls are not supposed to be so fond of eating as to require the restraint of a divine prohibition.

Some objector will say, "It is true the blood is the life of the lower animals, but the soul is the life of man, and when that departs death ensues." But hear the word of God! He commanded the children of Israel not to eat the blood, for "it is the life of all flesh."

In all the threatenings of evil which God denounced against ancient Israel in case of disobedience, there was nothing worse than calamities of various character, including death. Upon the supposition that God intended to inflict upon them, in case of continued disobedience, untold sufferings during all the endlessness of eternity, how can we account for the fact that he gave them no intimation whatever of it? If, as Mr. George contends, the doctrine of eternal suffering is so salutary in its effects upon hardened sinners and upon society in general that it not only exerts an incomparably great restraining influence upon the ungodly, but induces faithfulness also, why did not God proclaim it to the people? To put these questions is to answer them. Assuming the doctrine to be true, was God ignorant of the wonderful results that mere knowledge of it would effect in turning sinners from their evil ways? How much wiser than God are some latter-day theologians! The absence in all God's threatenings towards His people of old, and in His denunciations against them, of any reference to a condition of suffering after death is more than suggestive, it may almost be considered as proof that the doctrine has no foundation in truth, but is a mere human invention. This we affirm it to be, and no amount of reasoning, true or false, can ever prove it otherwise, for it has no place in the word of God.

But let us return and pursue still further our examinations concerning the nature of the death announced as the penalty of sin. The sacrifices under the law were a shadow of that which was to come. The offering of them secured to participants a passing over or transmission of their sins from year to year until God should offer a perfect sacrifice, a lamb without blemish for sins for all time; as it is written of Christ, "after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God." Thus Christ was the perfect sacrifice; and in order to make a complete and lasting atonement he certainly suffered the penalty, whatever it is. Peter declares, "Christ also suffered for us." What did Christ suffer? Was it spiritual death? Mr. G. must contend that Christ did die a spiritual death, since he maintains that it is the penalty of the law, the penalty "Adam suffered immediately in the day he sinned."—p. 30.

What is this spiritual death? Mr. G. defines it thus: "It is a condition of sin and wretchedness:" it is to "lose the life of God."—P. 189. Christ, then, according to this author's theory, lost "the life of God," falling into "a condition of sin and wretchedness;" he became "alienated from the life of God" (the italics are his). Mr. George doubtless holds in common with the generality of, so-called, orthodoxists that Christ is God, that he is a part of the Deity. Did one part of God lose the life of the other part? Or did God lose his own life? Is God Himself divisible? Then the theological soul is greater than God, for that is held to be indivisible. Is the Creator of heaven and earth capable of being plunged into "a condition of sin and wretchedness?" Mr. George quotes very approvingly from Mr. Landis' work, entitled THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL, AND FINAL CONDITION OF THE WICKED. We will also quote from that work, and Mr. G. will, if consistent, recognize his own position in that of Mr. Landis though, perhaps, stated more clearly than may be thought altogether desirable. On page 259, he says:

"In the sense of the penalty of the Divine law, death is the displeasure of God, and the soul that suffers that penalty is cut off from the source of spiritual life and happiness, a breaking up of all harmony between God and the creature."

The reader will notice a striking similarity between the views of Messrs. Landis and George, respecting the penalty of sin. They substantially agree. On p. 262, of Mr. Landis' work, it is written, "our blessed Redeemer suffered the penalty of the law for his people." There, reader, you have it in all the strength and consistency and beauty it can command. How do you like the looks of it? Christ spiritually dead! Our Redeemer in "a condition of sin and wretchedness!" Christ "cut off from the source of spiritual life and happiness!" Unto such blasphemy does the doctrine which makes spiritual death the penalty of sin inevitably lead. In the "gross darknesss" of such worse than absurdities will men grope in order to save a theory. These blasphemies are legitimate conclusions of the immortal soul theory. And this doctrine that in this age of freedom of thought and action is deluging Christendom with infidelity, the world is asked to believe. They who can so far cast off the shackles of prejudice as to search for themselves the word of God, will reject it as mischievous beyond measure, while very many, will continue to think the Bible teaches it in its various parts, and so will reject both it and the Bible as equally unworthy of confidence, and will reject Christ as well. Look carefully over the history of the doctrine since the third and fourth century of the Christian era, when it began to gain much strength in the church, and note how very few are the evils and monstrous abominations of which it has not been guilty.

Well, then, since Christ did not die a "spiritual death," did he suffer eternal torment? No one will be so mad as to claim that he did; and yet they should claim it, if that is the penalty, or else admit that there has been no atonement made. Christ did suffer death, literal death. His sacrifice was in harmony with its types, the sacrifices under the law. It was the shedding of blood, which is the life. He said, "This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many."—Mark xiv. 24. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more, then, being now justified by his blood."—Rom. v. 8, 9. "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things. . . . But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot."—1 Pet. i. 18, 19

Says Paul, "The wages of sin is death."—Rom. vi. 23. The Greek term for death, in this passage, is the same as in the following: "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he, by the grace of God should taste death for every man."—Heb. ii. 9. Are we to believe that "by the grace of God" Christ "lost the life of God," suffered "sin and wretchedness" for every man? "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."—1 Cor. xi. 26. Here, too, we have the same Greek term. Did the Corinthian brethren, whenever they ate of the bread and drank of the cup show forth the Lord's "sin and wretchedness," his "alienation from the life of God" till he come? Of Simeon it is said, "and it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ."—Luke ii. 26. We have here, again, the same word. Good old Simeon would hardly have been pleased with the assurance from the Holy Ghost that he should not have "sin and wretchedness," be "alienated from the life of God" till he had seen Christ. He could not reasonably have been expected to be anxious to behold the Prince of Peace. Had he, having seen the Saviour, contemplated such a sad experience we would never have heard of his exclaiming, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word."

Paul declared: "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried." Will Mr. George; will Mr. Landis; will any of the, so-called, orthodox theologists dare openly say he did not? And yet they practically deny it. Dead persons are not men, says Mr. G., "they are only the remains of men." Then it was no part of Christ that died; what went into the grave was only the remains of Christ. If this be true then we are all in our sins, and the sufferings of Christ were vain. O what lamentable folly! "I am he," said the glorified Redeemer, "that liveth, and was dead."

We have shown that the penalty named in the Edenic law was not understood, and could not, under the circumstances, have been understood in any other than its literal sense. We have shown, too, that the penalty mentioned in connection with the Sinaitic law was literal death, and that it was so understood. We have further shown that the system of offerings and sacrifices under the Mosaic economy, requiring, as it did, the shedding of the blood of the victim, its deprivation of life, was an unquestionable recognition of what we maintain is the fact that literal death is the penalty of sin. And lastly, we have shown also that Christ, in the yielding up of his life, in the shedding of his blood unto death as an "atonement," as an offering of "one sacrifice for sin forever," suffered that penalty and that only. We are, therefore, absolutely shut up to the conclusion that literal death is the penalty of sin. Other evils are, of course, sometimes suffered but they are, as we have remarked, merely incidental, or, as has sometimes been the case, denounced as special judgments upon nations, communities, or individuals.

Death was so explicitly stated in the beginning to be the penalty of sin, and has been so positively reiterated at various times by inspiration, nothing less than the most cogent, resistless reasons for attaching to the term an unnatural meaning can be reasonably held to justify its being done. Are there such considerations urged? There is not so much as one not either based upon or suggested by the assumption of natural or inherent immortality. That which is, perhaps, the least so, and is largely dwelt upon by Mr. George, is the fact that our first parents did not die a physical death the day they sinned.

This objection must, in view both of the circumstances and the record, be esteemed pitifully incompetent. Those theologists who so strenuously urge it can scarcely be unaware that the marginal reading contains the true rendering of the words which express the penalty. That rendering is, "dying thou shalt die." We are, as suggested, quite willing to allow that Dr. Adam Clarke knew something of both Hebrew and Greek, and we doubt not our "Rev." opposer will regard him as pretty reliable authority on this text. Of the words "dying thou shalt die," he says —"muth tamuth, literally . . . dying thou shalt die. From that moment thou shalt become mortal, and shalt continue in a dying state till thou die. This we find literally accomplished: every moment of his life, man may be considered as dying . . . Other meanings have been given to this passage, but they are in general either fanciful or incorrect." Of the expression, "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," the same commentator says:

"God had said that in the day they ate of the forbidden fruit, dying they should die: they should then become mortal. . . . The tree of life, as we have already seen, was intended to be the means of continual preservation. For as no being but God can exist independently of any supporting agency so man could not have continued to live without a particular supporting agent; and this supporting agent, under God, appears to have been the tree of life."

On page 27, Mr. George says—"Those who are but slightly acquainted with the Hebrew idiom very well know that our version" (shalt surely die) "conveys precisely the meaning of the original." We certainly have no objection whatever to the reading of the text: it is quite satisfactory to us. But when it is urged that the language means something entirely different from what God had manifestly designed in the use of it, we show that what not only competent authorities affirm, but also what the Bible itself marginally indicates to be a more perfect rendering positively forbids the interpretation insisted upon. He will not deny Dr. Clarke some slight acquaintance "with the Hebrew idiom," hence we, for the present, at least, leave him to settle matters with the Dr.; and as they are of the same school, an amicable adjustment, in which due reverence to acknowledged learning and ability will be shown, should not be thought impossible. The Dr., like many others, greatly erred in supposing that Adam was created immortal but became mortal by transgression. Had man been created immortal the possibility of death would have been precluded. Holding the immortal soul theory, and yet admitting that the penalty was literal death, the Dr. overlooked the fact that as the penalty was executed upon the body, the fancied soul, the really guilty party went free.

Bishop Law, speaking on Heb. ii. 14, 15, says:

"It will be necessary to attend to the true meaning of the word Death, as it is strictly and properly applied in Scripture; and this may be best seen by looking back to the remarkable passage where it is first used, in that denunciation which brought Adam and his posterity under it; and where we must suppose it used in all the plainness and propriety of speech imaginable. And, accordingly, we find the original here, as full as emphatical words can make it. They are translated—Thou shalt surely—but might with more strictness have been rendered—Thou shalt utterly die; which one would think sufficiently explained in the sentence passed on our first parents, where they are reminded of their original, and of that state to which this change should reduce them. 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.' Now what do we imagine they could possibly understand by this denunciation but a resumption of that natural life or conscious being, which their Creator had been lately pleased to bestow upon them? the forfeiting which must include a total loss of all those benefits that then did, or ever could proceed from him? This surely, and nothing less, must be implied in that most solemn sentence; nor can we well conceive the unhappy subjects of it to have been at that time so very ingenious as to explain it away by distinguishing upon the several component parts of their constitution, and concluding, that by death no more was intended than only a separation of these parts, while the principle of them was still living in some different manner, or that it was a continuation of their consciousness and real existence, though in some other place. No, this was the philosophy of after ages; concerning which, all I shall say at present is, that some of its most eminent patrons cannot help observing, that they 'do not find it in the Scriptures.' [Tillotson, vol. ii. Ser. 100.] These, in their obvious meaning, represent the whole man, individual, person, or being, as included in the sentence addressed to him; nor do they seem to take notice of any other circumstance in the case, beside that, so often mentioned, of his returning to the 'dust or ground from whence he was taken;' and might not the first pair as well expect, that the same 'breath of life, which the Lord God had breathed into his nostrils, whereby man became a living soul,' should still survive the execution of that sentence, or that the dust itself should praise God; as that any kind of knowledge of, or communication with him, should continue in that state of darkness and destruction to which they were then doomed?"

L. C. T.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. J. Parry.

Br. Storrs: I send you part of a letter I received from England the other day. It did me good to know that the truth is gaining ground in my native land. "The Rainbow" is doing a great work there. My friend is on the right track: he has made some progress, and will yet see greater things than these, if he holds out: the humble and teachable mind will find the truth long before the pride of human intellect can receive it. God hath chosen the poor, and weak, and babes of this world, to confound the wise, self-righteous D.D.'s, of all generations. Yours in hope of life.

Sandy Hill, N. Y., March 20, 1871.

Gloucester, England, Feb. 18, 1871.

My Dear Brother: I assure you, it gave me great pleasure to receive your kind letter of Dec. 5th. But how to answer it has been my difficulty, being but a youth in knowledge, and you a man of erudition from your youth. But, however, I will make the attempt, and try and answer some of your queries; only don't be too severe a critic, but deal tenderly with my ignorance. You ask me if it is possible that I can be tortured with the dreadful heresy, advocated in "The Rainbow," of the mortality of man and life and immortality only in Christ? I answer in the affirmative. Also, you ask, how long I have read "The Rainbow?" I have taken it from the commencement, now over 6 years. I must now tell you, before taking it, I was led to believe in the personal reign of Christ during the Millennium from that passage in the Lord's prayer, in which we pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Now, I thought if our Lord bid us use those words, surely we are to look for a literal fulfilment, or it would be breath spent in vain.

About this time, seeing "The Rainbow" I was led to take it, though, as you say, I cannot agree with all its statements. But certainly it has been of great use to me. The last two years it has advocated the doctrine of life and immortality only in Christ, and non eternity of punishment. Now, on this point, I was led many years ago to believe that when Christ should deliver up all to the Father, then satan and all his emissaries should be destroyed, and an end of all evil, and God should be all in all.

I did not then see that man was a mortal being, and the first thing that threw light on it was reading Genesis iii. 22, which I had read many times before, but did not see it as I now do. Some of my Christian friends here say, "Oh! it is only one of the devices of satan!" I ask them to give me a single text of Scripture where man is called an immortal being. All this I must expect, and not wonder if I sometimes find the truth evil spoken of. They cannot see that they rob Christ of his glory, by not giving the glory due to him for the gift of eternal life, which they persist in saying they have already. Yes, if believers in him; but how if unbelievers? Oh, this, they say, they won't enter into.

No doubt you have read "A Rich Parentheses" in "The Rainbow" for Feb., 1870; if not, read it. I conclude you like the Rev. H. Constable, Prebeindary of Cork, on "Life and immortality only in Christ." I am reading a little work of his which I like very much: "The restoration of all things." There is one point on which I may not have been explicit; it is this, that I agree with Constable that there will be punishment to the wicked, but the length of time we must leave. These are questions which we must leave to that providence of God which will rule in hell as in heaven, and we may be assured that the Judge of all will do what is right.

Your affectionate brother. R. M.

From Emeline Wood.

Br. Storrs: How I do praise our dear Father and his beloved Son that you are once more in your place again; and our dear Br. Thorne, how he has been upheld by the power of God. My heart was uplifted constantly to our dear Lord to sustain him. He is a prayer-hearing and answering God. Words cannot express my thankfulness to our precious Father for all his mercies and blessings to you and all the loved ones, especially the sick and afflicted.

I will tell you how the work is going on here. The tracts and documents are doing great good. I hear that two persons have given their hearts to God, and they praise the Lord for the tracts; and the paper has proved a very great blessing to the readers. Sister Tubbs says, First the Bible, then that blessed paper; what shall I do without it? I tell her, she shall have it. It has proved a great blessing to Br. Sampson and his wife. She has found the Lord precious to her: and now they are living for his glory. I never knew a more happy couple. There are four of us meet there Sunday and Thursday evenings. Two of them have great faith. We feel God is going to do a great work here in Albany,

For two Sundays I have been distributing tracts. I find some of God's precious ones here and there. I found one sick one reading the Herald of Life. She was examining it with the Bible. I said, Do you know anything of that paper? She said, No; this is the first I ever saw it. She said, it was lent to her to read; Oh, what a blessed paper; pity everybody could not have it. The person lets her send it to her mother to read; and our papers are going as soon as we read them.

I do bless God that the light is spreading here. I expect to get some new subscribers after the first of May.

Now I will say something of myself. I am being highly blessed of the Lord. My heart is constantly overflowing with praise to our heavenly Father for all the riches of his grace to me. Never since I became a Life believer has God bestowed so much of his love as at the present time. The Lord has truly worked for me as never before. I can say truly, He is a present help to me; for he has showed me that only the pure in heart shall see his face. I feel he is on my right hand, and nothing moves me. I have the witness in my heart that my ways please God; and if ever I felt that I must be found without spot, it is now. I go to the Armory every Sunday afternoon, and I witness for God and his word there, and I feel strong in the Lord. There is one man that weeps when I talk of the love of Jesus and how ready he is to save them; and he leads me by the right hand all the time. One man asked me to come and visit him; and I am going to, and I mean to let him have my paper. He says the books are blessed to him; I wish I had time to go more; but the Lord is owning his own word, and I will scatter it with his help. It is a glorious work. I hope to have blessed things to tell you soon. I wish you only could step in one of our meetings. I think you would bless God for it.

I hope to do much to help the cause soon. The Lord opens the way as never before. Oh, that he may say, when he comes, "well done, faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Albany, N. Y. March 6, 1871.

From Mrs. A. Goodrich.

Br. Storrs: With much love I address you this beautiful morn. Although a stranger to you, yet we are not strangers to Christ. What a blessed thought that we are one in Christ; and we can feel that if one suffers all suffer. Jesus says, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." Oh, how good the Lord is to us. While I have been sick, how much I have thought of you, and felt to say with you, the Lord's will be done. I have been so happy at times that it seemed as if I did not want to stay here. While the body suffers, what a blessing it is to have our mind stayed on God. I feel to say with Paul, Most gladly will I glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Since I have been sick in bed I learned these verses, "Himself hath done it." When I came to the 9th verse I had to stop and praise the Lord. I felt to say, in heart, that I knew he doeth all things well. Pen cannot describe the language of my heart. O how much of the goodness of God have I seen while passing through this affliction. I often think while we enjoy so much of the love of God in our hearts here, what will the hereafter be; for he says, eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for those that love him.

I do thank the Lord for raising you up. It seemed as if you could not be spared; and our heavenly father knows what is for our good. O how good the Lord is.

> In each event of life, how clear thy ruling hand I see.
> Each blessing to my soul more dear,
> Because conferred by thee.
> In every joy that crowns my days,
> In every pain I bear,
> My heart shall find delight in praise,
> Or seek relief in prayer.

What a blessed thought. I rejoice with you in your surprise in receiving your doctor's bill paid: and why should we not "Praise God from whom all blessings flow?" I have been sick for the past three years, able to get out doors but little: cannot go to meeting, and I prize your papers and tracts very much.

I had a visit from Eld Rockwell the other day. He gave me some tracts to distribute. I had a very pleasant visit from him; he is such a good man; he always gives such good advice. One morn he came to the door and asked how I did. He said he could not tell me anything better than to commit all my ways to the Lord. That was all he said, and went away. I could not keep from crying. I thought what good advice it was, if all of us would do so much for the Lord how much good might be done.

I did not intend to write so much; but as long as the Lord directs I keep writing. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be restored to health if it is the Lord's will. While I live I mean to glorify him and do my Master's will. O let us give thanks unto the Lord for he is good, his mercy endureth forever. I may never see you in this life, but I hope to meet you in our Father's kingdom, where sickness, sorrow, pain, and death can never come.

Sister Campbell lives across the way from me. She sends her love and best wishes to you and your family. May the Lord keep you in this trying hour, is the prayer of your afflicted sister; and may we all so live that we may have an abundant entrance into the kingdom, with all our loved ones. Blessed be the name of the Lord now and forever.

New Britain, Conn., March 13, 1871.

From William H. Spence.

Dear Brethren: We are still ready, and trust, by the grace, mercy and love of God, to let our little light shine, though it might only be seen in little small, scattered rays by the wayside; yet if it be rays from the great and all glorious luminary of luminaries it will not fail to accomplish that whereunto it is sent. Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." That is, the word of Christ is the power of the one God, and that to salvation to them that believe. Salvation from what? From the grave, the state of death. One blessed ray of light. Paul says again, "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; (or, from word to word) as it is written. "The just shall live by faith."—Romans i. 16, 17. "The just shall live by faith." Here is a great and glorious power, by which the child of God lives now; for man lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God. But do you call the word of God faith? We do in part, and that part of the word we call the evidence part of faith. What is the other that completes your faith? Jesus Christ in me the hope of glory. This we hold to be our faith; yea, the faith of the gospel; and this is only obtainable by believing in this glorious power, the faith of the gospel; or, in other words, Christ's word, the one faith, called the faith of God, faith of Christ, your faith, if a child of God. Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ (not by your or my belief, dear reader). Even we believe in Jesus Christ that we might be justified by the faith of Christ. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. But ye are all the children of God by faith (or Christ) in (not out of Him) Christ Jesus. Another ray of glorious light. He gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry; for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come, in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.—Eph. iv. 11–13.

May the all glorious, and ever blessed God, in Christ, give the seeing eye, and hearing ear, and the understanding heart.

Bristol, R. I., March 6, 1871.

From Herbert L. Patterson.

Dear Pilgrims in the Blessed Hope: May the blessings of God be and abide with you all, is the prayer of my heart. Truly the Lord is good to us, as we journey on in the land of the enemy, and are often sad; but still the blessed promise, "I will come again," cheers my heart, and I long to go and be with Jesus and angels, my kindred so dear. O, praise God and the Lamb for the love I feel in my poor heart. The past four weeks have been a time of great peace with me.

Thank the good Lord for salvation in Jesus' worthy name. I feel more determined than ever to follow the Lord, for he is the way, the truth, and the life. What a dear, blessed friend we have in Jesus, who doth all our sorrows know. How blessed to carry everything to him in prayer, and to know he hears our cry, and pities every groan. O, I do feel I want to see this blessed Jesus who has done so much for me; and I do expect to in a little while from this. I am weary of sin and death. Day by day our loved ones are taken from us, and our hearts are made sad; but blessed be God, there is a life beyond the grave for all those who have a part in Christ; and, how my heart longs for Jesus to come and raise the dear ones who are sleeping in the dust of the earth. Glory be to God, dear ones,

> Jesus soon is coming,
> This is my song;
> Cheers the heart when joys depart,
> And foes are pressing strong.

O let us take courage: Jesus will soon come to end all the sad scenes of earth. Hallelujah to the Lamb. I start next Monday, March 13, for sea, but I am going to carry Jesus with me, and, dear ones, all of you, pray for me. I never met any of you, but I'll meet you in the kingdom. Yes, through the merits of Jesus' blood I will be there. I am glad the day is so near for Jesus to come. I am glad there is a time coming when there will be no more sea. O how I love to think of these things; and let me say a word to the dear sinner, if any chance to read this.

Prepare to meet thy God. O how many there are I love, who are out of the ark of safety. Dear ones, will you not love my Jesus? Will you not give your heart to him? Jesus loves you: he died for you, that you might have life, even life eternal. O come and be saved before mercy's door is forever closed. Will you meet me in the kingdom? May God bless you all, is my prayer.

Northport, Me., March 10, 1871.

From George W. Evans.

Br. Storrs: My afflictions have been very sore the last six months. On the first day of November we buried a sweet babe, aged four months. My dear wife was brought down to her bed last August. She had a lingering cough for years. In spite of all medical aid she sank into consumption, and on the 9th of Feb., after indescribable sufferings, she fell asleep in Jesus, ready to awake when our Life-giver shall come. Her work was done in this life, and well done.

She was a lovely companion, a tender mother, and a warm-hearted Christian. She was a firm believer in future life alone in Christ; also, in the speedy coming of Christ and his kingdom; and often exhorted all her friends to prepare for that event.

In her last moments she said, "Do not grieve for me: all is well: my sleep will be short: I shall soon awake to an incorruptible life." Such was her hope, based on the sure word of God.

Her last words were, "Jesus come;" and then closed her eyes in death.

> "Asleep in Jesus: blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wake to weep."

She was a lover of the Herald of Life, and would often have me sit by her bed-side and read to her the many letters in its columns; said it did her so much good to hear from brethren and sisters of like precious faith. She loved the spirit in which they wrote.

She has gone to rest, to await the Lord's call, like Job. She will then come forth. She was 39 years old. Father Plummer spoke comforting words at her funeral, from Job xiv. 14, "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come."

It seems hard to give up dear ones, and it is; but we trust in God, hoping soon to meet them in the kingdom of God. We ask an interest in the prayers of all God's children. I have six children left with me, all boys.

In many tears, your brother.

Greenfield, Mo., March 8, 1871.

From Lovilla Fidler.

Dear Editors: The Herald of Life is the best religious paper I have ever read. I could not think of doing without it. How much its welcome visits cheer my lonely heart and mind. It shows that God is love, and is not willing that any should perish. He invites them to come to Christ and have life; and he warns them that if they do not come, they must perish—remain in the congregation of the dead. When our Saviour comes, with all his holy angels, to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe, he will destroy the wicked; but his people will he redeem and give them everlasting life in the kingdom that was prepared for them from the foundation of the world. The wicked will be destroyed, because they would not forsake their evil ways and come to Jesus that they might have life; they shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. They shall be as though they had not been.

While surrounded with the cares and temptations of this mortal life, I sigh for the Master's return; for this event, and this only, will bring lasting joys. I do rejoice that the day of the Lord is nigh at hand; and my prayer is, that the kingdoms of this world may soon become the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

While the signs of the times indicate the speedy return of our Lord, let us labor more earnestly for the salvation of those who are perishing all around us. I was rejoiced to read of the improved health of our beloved brother Storrs. I would say to brother E. Wolcott, through the Herald, that I have received those tracts that were sent me, and have been distributing them.

Watseka, Ill., March 3, 1871.

Janett Mayo, North Amherst, Mass., writes: I thank our heavenly Father for the turn things have taken in regard to our paper. It is high time an advance is made, and the cloud moved forward. For this same purpose God raised you up. I am sure you are right. May light shine on the minds of our dear brethren, that they may see the beauty and harmony there is in the word of the Lord on the future ages of glory. I cannot see how any one can enjoy reading the prophecies, who do not believe in "the ages to come" that will fulfil all things spoken by the prophets. I enjoy reading the Herald of Life better than I ever did before.

From Amy Jillson.

Br. Storrs: I would like to write a few lines for the Herald, and am not well enough to do much, nor capable of writing to edify; but wish to thank some of my brethren for what they have done for me since being thrown from a wagon last August. How kind they have been to poor me, although a stranger to them. I trust we have one Father. I still love the Herald of Life and the truth it contains: the crowning truth, No Life out of Christ. How blessed, O how good the Lord is; how I was blessed in seeing this glorious truth. I think when we are willing to investigate, and pray God to show us truth, as it is, we can see this plain truth. I am poor and have many trials, but hope they may work for good. I moved from Amherst to this place, thinking I might enjoy the privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith. I am gaining some in bodily health, but I am between sixty and seventy, and it is slow work at that age. I may never recover entirely. I buried my husband six years ago. He died in the hope of the gospel.

Well, my dear brethren and sisters, I feel and believe the Lord is soon to come. Pray for me, that I may be ready to meet you and our dear Saviour in the glorious resurrection morning; for we know those that are worthy will be raised, but the wicked shall never see life. Pray for me.

Springfield, Mass., March, 1871.

A Correction.

Br. Storrs: In the last issue of the Herald (March 22d), in my article, "An Exposition of Rev. xx. 12," the following sentence occurs, except the words in italic, as comment on 2 Cor. v. 10, 3d column of the first page, eighth line of the fifth paragraph: "Paul does not here speak as the representative of the wicked, but as the representative of Christians, and has reference to the judgment of Christians brought to view in Rev. xx. 12." The words in italic were omitted, which unfortunately reversed my meaning, and I crave your indulgence to make this correction, as those who are not familiar with the subject therein discussed would naturally mistake the meaning we designed to convey. We are of the opinion that it is very rarely that an error, which half the readers do not comprehend how easily it may creep into an article —oftentimes through the writer's own haste or carelessness—needs correcting in a succeeding issue of the paper; but those connected with the printing business know that errors of importance will unavoidably occur sometimes, and when it becomes necessary to correct them, it will repay the reader to refer back to the original article to see how the correction affects the sense.

Wm. H. Spencer.

Rochester, N. Y.

Appointments.

Manchester, N. H., in Advent Hall, Sundays, March 26, and April 2.

Middletown, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

West Meriden, Sunday, April 30.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

Wolcottville, Conn., Sunday, April 9.

Wm. Stuart.

Hartford, Conn., Talcott and Post's Hall, Sunday, April 2.

Providence, R. I., Sundays, April 9 and 16.

Charlestown, Mass., Sundays, April 23 and 30. Geo. W. Brown.

I am to preach in Onondaga county, N. Y., at High Bridge, near Fayetteville, March 2, and April 7. If there are any Life Believers near I shall be glad to see them there.

James H. Jacobs.

Hartford, Conn., (Talcott & Post's Hall), Sunday, April 9. W. S. Campbell.

West Meriden, Conn., Sunday, April 9.
Bristol, Conn., Sunday, April 16.
New Britain, Conn., Sunday, April 23.
Springfield, Mass., Sundays, April 30, and May 7.
New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, May 21. W. N. Pile.

Business Department

Cash Receipts.

One dollar each from—G. W. Evans, Abel Larkin, R. W, Neale, C. E. Darrow, Valentine Eckert.

Two dollars each from—Mrs. M. C. Maxcy, Alonzo Billings, David L. Wiley, J. J. Wyatt, Owen Wyatt, H. T. Wyatt.

Various sums—W. F. Fahnesdock, $1 10; Helen Robertson, $10 on pledge.

Receipts to Tract Fund.

Janet Mayo, $1.

For our Camp-Meeting in 1871.

Three Brethren, Providence, R. I., $50.

Parcels Sent Since Last Issue

H. Bingham, S. Carlisle, 9 papers of Nov. 30, 1870. Is that right?

Twenty-Third Psalm.

"The Lord is my shepherd, and I am his lamb,
One of the weakest and frailest I am;
Yet by his bounty daily I'm fed,
In his green pastures tenderly led.

"Kind is my Shepherd, and large is the fold
To which he calleth the young and the old;
Tenderly watching in waking and sleep,
Over us, evermore, guard he doth keep.

"Sometimes the way where he leadeth his sheep
Grows for child-feet, dark and too steep;
Then doth he lift me up close to his breast,
Bearing me upward to places of rest.

"When I had wandered away from his side,
Into the paths which the erring have tried,
He, o'er each step of sin's rugged track,
Patiently, lovingly, guided me back.

"He hath green pastures—lying afar—
Needing no sunlight—needing no star—
There, from his presence the lambs never stray,
Thither he leadeth me—nearer each day.

"But closer than meadows brightened by faith,
Lieth the valley of silence and death:
Seeing its shadows—yet fearless I am,
For the Lord is my Shepherd, and I am his lamb."

—Selected.

What Law are Christians Under?

BY LA FAYETTE NORRIS.

It must be apparent to all, I think, that God's commands to his people are naturally divided into two distinct classes. The first is carnal or outward ordinances, that have no merit, in and of themselves, only so far as they indicate an obedient disposition in those who obey them; and even this obedient disposition might be entirely wanting, and still the command be obeyed through force of habit, or popular opinion, etc.

The second class of commands, on the other hand, are spiritual in their nature, i. e., they involve a good moral action of necessity. Circumcision and the various rites and ceremonies commanded the Israelites, are samples of the first class. To love God, and our fellow-creatures, our neighbor as ourself, and to love our enemies, and pray for them; to give food and clothing to the hungry and naked, are samples of the second class. The first might be performed without improving our moral nature, as is proved by the wicked Jews in the time of Christ, who were jealous of the law of carnal commandments. The second class cannot be obeyed without improving our moral nature, as every one may prove by his own experience.

I have no doubt it will be admitted by all, that all commandments of a spiritual nature are just as binding on God's people now as they ever were. But with regard to carnal commandments, it is plainly proved, I think, that all that were given previous to the time of John the Baptist were done away.

For proof I quote the following passages of Scripture: John iv. 21–24; Phil. iii. 3; Gal. ii. 3–16; Col. ii. 14–23; Heb. viii. 9, 10. But it is not my object to discuss the subject of how many of the carnal ordinances were done away; but are there any carnal ordinances binding on us, who are not under the law, but under grace?

Before answering the question, I will say, I consider it to be self-evident that no law, human or divine, is justly binding which is not given in plain and unequivocal language in the mother tongue of all who are subject to it. Of course I admit that a person of a refined moral character might discern nicer distinctions in a spiritual commandment, than one whose nature had been blunted by sin or ignorance. But each one would be accountable only so far as they could understand it. But if carnal commandments were given thus plainly, there could be, from the very nature of the case, no difference of opinion. I never learned that the Jews had any difference of opinion as to how the carnal commandments, given by Moses, were to be performed. Hence, I conclude that there is no carnal ordinance binding on God's people, in this dispensation, from the fact that none is given in language plain enough for honest people to agree upon. It may be contended that it was plain enough in the original language in which it was given. For the sake of argument let it be granted; does that help us any who cannot read nor understand the original language? and if we go to Greek and Hebrew scholars we find they disagree.

Now, God is all-wise, and infinitely just, and He will not hold us guilty for not doing what is not plainly commanded. I do not believe he would make a law without also making it plain to those for whom it was given. Any one must be struck with the great pains that Moses took to make every part of the law plain; and it must have been still plainer to the Israelites for whom it was given, being in their own language.

I believe the main reason why carnal ordinances were done away with, was because there was no further need of them; but I might urge as another reason, the impracticability of making a carnal commandment understood alike in all ages, countries and languages. I do not say that it would be impossible with God; but it seems to me it would have to be a continual miracle. This objection does not hold good against spiritual commands. I presume no one will doubt that we have them as pure to-day as they were in the days of the apostles. We have no sharp contentions in Christendom about their meaning.

But my main reasons for believing that carnal ordinances are done away is, because I think the Scriptures teach it. Our Saviour told the woman of Samaria, in substance, that a more spiritual worship was about to be introduced. But how could this be if carnal ordinances were still to be continued? Is water baptism, for instance, any more spiritual in its nature than circumcision? Paul says, in Col. ii. 14, "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances, that was against us." What ordinance is excepted here? In verse 20 he says, "Why as though living in the world are ye subject to ordinances." I cannot see what is gained by throwing off one yoke and taking on another. If the carnal ordinance of the Old Testament were against us, why subject us to new ordinances? Paul was a wise master builder; and I can but think that if any new set of carnal ordinances were to be obeyed, he would have mentioned it in those places where he discusses the subject of carnal ordinances. But instead of that, he uses the phrase in an unlimited sense, and says, "Touch not, taste not, handle not."—Col. ii. 21. In Gal. iii. 2, he says, "This only would I learn of you, received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" It seems to me that every unprejudiced mind must be impressed with the idea that Paul considered the reception of the Spirit the only essential element in our conversion. And he asks the Galatians how they received the Spirit?

I am inclined to think, some in these days would answer, by the hearing of faith and immersion in water. But Paul's question anticipates the simple answer, "By the hearing of faith." And I am sure old Cornelius would have answered in the same way. Paul's question in verse 3, I think will apply equally well to those who believe in water baptism, as it did to the Galatians who believed in circumcision, unless it can be shown that water baptism is more spiritual in its nature; nay, they must prove that water baptism is entirely a spiritual work. It will not do to insist that use should follow the example of our Saviour, for he obeyed the whole ceremonial law. In Gal. v. 22, 23, Paul mentions the fruits of the Spirit (not one of which is any carnal ordinance), and says, "against such there is no law."

By examining this passage carefully, I think every one will become satisfied that Paul uses the term law as referring to the ceremonial law. And he not only states in substance that the Jewish ceremonial law is not obligatory, but against such as exhibit the fruits of the Spirit, there is NO law; (neither Jewish nor any other that might be mentioned.)

Another argument from the Scriptures I gather from the teachings of Jesus. He constantly ignores any ceremonial law as necessary to salvation. A sample of his teaching is, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you, . . . for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat," etc. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another." "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

Thus we see it is all a spiritual work. I believe that Christ's commission to his apostles will be found to agree with his other teachings. It is not enough that we should simply believe, for we might do that and still live on in sin; but we must be baptized with the Spirit. I do not care what you call this Spirit baptism; I believe it gives the Christian that peculiar frame of mind that makes him love the things he once hated, and hate the things he once loved. No water baptism or any other carnal ordinance will do this.

The conclusion I arrive at, then, is, that the Christian warfare is entirely spiritual in its nature. Hoping that others may be led from the bondage of carnal commandments, as I trust I have been, I sign myself as one striving to be accepted of the Lord when he comes.

CAMPTON, IOWA, March, 1871.

P. S.—My debate with that Methodist minister came off as per agreement. He acted like a gentleman, and good feeling existed throughout. The Rich man and Lazarus, and the souls under the altar, were some of his strongholds. I believe I convinced most of those present that the former was a parable. It seemed to strike the audience as highly absurd to suppose that heaven and hell are in speaking distance, and I found this my most effective argument in a debate on that passage of Scripture.

[Continued from March 8.]

The Atonement.—A Review.

BY J. C. DAY.

But there is no need of further reasoning upon this subject, as it is a plain matter of fact, spread out upon the pages of inspiration, that the same righteousness that procures pardon entitles to eternal life. Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things shall live by them: but the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved: for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. If there had been a law which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law: (to wit, that righteounsess which now gives life). We through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness. Noah became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt; but to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. The promise that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise of none effect. If by one man's offence death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one Jesus Christ. Therefore as by the offence of one the judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men to justification of life. For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners; so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. iv. 3, 4, 13, 14; and v. 17–21; and x. 5, 6, 9, 10; Gal. iii. 21; and v. 5; 2 Tim. iv. 8; Heb. xi. 7.

As righteousness merely signifies that which entitles to justification, this argument will really be carried on in a mere form under the following head. Justification in its whole extent is allowed to be grounded on Christ. Isa. xlv. 24, 25; and liii. 11; Rom. iii. 20–28; and iv. 25; and v. i. 9; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Tit. iii. 1, 7; but though the term is sometimes used with special reference to pardon (Acts xiii. 39; Rom. v. 9,) in its general and more common sense, it comprehends a title to eternal life. Some of the passages just quoted plainly show this; particularly that in which the contrast between the first and second Adam is drawn: so do all which assert that justification is not by works.

What has pardon to do with works? The mention of works suggests no other idea than that of reward. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died; yea, rather that is risen again. Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again (by way of recompense) for our justification? We are to share in his reward according to the principle, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Therefore by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom, also, we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by his life. The Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed, so then, they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham: (receive all the blessings promised to faith, which are manifestly included in that justification which the Scripture foresaw.) That no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, is evident, for the just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith, but the man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. If the inheritance be of the law it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Is the law then against the promise of God? God forbid; for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ that we might be justified by faith. Ye are all children, (and of course, heirs) of God by faith in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then ye are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise. That being justified by his grace we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

If justification is an act, or sentence declaring the subject entitled to all the good promised to faith, then it confers a title to eternal life as well as to pardon; for we have seen that they are both promised to faith in distinction from all subsequent works. Should not both titles be embraced under the general name of justification? Ought there not to be a word to express the whole amount of these new claims? Why should an essential part be left without a name? And is not justification a proper word for that purpose? Why is it not? What was its original meaning under the first covenant, from which it is manifestly taken? It there denoted a title to life, as well as an acquittal from blame. Why should it not mean the same under the new covenant? What has happened to change its import? The principal force of the word still is, and always must be positive. To justify a man, plainly signifies to invest him with a claim to be treated as just, and of course to entitle him to all the reward of well-doing. Under the law it would have given him a claim to the eternal life engaged to obedience. Under the gospel it ought to entitle him to the whole amount of blessedness promised to faith. Why should not justification by faith secure all that faith claims covenant? If the promise does not deceive, by the moment a man believes he is not only pardoned, but is constituted an heir of eternal life. All that good is instantly conferred on faith by the act or sentence of God. If that act or sentence is called justification, (and why should it not be?) the question is decided.

Further, justification in the larger sense is expressly grounded on Christ's obedience. As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous: or as it is expressed in the preceding verse, so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life; or, as it is in the verse still preceding, much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. John xiv. 19; Rom. ii. 13; iv. 25; v. 1, 2, 10; and viii. 33, 34; Gal. iii. 8–29; Tit. iii. 7; Rom. v. 17–19.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS., Feb., 1871.

The "Resurrection into Adam."

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

What will be gained by such a resurrection? Will the revival be unto the life that Adam had before he sinned, or afterward? If to that which he had after he sinned, it will be a state of condemnation, ignorance, darkness, judgment and mortality (or death); and hence no life, no salvation; and will not satisfy the supposed claim of the sinner (in justice) that having been born in and by Adam, he is irresponsible for this death life, (mortality) in which he is found; for he had no part in the sin, therefore he should have no part in the death; but alive again, he has a part in the death; consequently (being beyond the dispensation of grace) he has a part in the sin. How does this exhibit the mercy or justice of God? How does it demonstrate the power of the atonement? To be of any service to the sinner, or manifestation of the Divine qualities, it must secure a further probation.

If to this life that Adam had, before he sinned, (which should be the case, if the reasoning is sound on the Adamic revivification) then the sinner is a pure, unfallen probationer, with a life that may continue, if he is obedient, or cease if he becomes a transgressor; for Adam was neither a sinner nor mortal before his transgression. It would be a state of salvation (universal and arbitrary) yet of trial. If these revived sinners should have precisely the life of Adam (its innocence and ignorance) they might sin as readily as he did; being like him, they should do like him. Hence, the second trial would be of no service. If they could retain a part of the sinful and mortal life, (its experiences) they would not be found sinning; hence, the new trial would be a useless mockery. They are saved, and by the atonement, per force. Does a Universalist, who believes in the atonement, wish any better argument? It is logical, if the premises are granted. Is it Scriptural? How readest thou?

It is to be hoped that those who believe in the resurrection of all men, especially on the ground of the atonement, will no more complain that some institute the doctrine of "Probation after the Lord comes." They do that.

In bringing all men up to the Adamic life, to exhibit the justice of God to the sinner, which they tell us must be done, or that attribute of Deity will be terribly marred, they do the Almighty the injustice of placing a large part of mankind under an expost facto law. They give the sinner a life in "Adam" which he has not earned, and for which he is not to be blamed, to damn him with torments (to death) under judgment of a law, published ages, even, after he lived and sinned.

Children's Department.

Acting a Lie.

Mrs. Hansom went away one afternoon, leaving her little daughter with the care of the baby, who had not been quite well for several days. She told Helen to sit by her little sister, and not leave her at all while she was gone, for if she should kick the clothes off, she might get cold and be worse, and if she should waken, and try to get up, she might fall from the crib and hurt her very much.

"You may sit by her very quietly," said Mrs. Hansom, "and study your multiplication table, the last half of the eights, and when you have learned that you may finish the handkerchief you were hemming for papa. It is only two days to Christmas, and you want to finish the handkerchief, so that Maggie can do it up nicely for you."

Helen promised she would do the best she could, and, taking her arithmetic, seated herself by little Abbie, feeling quite happy that mamma had placed so much confidence in her, and thinking she would take "such nice care of baby."

For a time she studied very busily, stopping only once or twice, just to tuck up the chubby little foot which peeked out from the warm blankets, and to kiss the fat, dimpled hand that hung so temptingly over the side of the crib.

Presently she heard the voice of her little playmate, Katie Bell, in the next room, and dropping her book, she crept noiselessly out, for fear her merry laugh and voice might waken the baby sleeper.

Katie was full of the surprises which she had planned for Christmas, and Helen was so interested to hear, that she forgot entirely her little charge, and followed Katie out to the gate, talking very busily, until the striking of the church clock reminded her of her mother's return, and with a trembling heart she ran as fast as her feet could carry her.

As she entered the nursery, babie Abbie was lying on the floor, tangled in her blankets. Helen ran to her, laid her carefully in the crib again, wiped the little red eyes, and sang and rocked her till she was fast asleep.

Then she took her arithmetic, but her mind was ill at ease, and she could not fix it upon her book. She did not know how long little Abbie had lain there, for she had cried herself to sleep, and the cheeks were still wet with tears when she took her up. And then she feared she was hurt, or had taken cold.

When Mrs. Hansom came in Helen was still sitting by the crib, and seeming to study very earnestly. Her mother smiled very sweetly and approvingly upon her.

"Has baby been good, Helen?"

"Yes, mamma," said the little girl. "She cried once, and I rocked her to sleep again."

"And how have you got along with your lesson?" said Mrs. Hansom.

Helen colored, as she answered, "It seems real hard, mamma, and I have not got it perfectly yet."

"Then you have not sewed any?"

"No, mamma."

"I am sorry, for I wanted very much you should finish both to-night, and I was detained so much longer than I expected. I thought you would have plenty of time, baby is so quiet. However, it is of more consequence that she should be well taken care of, and I feel quite proud of my faithful little nurse."

Helen blushed still deeper as she felt how unworthy she was of her mother's words of praise, but she said nothing, and soon went out to play, as her mother told her she might, till tea time. But she was not happy, for although she had not told a lie in so many words, she felt she had deceived her mother. She had acted a lie, and that was just as bad as to tell one.

Little Abbie slept uneasily, with her eyes half open, and tossed about in her crib. When Mrs. Hansom felt of her head, it was very hot. She took her up, and, bathing the feverish head in cold water, discovered quite a bunch on one side of it. There was also a bruise upon the left arm. She knew it was not there when she put her to sleep, and sent immediately for Helen to come to her. As she looked up at the guilty face she knew something wrong had happened, of which Helen had not told her, but she called her to her side, and showing the bruises, said very quietly, "Helen, do you know how these came here?"

Helen was shocked, and surprised and frightened. She had not seen them before, but she could not tell a lie if she could act one, and hiding her face in her mother's lap, she burst into tears, and sobbed out the truth, saying,

"I did not mean to, mamma, I know I didn't; but I forgot."

Mrs. Hansom felt very much grieved. She had confided in her daughter, and had been deceived, and her heart felt very sorry.

"I only meant to be gone a minute, mamma, and baby was so fast asleep, I thought she would not waken till I got back."

"You did wrong to leave her at all, Helen, when I had charged you so particularly not to; but after you had disobeyed, you should have told me at once, when I came in, that I might have tended to these bruises, for I fear Abbie is badly hurt;" and she stroked very lovingly the little head that was turning so restlessly from one side to the other.

"Do you think baby will really be sick for this, mamma?" asked Helen, in a distressed voice, for she dearly loved her baby sister.

"I cannot tell," said Mrs. Hansom. "I hope not, but it might have proved something very serious, had I not discovered it in time."

Helen went to bed with a heavy heart, and as she knelt to say her prayers she asked more earnestly than ever that she might be forgiven, and kept from doing so again; and then she asked God to make the little sick one well. Her first thoughts in the morning were of Abbie, and jumping out of bed, she went silently to her mother's room, where the night lamp was still burning very dimly.

Mrs. Hansom had not undressed through the night, and as Helen went in she sat bending over the little sleeper. Helen felt as if her heart would burst, as she asked how baby was. How she trembled, and feared to hear the answer, and how relieved did she feel when her mother told her Abbie was sleeping more quietly, and that the slight moisture on her forehead told that the danger which had threatened their little pet had passed away, though she was very weak, and would not be quite well for days to come.—Tract Journal.

The Early Choice.

Fifteen years ago two lads were standing at the corner of one of our streets. They were talking earnestly. There was a little meeting at the chapel near, and one was trying to persuade the other to go—both were children of Christian parents, both were brought up under all good influences.

"I am going to the chapel to-night. Father expects it; our minister expects us; our Sunday school teacher expects us; everybody who thinks most of us expects us to be there. I am going. Come, you go too."

"O, I can't. I don't want to be a Christian. I wont be. I am not ready; but I know I shall if I go, so I shan't go."

"And I shall," said his companion. One went one way, the other went the other way. Each made his choice, and it proved to be a choice for life. Augustus joined the people of God, and is an earnest Christian man, a rising lawyer, beloved and honored.

James turned his back upon God and his church. To-day he keeps a gambling hell, and has just been heavily fined for a drunken fight. When we make a choice, we take the consequences which follow from it. See to it what that choice is.—Child's Paper.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

WM. H. SPENCER, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "
27.	The Kingdom od God,	2 "
28.	The Destiny of the Wicked,	2 "
29.	The Dead are Dead,	2 "
30.	Inherent Immortality,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 26.
WHOLE NUMBER 360.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

WILL THE EARTH BE BURNED WITH LITERAL FIRE?

BY ELD. THOMAS K. ALLEN.

"BUT the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up."

In my last article, I endeavored to show that the above passage of Scripture could not be understood in a literal sense, unless we spiritualize many plain declarations of God's word, such as Psa. civ. 5, "Who laid the foundations of the earth that it shall not be removed forever." Eccl. i. 44, "The earth abideth forever." Gen xiii. 15, "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed, forever." Dan. ii. 44, "In the days of these kings the God of heaven will set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." The last text clearly shows that God's everlasting kingdom is set up in the days of these kings, and not after they shall have been destroyed and have passed away; and that, when once this kingdom is set up it shall never be destroyed, and it shall stand forever.

I endeavored, also, to show that if Peter's language in the text must be understood in a literal sense, then the following passages would, also, have to be understood in a spiritual sense. Prov. x. 30, "The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." Prov. ii. 21, 22, "The upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect, shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, (not burned up with it) and the transgressors shall be rooted out." Matt. xiii: His "angels shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and those which do iniquity" (not gather out the righteous to the sea of glass, until the wicked are destroyed with the earth) "and shall cast them into a furnace of fire." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Now I shall proceed to show what the true exposition of the text is. In the context, Peter says, "the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished." Now, if we can determine what the world that then was means, we can determine what is meant by "The heavens and the earth which are now." If we look at Gen. vi. 5, we read, "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth." Verse 7, "And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth." Verse 12, "And God looked upon the earth, and behold, it was corrupt: for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." Chap. 7, "For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." Verse 21, "and all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man. And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

Chap. viii. 5, "And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month; in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen." Verse 11, "And the dove came in to him in the evening, and, lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth." Verse 13, "And Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked and, behold, the face of the ground was dry."

I have given thus the details of the history of the flood to show that the world that then was, being overflowed with water, and perished, was not the literal earth, for the mountains were seen after the water decreased, and the dry ground, and the olive trees were growing, for the "dove came in to him in the evening, and, lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off." But Peter referred, doubtless, to the world of ungodly men that corrupted the earth and that had filled it with violence. It was then, all flesh that was destroyed; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark.

If then Peter speaking figuratively of the destruction of all flesh, calls them the world that then was, by parity of reasoning, "the heavens and the earth which are now, and are reserved unto fire, must mean the judgment and perdition of ungodly men; and not the literal earth, which God says, "shall not be removed forever."

This exposition harmonizes with very many Scriptures; such as Zeph. i. "I will utterly consume all things from off the earth, saith the LORD. I will consume man and beast; I will consume, the fowls of the heavens, and the fishes of the sea, and the stumbling blocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the earth, saith the LORD." "The whole earth shall be devoured by the fire of my jealousy." Matt. iv. v, "For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. And again, Isa. xiii. 9, "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, cruel, both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it."

In conclusion, then, I will say, that the fierce anger of the LORD is compared to a fire, and that war, famine, and pestilence will desolate the earth. "The slain of the LORD shall be from one end of the earth even to the other end of it, they shall not be lamented neither gathered nor buried," etc. O, then, in view of the great destruction that is coming, and hasteth greatly, let us seek righteousness, seek meekness, that we may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

WINONA, MINN., March 7, 1871.

THE TIME OF THE PASSOVER.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

THE whole question turns on the time of the beginning of the Jewish first month. For if we can ascertain at what time the month begins, it is a very easy matter to count fourteen days from that time.

If it cannot be ascertained when the time of the passover occurs, and that with certainty, it cannot be shown that God requires any of us to observe the sacrament of the Lord's supper on that day. If to observe a particular ordinance on a definite day is a Divine requirement, then, surely, there will be sufficient evidence at hand to fix that particular day. Convince us that all is uncertainty as to the precise time when passover day occurs, and we have no argument by which to sustain us in the opinion that God's appointed time for this feast is yearly or at the recurrence of the passover.

First: It is the testimony of able critics, and also of travellers that the barley harvest was not ripe in Judea by the first of April.

Second: If the Jewish month always commenced with the new moon, it must have commenced, this year March 20th to bring passover day as early as April 5th. But the fourteenth day from the new moon in March falls on the third day of April, instead of the fifth.

Again, the beginning of the month being reckoned from the new moon, the full moon has nothing whatever to do with fixing the time of the passover.

Under the head of NEW MOON the "Bible Dictionary" says, The new moon was the commencement of each of the Hebrew months. The Hebrews had a particular veneration for the first day of every month, for which Moses appointed peculiar sacrifices, Numbers xxviii. 11, 15." This day was observed in the time of Saul. See 1st Sam. xx. 5, 6, 18. "And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the new moon, and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat; but let me go that I may hide myself in the field until the third day at even. And if thy father at all miss me, then say, David earnestly asked leave of me, that he might run to Bethlehem his city; for there is a yearly sacrifice there for all the family. Then Jonathan said to David, To-morrow is the new moon; and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty. (verse 24.) So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king set him down to eat meat. (Verse 27.) And it came to pass on the morrow which was the second day of the month."

Here is positive testimony that the month commenced with the new moon. See also Psa. lxxxi. 3, 4. "Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast day: for this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob."

This "time appointed" is found in Lev. xxiii. 24, "Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, in the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation."

Here is additional evidence that, by commandment of the God of Jacob, the Jews were to begin their months with the new moon.

Those Jews therefore who establish their passover by reckoning full moons are out of harmony with that arrangement established by Moses, by commandment of the God of Jacob.

We repeat, the full moon has nothing to do with settling the time of the passover.

We have in a previous article given good authority, showing that the first month of the sacred year commenced with the first new moon after the vernal equinox.

From that day only, can we reckon to find the passover day. Suppose it be true that crops are ripe in April in California, in nearly the same latitude of Judea: It is also true that grain ripens much earlier in some of our western States than in the same latitude in States farther east.

With all the evidence before us, we prefer to celebrate the Lord's Supper on the second day of May, which we are satisfied is passover day.

P. S.—"All points on the Pacific slope are as warm as those from six to ten degrees further south on the Atlantic side. San Francisco, in the latitude of Richmond, has the climate of Savannah. Victoria, on Vancouver Island, far north of Quebec, is as warm as New York. Walla Walla, in Washington Territory, latitude forty-six degrees north, corresponds in temperature to Washington City, in thirty-nine; Clark's Fork, Idaho, in forty-eight, to St. Joseph, Mo., in forty."—"Beyond the Missisippi." BY ALBERT D. RICHARDSON. P. 393. S. W. B.

Note by the Editor.

We feel no disposition to controvert the subject on which Br. Bishop has written above. We desire that each one shall use perfect liberty, and exercise their own judgment as to the fact whether the Rabbinical or Caraite time of keeping the Passover is most likely to be the true one. Whichever be the true one, let it be remembered, they did not reckon by almanac time, but from the first appearance of the new moon, which could hardly occur the same day the almanac gives, and an interruption might occur even the next day, by clouds or mists, so that the visible appearance of the new moon would still have to be waited for.

We will now take the new moon of March 1871. By almanac time, it occurred on the 20th at 11 o'clock at night: hence it was not visible that day, and it was not certain to be visible on the 21st; and so, by the Jewish method of reckoning, the new moon might be two days old by almanac time; so that if we reckon by the latter time we should be certain to be at least one day, and most likely two, earlier than the Passover was actually kept, in our Saviour's day, among the Jews. If we must have the exact time of its institution let almanac time go, as worthless, and take the visible time of the new moon, and we shall, probably, find the true time will fall on the full moon of the Rabbinical or Caraite month.

As to the time of the first-fruit of the barley harvest, the time thereof, as now found in Palestine, is no proof that it was not earlier in A.D. 35, while the land was still under God's blessing, and "the early and latter rains" watered the earth in its season. How can we judge of the grain then, by its lateness now, when the land has so long lain under a curse?

One other thought. At the time of the Passover, at our Lord's trial and crucifixion, the weather was so cold that a fire was needed, which would not be likely to be the case, in that latitude in May. It is recorded, after our Lord's arrest, "The servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals; for it was cold: and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself."—John xviii. 18. This circumstance is not proof that it was not in the month of May; but it shows a strong probability against the idea that it was, in such a Southern latitude, and on the east of the Mediteranean Sea, as California is on the east of the Pacific Ocean.

Absolute certainty as to the exact day of the institution of the Lord's Supper, we regard as an impossibility; and if such exactness can be proved to be necessary to a valid observance of the institution, then we shall be obliged to abandon the yearly observance altogether. But we do not admit such an idea, nor consent to be governed by almanac time for the new moon. After all, let every one "be fully persuaded in his own mind," and act accordingly: it will be no trial to us, however desirable uniformity might be.

FROM JAMES F. LEE, M. D.

MY DEAR BROTHER: The Epistle of Peter ends with these remarkable words: "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen."

If we are Christians, we must grow in grace, in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the knowledge of all Scripture, the harmony and connection of revealed truth, the practice of godliness, holiness, as long as life endures. We must labor to know the Lord more clearly, fully, and to better purpose; to be more like him, to love him better, that we may be more conformed to his image. He is our hope, let our conversation be in heaven, conversing with Jesus, looking for him, that he may change and fashion us like unto himself at his appearing and kingdom.

The "mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," though not attained in this present life, is to be attained in future life. Constantly approaching but never reaching it, we hope to attain it in all its fulness at the glorification of the saints. It does not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appears, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. Amen.

"Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesns Christ, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself; whom he did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." We should learn of Christ, hear his voice; and if we hear the voice of Paul and Peter we assuredly hear the voice of Jesus. "He that heareth you, heareth me." We must be holy; we must be godly; we must love the truth, and earnestly, steadfastly, daily, search the Scriptures, looking to our heavenly Father, through Christ, in faith, for the aid and guidance of his Holy Spirit, that we may understand and rightly comprehend revealed truth, and realize its transforming, sanctifying influence in our hearts—our lives.

The prophecy and promises of God are infallible, immutable as truth; they will be fulfilled in the kingdom of heaven. Have the following promises and prophecies been fulfilled since the days of St. Paul?

"Behold the days come, said the LORD, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. . . I will put my law into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." When will these promises and predictions be fulfilled? It is revealed, that all, including Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, who died in faith, have not received the promises: "And these all . . . received not the promise." "If the dead rise not then they that have fallen asleep in Christ Jesus have perished."

"And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger; all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God:" "Saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed."

The promise of eternal life at the appearing and kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, with all the honor and glory and immortality we seek, by patient continuance in well-doing will be obtained at the resurrection. The promises will then be fulfilled. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will possess the promised land; and all who are counted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead.

If any living mortals remain alive (after the last trump,) unchanged; if there are passages, shadowing forth a state of probation and trial for them, would it not be wise, in every inquirer after truth, to search diligently and faithfully for such promises and prophecies as have a direct and unmistakable bearing in that direction? Have patience, brethren, and perhaps you have no grounds to fear that if such should prove to be revealed truth, it will not militate against the truth, that the wicked will not arise from the dust, and have eternal life, happy or miserable; or a second trial of probation. Their doom is irrevocably fixed.

That there will be judges in the kingdom of heaven, there seems to be no room to doubt. They will have something to judge. Their judgment will be perfect, infallible. It is not recorded that there will be any doctors there, practising medicine; or lawyers pleading law. But we shall have plenty to eat and drink for ever and ever, in that abode of bliss and culminating glory. How many things of which I am now ignorant, will be there revealed and brought to light, no mortal can know, for this simple reason; they are not revealed in the Bible. But this much I think I do know, that everything now unrevealed, that transpires in the kingdom of heaven, will be to the glory of God and conducive to the joy of the redeemed. Nor is this all: somethings already revealed are hid from the eyes of many, who think they see, and have been hid from those who have been esteemed able commentators and profound theologians. For centuries some truths have been hid, and others turned into a lie. Human testimony has usurped the place of Divine revelation, and disseminated fictions and gross errors as the gospel, which is not the gospel Paul preached.

At the commencement of this epistle, it was intended to say a few things which, upon reflection, have been omitted; believing it was best to have patience, prudence, wisdom, and trust they will in time appear without my aid or suggestion.

MONROE, N. C., March 23, 1871.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HIGH CALLING.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

IN order to successfully search after an object we must, I think, understand somewhat of its extent and value. Does not a want of this conception hinder more from making any proper effort than all other influences combined? First, how high it rises in point of influence; like a city upon a hill; although at times it may seem to be shorn of all influence, yet, like the silent forces of the universe, affecting all its surroundings. High in moral culture, taught by the Divine Spirit accompanying the word, changing the heart, dead in trespasses and sin, to life and godliness, henceforth to be dead unto sin and alive unto God. Mercy and love, in the place of revenge and hatred; purity, instead of corruption; life everlasting, instead of death eternal. How high in power, moving the arm that moves the world. Who can estimate the power of prayer? It has closed the windows of heaven three years and six months; and opened them again to refresh the thirsty earth, that she brought forth his fruits; it has unlocked prison doors, raised the dead to life, caused the descent of the Holy Spirit, so that the place was shaken where the godly were assembled. How potent was that godly mother's prayers when with one hand on her little son's head she prayed with him daily. She fell on sleep; he lived, was tempted and overcome; yet the silent power of his mother's prayers brought him to her God and the church, as a power that still lives, and will live while the ages roll. It also wields a power that no mortal arm can reach. The fagot and the guillotine may silence the voice, while a power is set in motion that is irresistable. In benevolence, how exalted, seeking to carry the entire human race to participate in the rich provisions of the gospel of the Son of God. How elevated in love: a measure of that which characterized the Father in the gift of his beloved Son, that we need not perish, but have everlasting life; a love that seeks not her own, but the things that are Jesus Christ's: thinks no evil; hopes all things, and endures all things.

The honor and dignity of such a calling, what mortal pen can portray, aspiring to sonship to the great "I AM." Not servants, said Jesus; although this were an honor mortal man might seek with all his heart; for, said Jesus, "The servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you, Friends; for all things that I have received of my Father I have made known unto you." Also, Brotherhood with the Lord Jesus; who declared that, such as do his Father's will are brother, sister, and mother.

O the height of glory, that will be fully realized by all who like Paul have been reaching unto the mark of this high calling, when they witness the grace manifested at the revelation of Jesus Christ; the promises will be understood in their fulness, the highest conceptions of the imagination more than realized; for the heart of man has never conceived this glorious reality.

Beloved friends, may we so run for the prize that, like Paul, we can confidently exclaim, "I have fought a good fight . . . finished my course, kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love His appearing. Amen.

ST. PAUL, MINN,, March, 1871.

[WE take the following extract from the "New York Herald," March 27. It speaks some important things. Let them be pondered.]

MANLY CHRISTIANITY.

There is nothing of which the world stands in greater need to-day than a manly type of Christianity. We have too much of the apologetic, polished, dilettante style of preaching and practice, and too little of the bold, fearless and manly style. Wealth, ease and fashion and freedom from persecution have produced a stunted and effeminate Christianity, which is barely able to maintain itself against the insidious infidelities and scepticisms of the age; and unless we can have something healthier, stronger and better the progress and civilization of the race must stand still or make very slow advances. We want, and must have, a type of Christianity which in the face of danger and surrounded by open or concealed enemies can stand as a rock, unshaken and secure. We want, and must have, a type of Christian manliness in the pulpit and in the pew which shall not be afraid to call the Scribes and Pharisees of our generation hypocrites and whited sepulchres; that can take a scourge of cords and drive out of the Christian temples of the land, and especially of this city, the traders in politics, religion and morals who have made, or are trying to make, the Lord's house a den of thieves. In one-half the churches of our city the wealth, and not the moral purity of life or the Christian experience, is the ladder by which men attain to eminent positions in the Church. And the doctrine and preaching must conform in a great measure to the lives and character of the men thus elevated. And if ministers shall so far forget themselves as to utter severe truths against sins and sinners, as we have sometimes heard them, they don't proceed very far until they have let their congregations know that they are not the persons meant. These are the men who enter the ministry as they would enter any other profession, and not from that high sense of duty inspired by the Holy Spirit and an intense love for the souls of men. Who can conceive of Paul and Peter and Stephen, of Huss and Wyckliffe and Knox, of Wesley and Whitfield by the cut of their coats or the trim of their hair, or by the salary, large or small, which they received as ministers or pastors? They might have been little of stature, deformed, ugly and uncouth in manner and appearance, but they did a great and a noble work for God and humanity, and the Church and the world to-day measure them only by the God-ward standard. They were manly men doing manly work for Jesus, and their monuments stand prominently forth in all the earth. And who can doubt that God has set those men and others like them all along the pathway of the ages, to show to the world what is the true type of Christian manliness. We remain stunted and tiny because we do not imitate the higher standards. Our models are too little and too mean, they stand on too low a plane and we cannot rise above them. But if the kingdoms of this world are ever to become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ it must be by means of a manly Christianity.

The Lord Jesus Christ called and ordained men to preach his Gospel, not because of their superior power of speech or glibness of tongue, but because the promulgation of His truth demands manly vigor, robust thought and uncompromising fidelity to Himself and to His message. "Go and speak unto them all the words of this life which I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them; be not afraid of their faces for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord." This is the command and authority of God to His prophets and apostles and His ministers in all ages, and the world knows very little about any other, save those who have "counted not their lives dear unto them" that they might bear this message of truth and salvation to the ends of the earth.

We find that in the spiritual and Church life, as in domestic and social life, there are two kinds of work, an outside and an inside, a manly and a vigorous work and a womanly, tender and gentle work—a work of the head and a work of the heart; and neither can usurp the place of the other nor perform each other's work so well. The sword of the Spirit requires a manly arm to wield it, and a manly brow must wear the helmet of salvation and a firm hand grasp the shield of faith, else the principalities and powers, and the spiritual wickednesses in high places against which the Church of Christ has to contend, will surely conquer. But who can watch over the sick and wounded in this strife, smooth the pillows and comfort the hearts of the dying, nourish and support the weary and heavy laden, and inspire hope and faith and courage in the fainting ones and those who are ready to perish, like woman? This is woman's true mission, and right grandly are thousands of them to-day throughout Christendom doing this work. But it is just as true in spiritual as in physical conflicts that the fighting must be done by men, bold, courageous and strong, and women must stand aside. Each can help and succor the other in his or her sphere; and who shall deny that many a battle, both physical and spiritual, has been won as truly by the prayers and tears and sighs and groans of Christian mothers, wives and sisters, as by the sturdy arms and brave hearts of husbands, brothers and sons? And had we fewer fashionable women and more praying women in the Church to-day we should have a sturdier class of ministers and a manlier Christianity. The Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is first pure, then peaceable. It first ploughs up the fallow ground of the human soul and then sends the waters of salvation flowing into it, so that the good seed of the kingdom may be nourished and prospered. Christ's preaching was a pattern of manliness; but it had in it also all the evidence and elements of a woman's tenderness and love, and there is abundant proof of the fact in the writings of the evangelists; so that we may be assured that the one is perfectly consistent with the other.

Manly Christianity is needed for the world's salvation because effeminate Christianity has so far failed. It has been weighed in the balances and found wanting. We must be true to God and to His word whether men will hear or whether they will forbear. There must be no letting down of the standard of Christian duty and morals among us. And when we come up to the full measure of the Gospel we shall no longer have men pious in the church and mean on the street, nor women gentle and meek in the prayer meeting but scolds and tyrants at home.

CONSISTENT.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

WE congratulate Br. Storrs in that he now holds a position which is the legitimate consequence of his premises: and not only of his premises, but a conclusion inevitably following the assumption that there will be a future age, wherein heathen nations will have the offer of eternal life through the preaching of the gospel to them.

The Holy Scriptures have said: "Hear O house of Israel, is not my way equal? Yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the LORD is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal?"—Ezek. xviii. 25, 29.

If God's ways were equal in his dealings with the children of men two thousand years ago, He that has said, "I am the LORD, I change not," will deal equally with them to the end. Again we read, "But the wisdom that cometh from above is . . . without partiality."—James iii. 17.

Heathen who live in the gospel age have no just claims on God's favor that are not common to all, in every age of the world who are in precisely the same condition, and under the same circumstances with themselves. They are no better morally, and are no less culpable, if so at all, than those who have died in the darkness of heathenism in past ages. If any are given an opportunity to secure eternal life in the future, it is all of God's free, unmerited favor; therefore to grant such privilege to a comparatively few, and exclude the vast multitude, is to deal partially, and that too in the strongest sense of that word.

Once more: "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respector of persons."—Acts x. 34. 2 Chron. xix. 7: "For there is no iniquity with the LORD our God, nor respect of persons." Rom. ii. 11: "For there is no respect of persons with God." 1 Pet. i. 17: "And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work."

So, then, God will manifest no favoritism in his bestowment of blessings on the race, but deal with them all equally, impartially, and without respect of persons. We are consequently forced to the conclusion that whatever privileges and opportunities are granted to heathen nations, living when Christ comes, in the ages to come, impartial justice will move him to grant precisely the same privileges and opportunities to all who have died in heathenism in the past.

We repeat, then, that, when Br. Storrs says, in the HERALD OF LIFE, "We do not hesitate to admit that we are inclined to believe the promise includes all those who have died without any knowledge of God's love to the world; that by some means God will, hereafter, cause all men to see the love He has had to them in giving his Son to give them eternal life," he takes a position so entirely consistent with the assumed premises that there will be probation for the heathen in the future age, as to render it absolutely impregnable against any attack that may be made upon it by any age to come believer in the land and world.

As we admire consistency in reasoning, and admire the man that will "not hesitate" to take the logical conclusion growing out of his own premises, we shall be pleased to see all "age to come" believers show themselves as logically consistent, and as honest in their course of reasoning as Br. Storrs has proved himself in the quotation we have copied above.

We have seen this inevitable conclusion from "age to come" premises for over eighteen years. And during all that time, if we had have seen sufficient evidence to warrant us in believing that any would have probation in the world to come, we should certainly have adopted the position Br. Storrs does not now hesitate to admit. But up to the present hour no such evidences have been presented to our understanding.

EATONTOWN, N. J.

Note by the Editor.

Most sincerely do we thank Br. Bishop for giving us credit for "consistency," and for the charitableness he manifests toward us. We trust he may, also, give us credit for believing God's promise and oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed;" which promise and oath are "two immutable things in which it is impossible for God to lie." This "evidence," if we had no other, convinces "our understanding," though it may not any other man's. Here we have all the ground for our faith we need, yet we have abundance of corroborating testimony to the same fact. Again, we thank Br. Bishop for his exceeding charitableness toward our "logical conclusion" in this matter. For further remarks, we must ask our readers to wait patiently till our series of articles are finished.

ABEL LARKIN, Mt. Sterling, Ills., writes: Please accept, as one of the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, my heartfelt gratification in behalf of your strong faith in the promise and oath of God in the future blessing of Abraham and his seed. Surely the resurrection of the dead, in that age or time, does not prevent it. They of the foremost ranks in merit and true worthiness first, in time, get immortal life in God. Hence the injunction, "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead."—Rom. vi. 13. So it seems to me. But let truth shine in harmony and love.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 5, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD TO ABRAHAM.—No. 4.

IF this promise and oath is not to be understood as applicable to all men who have lived on the earth in the ages past, then it must relate to an age or ages in the future—an age must be before us in which all the families upon the earth will be blessed in Abraham and his seed. We are not disposed to be too positive as to its covering all who have lived and died without the knowledge of God's merciful provision for their eternal life; yet, as we said before, we are inclined to the idea that it does. At this point we are met by the objection that, such a view conflicts with the doctrine, so clearly taught in the Bible, that there is to be no resurrection of the wicked dead. Here, then, it is proper to inquire who this class embraces:

WHO ARE THE WICKED DEAD?

In answering this question, we trust we shall leave all conjectures and be instructed by the Bible alone. That book is a safe guide in all matters of faith. John Wesley, the founder of what is known as "Methodism," gave a definition of sin which is both scriptural and rational. He said, "sin properly so called is the voluntary transgression of the known law of God. Sin improperly so called is the involuntary transgression of the law of God whether known or unknown."

This definition of sin is clearly set forth in the Bible. Said Jesus, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloak for their sin. . . . If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father."—John xv. 22, 24. Here is a clear recognition of the distinction between voluntary sins and involuntary ones. It is light sinned against that constitutes sin, properly so called: light which gives us the knowledge of God, his love and kind designs. An act may be sin in itself, and yet not be sin properly so called. The apostle John says, "If any man see his brother sin a sin not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it."—1 John v. 16.

Here is a clear distinction made as to sins: some are of a worse character than others. Paul saith, "Sin is not imputed when there is no law."—Rom. v. 12. Again he says, "Where no law is, there is no transgression."—Rom. iv. 15. Also, Paul, in speaking of the ignorance of the heathen, says, "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men, everywhere to repent," etc.—Acts xvii. 30. All this testimony shows there is a distinction in what is called sin, in the Bible, which warrants the idea that sin, under some circumstances is such properly so called; and under other circumstances it is improperly called sin, though such in itself. Without enlarging on this point we proceed to show that the gospel knows of but one sin which is punished with death eternal.

That one sin is unbelief of the gospel message, set forth by our Lord Jesus thus, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" (shall have life): "he that believeth not shall be damned"—"shall not see life."—Mark xvi. 15, 16; John iii. 36. Such is the law (so to speak) of the gospel: a dispensation under which "every creature" has been or must be placed before life eternal is given, or death eternal can be inflicted as a punishment. Whoever has this gospel proclaimed to them and rejects the message and its requirements, has then the character properly denominated wicked; and, dying in that state, "shall not see life"—will live no more forever. That is the Bible doctrine of "non-resurrection." But what has this to do with such as have never had the gospel published to them? They have no sin, in a gospel sense, that condemns them to a perpetual death: "every creature" must first hear the gospel, and have a chance to embrace its message, before death will be inflicted as a finality for unbelief: "He that believeth not shall be condemned" to the dominion of death eternal. But first, he must hear the "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people," that, "unto you is born a Saviour, (a LIFE-GIVER), which is Christ the Lord."—Lk. ii. 10, 11.

Says an objector, "Then there must be a resurrection of some into a mortal state; and we cannot believe that." We have not affirmed that such will be the case, because the Scriptures do not affirm it in those words; but they do affirm that "all the families of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham and his seed." If a mortal revival into life is necessary to fulfil that promise and oath of God, then there will be such a revival; and who shall say that the ALMIGHTY cannot or will not cause it to take place? Mark well, our view excludes from such revival all those who have been blessed with the gospel message and have not improved it: such are wicked in the gospel sense; and dying in their unbelief are condemned "not to see life," but to have "the wrath of God" abide "on them."—John iii. 36. Thus our view does not affect the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, but it defines who are properly, or in a gospel sense, the wicked dead.

As to a resurrection into a mortal state, Scripture facts show such has been the case, both under the Old and New Testaments; and that Abraham expected it in Isaac's case, if he had slain him; because, otherwise God's promise would fail, "that in Isaac shall thy seed be called." "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what He had promised, He was able to perform: and therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness."—Rom. iv. 20–22.

God's promise and oath—"two immutable things in which it is impossible for God to lie"—must be honored, however improbable or impossible it may seem to us, finite creatures, that the thing shall surely come to pass. By unbelief, to say the least, we dishonor God, and bring discredit on His word; and in so plain and clear a case, stated in such a solemn manner, as the promise and oath of God to Abraham, we feel bound to accept it as meaning what it says, whatever difficulties might appear to limit its meaning.

No criticism can change this promise and oath. We therefore accept it in all its fulness, and believe to accept it thus, is to accept "the gospel preached to Abraham;" the unwavering belief of which, constituted that patriarch the father of all believers.

HOW SHALL WE SPEAK?

WE are told that some of the opposers of our views of the promise and oath of God to Abraham say, "The Editor has no right to speak on a subject which the great majority of members of the Life and Advent Union do not approve;" or words to this effect.

When we were chosen to edit this paper, at its outset, in 1863, it was without our seeking, and we were at that time, and for almost twenty years previously publishing the BIBLE EXAMINER, a magazine which we started on our own responsibility, and at our own expense. In 1858–'59 it was suspended, and again the last half of the year 1861; with these exceptions, it had been published from 1842 to 1846 occasionally, and from that time monthly or semi-monthly till September 1863, with the exceptions we have named. We had the exclusive control of that periodical.

In September 1863 its friends had become so strong as to desire a weekly paper, and organized the "Life and Advent Union." The Union determined on a weekly paper and elected "GEO. STORRS" Editor, without restriction, and requested him to discontinue his Monthly Magazine. He declined this request, but agreed to suspend it till the Union could make the experiment of a weekly paper, retaining the right to resume the issue of the "Bible Examiner" if he judged it necessary. It was well known to all the readers of his Magazine that Geo. Storrs has held the doctrine of a future age of probation after the second advent of Christ: a doctrine which he embraced in the Spring of 1844, and has never wavered in his belief of it from that day to this, and is not likely to, unless he can see better arguments against it, than he has ever yet seen.

With the knowledge of his position, the "Union" elected him Editor of the "HERALD OF LIFE, and of the Coming Kingdom;" and have seen fit to continue him in that position for near eight years. Is he now to be told, "he has no right" to publish his views on the "Coming Kingdom?" because certain persons (assumed to be a majority of the Union) do not like them? Does any member of the Union really think, after the past history of Geo. Storrs, that he will yield his right to speak his thoughts on the "Coming Kingdom?" He is ready to hear advice and argument, and will give it due consideration; but his right to speak as he believes God and truth demands, he will not yield to man, nor to any body of men.

We have spoken thus plainly to prevent any misunderstanding. If Geo. Storrs is to edit any paper, or magazine, he will be free: he has worn no shackles for the last thirty years, and he has too long been the Lord's freeman to consent to take on him a yoke of bondage. He intends to "speak the truth in love," and to love those from whom he is compelled to differ; he asks no more from them.

MAN NOT IMMORTAL.

REVIEW OF N. D. GEORGE ON "ANNIHILATION."

DR. LANGE says concerning the penalty—"Dying, death, the sense of these words he can only anticipate, according as their contrast with the sense of the tree of life grows more clear. At the moment of the fall began the death of man. Death waxes stronger with us until it outgrows life, and conquers it." Thus we see they who hold to the unity of man's nature, are not the only ones who demand a literal interpretation of the term which expresses the "penalty of sin."

Few of the more thoughtful theologistic members of the, so-called, orthodox school have been so unwary as to fall squarely into the peculiarly illogical and unscriptural position boldly assumed by Mr. George. We have already stated, as will be remembered, that on page 63 he says—"who believes that corpses are men? They are only the remains of men." This is certainly wandering just as far from the truth in this matter as he could possibly get. The Bible position is that the man is a soul; while Mr. G. holds that the soul is a man. These positions would not of necessity differ widely were there held by him to be only one entity represented in the living being called man: but as he contends there are two, the positions are antipodal. The soul, says he, is the man; the organization which we see is, when the soul leaves it, only the remains of a man. This statement possesses the merit of tangibleness and simplicity. When, then, it is said, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground," it is meant that He formed out of the dust an "immaterial," "uncompounded," "indivisible" something—though how it could thus be something is an unsolvable mystery—called an immortal soul, breathed into the nostrils of this immortal soul the breath of life; and the immortal soul became a living soul. If any thing about this is seen to be most grotesquely absurd, the responsibility will, of course, be placed where it belongs, upon the theory. Frivolous and meaningless as these conclusions are, they are nevertheless not only legitimate but unavoidable.

Then, again, the language, "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," must have been addressed to the immortal soul, that being the man. What, then, upon this writer's theory, becomes of the undying soul? Affirming it to be the man, and not denying that the man was formed "of the dust of the ground," Mr. George is the very last one in all the world to make use of the term "materialist," with reference to others, since his position involves him inextricably in an extremely inconsistent, unreasonable, and unscriptural form of materialism. What could be more illogical and unscriptural, for instance, than to make, as his position compels him to do, the sentence of dissolution, extinction of conscious being to apply to the very object which he contends is absolutely incapable of dissolution?

Charity requires of us the assumption that the assertor of this fallacious proposition failed to fairly weigh it. Did not charity thus require, we would, in consequence of some strong indications in that direction, be under the necessity of concluding that he regarded it the very best way of escape from a certain difficulty, and staked the chances of success upon a possibility that it would escape critical notice. But this thought, as we have intimated, we cannot entertain. He will not forget it was the man that was condemned to return unto the ground, from whence he was taken. And then, too, he will, on the other hand, be under the necessity of harmonizing his singular position with the fact that what he is pleased to denominate the remains of a man was, in the case of Adam, called man before that by which he became a living, conscious being was added. These are strange difficulties for a thinking man to fall into, but we know of only one way of escape, and that is to back squarely and gracefully out, and forsake the delusive theory that leads to them. Should he think to get out of the difficulties by concluding it was what would finally be the remains of a man, or the tenement which the man inhabited, that was "formed of the dust of the ground," while the man, being a living soul, came from God, he will have a matter to adjust with Paul, who says of this same man, Adam, who became a living soul, that he was "of the earth, earthy." He will thus conflict, too, with God's account of the creation, for that expressly affirms man was made of the dust; and it also says of the lower animals that they are living souls.

A doctrine that requires of its patrons such ludicrous exhibitions of inconsistency can lay no just or reasonable claim to divine origin. It is a human invention, and human wisdom is wholly unable to clothe it in garments that will prevent the piercing light of truth from entering, and revealing its repulsive form.

When Adam had sinned, God placed a "flaming sword" to keep the way of "the tree of life," lest Adam should "put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." As the man proper is held to have been immortal and, therefore, could not die, the expression live forever could not have had reference to a continuance of living existence, for that he would have whether he ate of the fruit of the tree of life or not; but it must, according to the theory we are considering, have had reference to the opposite of the death Adam died, which is held to have been a spiritual one. But is there a man to be found who would be willing to affirm, or even seriously assume that the Edenic tree of life possessed the quality of imparting spiritual life? We think not. No thoughtful person can fail to see the utter absurdity of the theory that the threatened penalty was spiritual death. At every turn it does gross violence to the most palpable principles of exegesis, of reason, and sound sense.

The simple truth is, Adam was created, placed in the garden, and surrounded with everything calculated to promote his happiness. A law was given him consisting of this simple commandment: "of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," or "dying thou shalt die." Man, in common with all the creatures that were made, was created an animal or mortal being, but a candidate for immortality, and was granted access to the tree of life, by eating of the fruit of which, his life would be preserved until such time as God—provided Adam kept the law, should choose to confer upon him an immortal or spiritual existence. But obeying the lusts of the carnal or fleshly mind, which "is not subject to the law of God," he transgressed the law, and the penalty, "dying thou shalt die," was inflicted by depriving him of the right to partake of the tree of life. Thus left to himself, nature, as Drs. Clarke and Lange rightly claim, weakened and faded until, at last, he died; and then transpired the last threatened consequence of his transgression, "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

Adam's condition after being driven from the garden, is the condition of all his posterity, except the Second Adam, Jesus Christ. They come into the world possessing no nature or principle of life other than that of animal; and if, by refusing the offers of mercy, and doing despite to the spirit of grace, which God gives to abide in them, and which will, if obedience is yielded to it, enable them to develop a character in harmony with Him, they fail to become possessed of any higher life principle, they pass through life into death; a death so irrevocable that if the redemption scheme had been rendered incomplete by the non-resurrection of Jesus, even them, as Paul emphatically declared, who have "fallen asleep in Christ" would have perished. How very simple and reasonable is this. The truth is quite apt to be plain and simple, but error is always found to be unwieldly and hard to manage.

"Ye shall not surely die," said the serpent, to Eve. "Ye shall not surely die," say our author and other immortal soulists. "Thou shalt surely die," said the Lord, our God, and we are firm in the faith that it is altogether safe and wise and right to believe Him. We hold that few facts are more evident than that death, extinction of conscious being, as the penalty of sin, is the uniform testimony of inspiration throughout the Bible. The men who preach otherwise, who teach that the man cannot thus die, do, ignorantly and unmeaningly, no doubt, resist the truth, give currency to the serpent's falsehood, overturn the very foundations of Christianity, and perform a mighty work in recruiting the ranks of infidelity. To such we humbly say, seek, by earnest studiousness and prayer, to overcome prejudice, to know the reasonable truths which God asks His reasonable creatures to accept, and so no longer charge Him with demanding an acceptance of what is itself wholly unreasonable, and expressed, were it true, in altogether unreasonable terms.

We now proceed to examine the one passage which the author of the work under notice relies on to prove the doctrine of inherent immortality, and also the very few prominent passages which he believes support his exposition of the one. That we may not be misapprehended in any of our observations, we remark, in the language of Mr. Read, BIBLE vs. TRADITION, that the Bible, "meaning of soul is, a creature that lives by breathing; and as the essential endowment of such a creature is life, so life will stand often as a correct meaning of soul. When soul is applied to man, it may be translated life, soul, man, you, yourself, person, myself, thyself, etc., according to the text."

Nephesh is the Hebrew term generally translated soul. It occurs about seven hundred times, and is rendered soul four hundred and seventy-one times; life and living, about one hundred and fifty; and is also rendered a man, a person, self, they, me, him, any one, breath, heart, mind, appetite, the body (dead, as well as alive,) etc. It is also twenty-eight times applied to beasts, and to every creeping thing. The Greek term corresponding to the Hebrew nephesh, is psuche. It occurs one hundred and five times, and is translated soul fifty-nine times, and life forty times. It is also, like nephesh, otherwise variously translated, twice being applied to beasts. The foregoing renderings of the Hebrew and Greek terms mentioned, are given on the authority of BIBLE vs. TRADITION, an excellent work.

Dr. Parkhurst says—"Nephesh, as a noun, hath been supposed to signify the spiritual part of man, or what we commonly call the soul. I must confess I can find no passage where it hath undoubtedly this meaning." What do our present-day theologues say to that? The term which is four hundred and seventy-one times, in our English version, represented by a word the very use of which is believed to confirm the view that man is possessed of a spiritual entity capable of separate conscious existence, cannot be found by a learned writer to have that meaning in any instance.

The one passage, upon his explication of which Mr. George stations himself, and to which, whenever he ventures out, and sees danger ahead, a thing which occurs about as often as he does venture out, he generally flies, and, mounting it, fancies himself safe, is Matt. x. 28:

"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

The corresponding passage in Luke reads:

"And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him."—Luke xii. 4, 5.

We are quite willing to admit that there is no passage in the Bible more difficult to explain to the satisfaction of believers in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, than the one first quoted above. But let it be borne in mind, that the seeming sentiment of no one, two or three passages of Scripture may safely or wisely be held to teach what the very many others manifestly, nay undeniably discountenance and oppose, and especially when the few are susceptible of a reasonable exposition in harmony with the manifest sentiment of the many. The ignoring of this just principle has produced lamentable results: its fruits are evil, and only evil. That this passage is susceptible not only of an explication in entire harmony with the multitude that oppose what it is by many supposed to teach, but one which is more reasonable also than that given it by theologists generally, we design to sufficiently show.

Whatever teaching may be credited to the passage, it cannot consistently be held to teach the immortality or indestructibility of any thing connected with man by nature. The very opposite is true of the text, for the exhortation is, "fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but fear him which is able to destroy both in hell. Whatever soul, here, means, the fact is expressed that though men cannot kill or destroy it, God can. Since, then, this text unquestionably teaches that God can kill the soul, whatever is here meant by the term, the question arises, will He under any circumstances do so? The language of Jesus certainly implies that God is not only able to do it, but that He will do it. To the question there can be but one reply. Scripture testimony is too plain to admit of doubt. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "Oh," says the objector, "this is spiritual death." Far from it. The verb shall, in the text, makes the death threatened to the sinning soul an event future to the act of sin, whereas the act of transgression, and the introduction of what is denominated spiritual death must of necessity happen cotemporaneously.

Latter-day theologians contend that the soul is immortal, indestructible. If this were so then God Himself could not destroy it any more than could man. To meet this objection, it is asserted that destroy has not in this text its usual signification, but is used tropi-

cally. Is it so? Then how may we know that kill, soul, body, fear are not also thus used? To urge that these terms are here used in a figurative sense would be to insist that the text teaches nothing: and yet it would be no more unreasonable to affirm they are used tropically than it is to so affirm of destroy. It should have been frankly said, "the term destroy cannot just here bear its usual signification without doing great violence to our theory." Of course it cannot. Give it just as literal an interpretation as is claimed for every other word in the text, and it will do for the popular theory what Jesus affirmed men can only do to the creature, viz., kill it. Pursuing the assumption that destroy was used by Jesus, in this instance, figuratively, the idea being that one can render soul and body utterly miserable in the theological hell, some commentators and others have taken the position that Satan is the "him" referred to as able to do this. In this they are consistent. They do not charge God with rendering beings miserable in hell: no, they have it that He at the judgment consigns them to that abode, and "his satanic majesty" does the rest. Those portions of God's word, however, which testify to the final destruction of both hell and devil, are not in high favor with any of these eternal tormentists. Among those who have taken the position just mentioned, and have finally concluded it was Satan that was said to be able to destroy soul and body, are Drs. Lange, Stier and others. Dr. Lange, however, subsequently changed his mind, and openly so avowed. L. C. T.

FRANCE.

We have not lately reported anything from the seat of the late destructive war, because there has seemed to be nothing of peculiar importance to relate. An attempted revolution, led by what are termed Communists, is now in progress, having for its object the overthrow of the government which prosecuted the war inaugurated by Napoleon, and the establishment of what they are pleased to call a Republic. Such proportions has this movement assumed, Paris has for some days been largely under its reckless, pillaging and bloody rule. The following dispatches from London give pretty nearly the present state of affairs. We must not confound these Communists' ideas of a Republic with the American idea, for the former means anything but justice, law and order.

"The following dispatch has just been received from Versailles:

"Several thousand National Guards, occupying Puteau, Courbevoie, and the Bridge of Neuilly, have been routed by the troops, who carried the barricades, and captured many prisoners. The Nationals fled into the city. The moral effect of the affair is excellent.

"The crisis is at hand. Two batteries are in motion on the Paris road, and the ambulances are all ready. Bismarck has given permission for any number of troops to be massed near Paris, and says that if order is not restored in Paris by the 15th inst. the Germans will enter. This news may be accepted as trustworthy.

"Another dispatch just received from Paris gives the following account of the engagement:

"There was a serious engagement this morning between the Government troops and Communists. About 2,000 of the National Guards marched on Courbevoie, and were met by the Gendarmes and Gardes Forestiers. The Captain of the latter galloped up, waving his cap, intending to address the Communists, when a Zouave with that body shot him dead. A general action followed, in which the Gendarmes took five prisoners, one 76 years of age, who were shot immediately. The guns of Fort Valerien swept the road, and the Communists fled. Twenty-five of the insurgents were killed and many more wounded. The engagement was over at 1 o'clock. The National Guards still hold Porte Maillot. Battalions of artillery are hurrying up, the rappel is beating, and the ramparts are being manned. The greatest excitement prevails.

STILL LATER.

Yesterday, Monday, the Communists again came in conflict with the troops of the Thiers Government. Some fifty thousand of them passed out of the city and advanced toward Marseilles. When in front of Fort Valerien, it opened upon them with deadly effect. The dispatch says the loss was 12,000 killed and wounded. The Communists have decreed the separation of Church and State, suppressed all religious bodies, and abolished all national property. L. C. T.

MEAT IN DUE SEASON.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

There is a growing interest with the people who believe in the near-coming kingdom, to hear upon the prophecies. I find, also, a desire on the part of those not identified with this people to know what "these things mean." The present great and mighty changes going on, the manifest fulfilment, on a scale so grand, that indeed, it appears that "a short work will the Lord make on the earth," in this most remarkable and strange judgment upon the nations; especially of the old Roman world.

They wish to see what the people who have made the prophetic Word their study, think of the overthrow of these old fabrics of rule, and whether the ancient visions did indeed reveal the facts. Is not this teaching, then, demanded by the real believers and by the serious inquirer, who is not a full believer? "Meat in due season" to the household.

March 27, 1871.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

BY ELD. R. V. LYON.

Dearly Beloved Brethren and Sisters: In order that this priceless boon of a Saviour's purchase be exhibited by us, who are the disciples of Jesus, it is highly important that we have unwavering confidence in the inspiration of the Living Oracles. Taking them as our only rule of faith and practice in godliness, and sure guide to the Eden of rest! and thereby renouncing all sectarian names and human creeds, or articles of faith which have been drawn up by uninspired men, stating what men must believe, and what they must not believe all for the purpose of creating a party, exalting self, instead of Jesus the Life-giver.

2. That we abide by the literal interpretation of this best of all books. The Bible of Abraham's God!

3. That we believe that its author has given it to us, clothed in language that we may understand.

4. That we allow each one the right to search and understand the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments for themselves.

5. That man must "live by every word of God."

6. That "every word of God is pure." Hence, in order to our purification, it must be believed and obeyed.

7. That we believe "all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Hence, the importance of searching them daily in order to obtain the mind of the Spirit.

8. It is highly important that we "give heed to the sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and day-star arise."

9. That we believe in a literal fulfilment of the prophetic word.

10. That when we hear a truth or sentiment advanced, which comes in collision with our peculiar notion of things, instead of seeking to bring objections against them, or turning them into burlesque, we should remember that God has made it our duty to compare them with His unerring word; and if they are found to be in harmony with it, then it is for us to receive them, though it may be at the sacrifice of a degree of popularity which we have gained by propagating error, or keeping back truth for the sake of worldly gain!

11. We should remember that the great Head of the church has made it our duty to preach a whole gospel.

12. We must occupy a position that will enable us with pleasure to grant unto our brethren and sisters who may chance to differ with us on the true import of certain portions of the blessed Bible, freedom of thought and speech; and, at the same time, exercise Christian kindness and patience towards them.

13. We must at all times occupy the position of a learner in the school of Christ.

14. We should acknowledge Jesus as our only Head and Leader; and those who do the will of his Father, as our brethren and sisters, seeking to fill our proper place in the body—the Church of God.

15. We should seek to exalt Jesus, instead of ourselves!

16. We should have love one to another, even as Jesus hath loved his "sheep"—the congregation of God, by laying down his life for them.

17. We should "esteem others better than ourselves."

Dearly beloved, let these rules be observed, and the cry of division would no longer be heard among us; and our weather-beaten bark would leave the waters of strife for those of peace and joy. Amen.

Suspension Bridge, N. Y., March 27, 1871.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. WILLIAM C. THURMAN.

Br. Storrs: I am indebted to you for the valuable information received from your publications since 1842. While others have been seeking honor one of another, we have noticed that your paper, preferring the gospel platform of freedom, or liberty in Christ, has become the most interesting of all published by the Advent body. And if I were to inform you how much I have been cast down and grieved at heart to see the divisions, and many conflicting opinions, now among those, who once, as virgins, "went forth to meet the bridegroom," you could form an idea of how much I was delighted to see you now beginning to raise the vail, and let in the flood of light, which will enable all lovers of truth to "speak the same thing." I allude to your article, "The promise and oath of God to Abraham." Since you have never, like those who "receive honor one of another," (John v. 44,) planted your stakes too deep to be drawn out of the highway of truth, you now have it in your power to exhibit to all, that the Bible, as a book worthy of God, is in harmony with itself, and when this is done, all true Christians can "speak the same thing."

I was much pleased to see that you, preferring the old custom of the 14th of the first month, could not adopt Br. Bishop's new method of having the Lord's Supper on the 13th; for our astronomical information can never repeal the law of God, nor change that calandar which He has written in the heavens; therefore the only point worthy of controversy is, as to whether we should observe the Lord's Supper as early as the 5th of April. That Christ instituted it on the 6th of April, A.D. 30, I have no donbt; for Josephus not only informs us that the Passover was celebrated when the sun was in Aries, but has also given us the means of making an astronomical demonstration of the correctness of this, as noticed on p. 189 of "The Sealed Book of Daniel opened."

But when I call to mind that the stars, which were at that time in Aries are now in Taurus, I conclude that the communion season may be a month later The sidereal year is 20 m, and 17 1-2 s., longer than the solar year, which in 1840 years amounts to 25 d., 22 h., 16 m., 40 s., and it would appear that the harvest in Palestine is, at the present day, about twenty-five days later, for, says Newton Brown in his "Encyciopaedia of Religious Knowledge," vol. I. p. 600 "Barley is in full ear all over the Holy Land in the Beginning of April, and about the middle of the same month it begins to turn yellow." Now, if this case be received as strictly correct, the 5th of April is too early for the communion, and that it is correct would appear from the "Bible Text Book," p. 206; for the "Barley harvest" is there placed in April, and "wheat harvest beginning." Therefore in "The Morning Watch," which I sent you we have given "Wednesday evening the 3d of May" for the time of the communion season. But being open to conviction, if you can throw any more light on the subject it will be thankfully received. The only difficulty that I can, at present see, is that the harvest is two months earlier in the Jordan Valley than in Lebanon. If, therefore, we are governed by the harvest in the Jordan Valley, the communion season would be in June; but if we are governed by the harvest at Jerusalem, the place where the Passover was celebrated, I am unable to see how I can be mistaken in placing the 14th of the first month on the 4th day of May, and the communion season Wednesday evening the 3d of May.

Br. Campbell is correct in beginning the 2,300 in B.C. 426, and it is true that if we take 426 from 2,300, we have 1874, but instead of "substracting one year for the bridge," as he calls it, he should have added one which gives 1875 for the correct time.

Charlestown, Mass., March 29, 1871.

Note by the Editor.

See our note to Br. Bishop's article on the outside of this paper: it was in type before we received the above letter. We are still inclined to the 5th of April, this year, for the Passover. It is a little remarkable that Br. Thurman has fixed on the 6th of April as the time it was instituted. It shows, in those days, the Barley harvest was forward enough for the first-fruits early in April.

FROM ELD. E. B. TAFT.

Br. Storrs: Enclosed please find $2, in currency, and forward to my address (at Santa Rosa, Sonoma Co., Cal.,) a supply of the following "Campaign Documents." . . . I have made this selection thinking it the best that I can do with the little means that I can use in this way.

Santa Rosa is a new field, and what I have learned from there, I go expecting to meet one of the lions in his den; but I go in weakness, and try to have a little of the spirit of David; that is, knowing full well that I am one of the weakest of His instrumentalities, but that God's word, attended with the Spirit, will prevail.

I have just returned from a short visit in a neighborhood about twenty miles above here, on the river; and I assure you that I was made to rejoice in the glorious work there going on. That you may the better understand the work, I will give a brief history of it.

About eight or nine months ago, Sister Shafer made a visit to some friends in the neighborhood, and had prefaced her visit by sending a few of our "Campaign Documents" before her. The tracts, it seems, had laid for some weeks without perusal: finally, one of our good sisters accidentally took up the tract "Soul Saved or Lost." She seemed to be captivated at once by its heading, and commenced to read it. She had read but a few pages before she had to call her husband to feast upon the glorious truths which this seeming new light presented. When they had carefully perused this tract, they had to read others; and as they proceeded they were made to feel like some of old; that is, that they had found a great light; and following out the spirit by which those of old were prompted, they had to communicate the good news to their beloved brethren in the Lord.

From this time the battle commenced. Soon the best faculty of the denomination was brought in requisition, and for a time the flame that had been kindled seemed to be in danger of being extinguished; but now it looms more brilliant than ever. There are at least eight or ten that now see very clearly much of the true light, and many others are searching their Bibles to see if these things be so.

I regret much that my health does not permit me to preach to them, as there are many who have expressed a desire to have me do so; but I have known them to love them, as I found my Master's spirit with them; and they have my earnest prayers for His richest blessings upon them. Only be faithful to God, and they need have no fears, as the Master's purposes will be accomplished.

With my best wishes and prayers for our Master's great blessings to rest upon you, I close.

Your brother in Christ.

Rio Vista, Cal., March 25, 1871.

FROM GEO. E. LEE.

Br. Storrs: I am happy to say that the truth is gaining ground in this place, and there are a few that are willing to read and study the word of God for themselves, and listen to a good common-sense argument, when it is thoroughly supported by a plain, "Thus saith the Lord." Although we are told that the same "all" that die in Adam, shall "all be made alive," whether they are "in Christ" or not; yet, it is plain to me that there is an exception; for unless we all get "in Christ," all cannot be made alive. For I read in John vi. 53, that Jesus said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." But some will say that this means eternal life. Yet, as I read it, it is life, without any qualifications whatever. They have neither eternal life, mortal life, miserable life, happy life, or any other life, for they have no life at all. What stronger terms could possibly be used? I can find none. It is true we read of a "resurrection of life," and also a "resurrection of damnation." But the "resurrection from the dead," of which Paul speaks, and which I desire to "attain unto" appears to be the "resurrection of life," and that, too, is eternal life; for all those who are "accounted worthy to obtain that resurrection, cannot die any more." It requires no effort at all to attain unto the "resurrection of damnation;" for, "he that believeth not, is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."—John iii. 18.

What a merciful God is ours! Why should we not always praise him for his goodness? Let us be his servants; let us trust in him; let us rejoice and be glad, for "the Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants, and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate."—Psa. xxxiv. 22. And when once redeemed and delivered from the pit, or bondage of corruption; death has no further claim upon its victims. The subjects of death are "bought with a price;" and when, after the price has been paid, and the subjects are delivered up into the hands of Him who has purchased them with a great price, even the price of his own blood, they are fully redeemed; and the law of death has no more to do with them. For they are "raised incorruptible,"—they were sown "natural bodies," but they are raised "spiritual bodies." They may be sown in "dishonor," but they will be raised in "glory."

Praise the Lord for the glorious hope of immortality! "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

Yours, in the patient waiting for Christ.

Brimfield, Mass., March 28, 1871.

FROM ELD. SAMUEL L. WALTER.

Br. Storrs: I rejoice that our Father has in answer to the prayers of faith restored you to the cause of truth; for which, I say, the Lord be magnified. I felt sure that he would, so that you could give to the household meat in due season, on "the promise and oath of God to Abraham's seed." I do see a glory in it, that "it hath not entered into the heart of man," to see (and also many of God's little ones) "which he has in reserve for them that love him." I pray that we may all bow to God's word, and pray, "give me understanding according to thy word."

I left home about the second Wednesday in this year, and after travelling four weeks through rain and cold, arrived at Hickory Hill, Marion County; preached to the people there and at other places. The seed sown last year had sprung up, and I found strong opposers established in the faith, and boldly contending for the faith. Next I went to Keenville. The brethren are all alive; and houses open to give me a hearty welcome. I have not had any meeting with them. A storm prevailed so that they could not come out. I expect to hold meeting to-morrow, if all is well. I have labored in Wayne and Jefferson, I believe with success; a good number received the word with joy: the Lord's name be praised. To him belongs all the glory.

I came to this place one week ago to-day; and have preached eight times, and had good hearing. The church house was full. I found Br. J. Lee a bold opposer of the dogma of inherent immortality; he preached against it, talked against it everywhere he went. I believe he has advanced and sees no Life out of Christ. I got one new subscriber for the Herald, and sold some books. May the Lord's blessing rest upon you and all the saints scattered abroad.

Yours, in hope of life in the coming age.

Xenia, Ills., March 25, 1871.

FROM LOUISA J. BEACH.

Br. Storrs: When I parted from the friends last Aug., at Springfield, I little thought so long time would elapse before I should pen a few lines for the Herald of Life. There have been many changes with us all, no doubt, since that time, and I have often felt thankful that we could not see what the future had reserved for us in this life.

Immediately on my return home from camp-meeting, my husband was taken sick, and was confined to his bed for four months, and for some time before was nearly as helpless as a child. Not until very recently has he been able to walk out of doors, and he is still feeble, both in body and mind, and unable to have any care or interest whatever in business matters.

With heartfelt gratitude I would acknowledge that goodness and mercy of the Lord to me during all these months of watching, anxiety and trial. Because he is faithful and has made his grace sufficient, I have been kept and sustained until the present time. Truly it is blessed to trust in the Lord; and those that wait upon him shall renew their strength.

I have looked for the weekly visits of the Herald with interest; although many a time during the fall I could only look it over, and read the familiar names—possibly some of the shorter articles.

I shared with the rest of the church the deep anxiety for the recovery of our dear Editor, and my mind often wandered from my husband's sick room to that of his, and my heart was uplifted to the hearer of prayer in his behalf. I thank God that the united cry of his people, being in harmony with his will, has been answered. May it be for the glory of his name.

How much I would like to meet with some of our brethren and sisters the coming week to observe the memorial feast; but it cannot be. May the Lord meet and bless them, and the many scattered ones who love Him. Soon the saints will all be gathered to celebrate the marriage supper of the Lamb, and our blessed Master himself will serve them. I expect to meet there all the faithful, and the loved of earth, from whom we have been separated here. The Lord speed the day.

Remember in your prayers the Lord's tried and afflicted ones, that they may not be weary of his correction, but may come forth like gold from the furnace.

Your Sister, hoping for redemption.

New Britain, Conn., March 31, 1871.

FROM JOEL A. SIMONDS.

Br. Storrs: Your "Response to Difficulties" is good. I was very glad to see it. It seems that those who oppose the age to come lose sight of every thing but the Seed of Abraham. They fail to see the end of the promise, "That all the nations of the earth shall be blessed." That the seed of Abraham is only the instrumentality by which to secure that end. I am glad to learn that you are soon to take up the subject of "The promise and oath of God to Abraham." This is indeed the basis of the hope of the gospel, and comprehends the whole plan of redemption. I am also glad that you said what you did on "The oath of David," or the "Priesthood of Christ." I think you are right on that subject, unmistakably.

I am glad that the kingdom, of which the gospel is the good tidings, is occupying a more prominent place in your paper than heretofore.

The thing to be accomplished by the gospel is of importance, as well as the instrumentality by which it is to be secured.

I am glad that you are able to be at your post again.

Yours, in hope.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 14, 1871.

FROM A. R. TOMPKINS.

Br. Storrs: I am striving to live for an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God's dear Son, when he shall come in his glory to be admired in all that love his appearing. I am alone, having none to sympathize with in the blessed doctrines taught in the Herald of Life. I love the Bible, for it teaches the doctrine of life in or through the Life-giver only. I thank God for the gift of eternal life through his dear Son, and that there is life in no other way, blessed be his holy name. I find that the bitterest feeling and opposition is felt toward the above and kindred doctrines, and that every effort is made to cast the truth to the ground, and to hide the light of life: but, I thank God that however hard they may appear, they cannot take from us the blessed hope of life and immortality through our Lord Jesus Christ.

I love to read the letters of the dear brethren and sisters in the Lord. Oh, how it cheers and lifts me up; it makes me feel strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, to know I am not alone in the like precious faith. I feel, sometimes, that I should be all alone in this world, if I could not hear from the dear brethren and sisters in the Lord. But I have the word of life, and the Herald, with the favor of the great God, to lead me in the high way to life; and I am rejoicing. Praise the Lord.

Yours, in the blessed hope.

Scipio, Mich., March, 1871.

James J. Wyatt, Wilmington, Del., writes: I have found your paper to be of great benefit to me. I am glad to say that the Lord led me to see my error, in thinking that I had an immortal soul. I feel very free since I embraced this glorious truth of "Life only through Jesus Christ." I do pray that the Lord will bless you in your old age; and be your comfort and stay.

Yours, in hope of immortality through Christ.

The Perishing Soul, according to Scripture; with reference also to Ancient Jewish Belief, and the Christian Writings of the first Two Centuries. By J. M. Denniston, M. A., Author of "Ancient Landmarks," etc. London: F. Bowyer Kitto.

The great discussion goes on! May it continue until truth is established upon her righteous and splendid throne, and falsehood is destroyed forever! The book before us will hasten the issue we desire. It is a calm, thoughtful, logical, and devout examination of the question that is now stirring the entire Church. A Christian, a scholar, a thinker, Mr. Denniston brings to his self-imposed task every necessary qualification, and the result is a book of exceeding value. There is a wonderful quietness about his style which reveals the strength of the man. Let this volume find large audience.

It is at once curious and suggestive to observe how independent thinkers have come into this field from different points, and yet all have reached the same conclusion, that man is only mortal, and that immortality is the pure gift of God in Christ. Constable, Denniston, Griffith, Ker, Maude, Minton, Stratford, Taunton, White, have all reached the same conclusion, and each of them has most undoubtedly thought out the subject for himself with his Bible open before him. Surely the significance of this fact deserves notice. Mr. Denniston's fifth letter concludes thus—a conclusion fully justified by the previous criticisms: "If there be, then, in all the New Testament any word of which the meaning is more distinctly fixed than the word apollumi—whether by ancient and constant usage;—by great variety of verbal connection;—or by illustrations both numerous and decisive, I must confess my ignorance of it. Nor can I recall any other word expressive of an important revealed truth, with as much evidence in favor of one clear, definite sense. You will not wonder, then, if, out of simple loyalty to my Master, I feel absolutely incapable of resisting such evidence. You may not even wonder, if I add that I can well suppose the Master marvelling, as of old, at the slowness of his disciples now to believe what he and his apostles so plainly taught; and instead of that, attributing to him a doctrine as foreign from his teaching as it is fearful in theirs;—a doctrine which, if unscriptural, gives a view radically and dangerously false of the character and government of God."—Editor of The Rainbow.

The Human Feet, their Dress and Care, showing their natural, perfect shape and construction; their present deformed condition; and how flat feet, distorted toes, and other defects are to be prevented or corrected, with direction for dressing them elegantly, yet comfortably, and hints upon various matters relating to the whole subject, with illustrations. 12mo. 202 pp. Price $1.25.

We have received from S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York, the above named work. The object of this book is to teach the reader how to treat and dress the feet, that there may be no more corns, bunions, aches or pains. It is possible to have sound feet on sound bodies, and this work shows how. Written in a plain, practical manner, with physiological and mechanical illustrations, it is at once scientific, philosophical and instructive.

APPOINTMENTS.

Middletown, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.

West Meriden, Sunday, April 30.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.

Wolcottville, Conn., Sunday, April 9.

Wm. Stuart.

Providence, R. I., Sundays, April 9 and 16.

Charlestown, Mass., Sundays, April 23 and 30. Geo. W. Brown.

Hartford, Conn., (Talcott & Post's Hall), Sunday, April 9.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) April 23.

Springfield, Mass., May 14.

Meriden, Conn., May 21.

W. S. Campbell.

West Meriden, Conn., Sunday, April 9.

Bristol, Conn., Sunday, April 16.

New Britain, Conn., Sunday, April 23.

Springfield, Mass., Sundays, April 30, and May 7.

New York, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, May 21. W. N. Pile.

Lewiston, Me., Sunday, April 16.

Wm. H. Doughty.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Susan E. Rodan (pays to end of vol. viii.,) Mrs. M. Perkins, John H. Taylor, J. Richard Brown, A, R. Tompkins (pays to Aug. 16,) J, D. Burkebile, David Shaler, George Simpson, Wm. Becker, John Turpie, Charles Webb.

Two dollars each from—Mrs. G. K. Armstrong, M. Goldthwait, Wm. Roberts, Burr C. Denny, Daniel Wells.

Various sums—S. F. Bradley, $1 25; Lizzie P. Bush, 50 cents; Reuben R. Hart, Mortimer D. Hart, John B. Hart, Wilbur A. Hart, $5 each on pledges.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Eld. B. Matthias, $1.

Wilbur A. Hart, $1.

FOR OUR CAMP-MEETING IN 1871.

H. Rockwell, $1.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Forester Kelley, book and tracts; S. F, Bradley, Stewart Carlisle, Daniel Hawks, Jacob Grim, Wesley Sill, Emeline Wood, D. B. Salter, S. L. Walter (three parcels), George E. Lee, Henry Lees, Joshua Roberts (tracts and papers—all we could spare), Le Roy Wait, Geo. Simpson, A. R. Tompkins, E. A. Graves, Eld. E. B. Taft (three parcels), Wilbur A. Hart, H. A. Arnold, Mrs. Lyman F. Thorpe, Abner Barnard.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Eld. Samuel L. Walter.—By mistake the four books you sent for were directed to Bunker Hill, Ill. The error was not discovered till too late to remedy. Shall we send the books a second time? and if so, where?

A Blessing for Me.

A blessing for me, my Father,
A blessing for me to-day;
See, lowly I kneel at Thy footstool,
Oh, send me not empty away.

In the skies that are bending above me,
In the flowers beneath my feet,
I am ever receiving Thy gifts of love,
And ever am finding them sweet.

But a blessing for me, my Father,
That shall fall on my soul like dew,
That gems with its crystalline touch of light,
Alike on the rose and the rue.

On the sweet and the bitter within me,
On the ache, and the pain, and the smart,
As well as upon my joy and delight,
Brood Thou with Thy loving heart.

Oh, give me the will to labor,
And give me the hand to win,
To Thy mercy seat, the wanderers,
Who are lost in the night of sin.

Oh, give me the grace to find the lambs,
And bring them into the fold,
And tell them of Him, the Shepherd,
Who loved them in days of old!

Who loved! Who is ever loving,
Who tenderly waits to bless,
And to pour the balm of forgiveness
On the wounds of their distress.

A blessing for me, my Father,
I bow at Thy feet to-day;
I hold my hands to Thy fullness,
Oh, send me not empty away!

—Selected.

[Continued from March 29.]

The Atonement.—A Review.

BY J. C. DAY.

Eternal life is declared in the plainest terms to be in, by, and through Jesus Christ. That they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Unto him that washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto our God and his Father, be glory. God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation; whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. The riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in you the hope of glory. God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him. Who, of God, is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. The bread of God is he which giveth life unto the world. I am that bread of life. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me shall live by me. If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life. I am the way, the truth, and the life. I am the resurrection and the life. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. That which was from the beginning, which we have seen with our eyes, and our hands have handled of the word of life: for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us. We are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life.—John vi. 33, 48, 51, 57; and vii. 37; and xi. 25; and xiv. 6; Rom. vi. 23; 1 Cor. i. 30; and xv. 19; Eph. i. 14; Col. i. 27; and iii. 4; 1 Thess. v. 9, 10; 2 Thess. ii. 13–17; 2 Tim. ii. 10; 1 John, i. 1, 2; and iv. 9; and v. 20; Rev. i. 5, 6; and xxi. 6.

We are directed to ask for all things, and to render thanks for all things, in the name of Christ. Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it. I have chosen you, that whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he shall give it you. Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all. I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Unto him be glory in the church by Jesus Christ, throughout all ages, world without end.—John xiv. 13, 14; 15, 16; and xvi. 23, 24, 26; Rom. i. 8; and vii. 25; Eph. iii. 21; and v. 20; Col. ii. 17.

To ask in the name of Christ, can mean nothing less than to pray that blessings may be granted for his sake, or out of respect to his merit. To give thanks in the name of Christ is to thank God for blessings received on his account. To give thanks by or through Christ is to deliver our tribute into his hands, to be presented to the Father as the ancient priests used to present the thank-offerings and other gifts and sacrifices of the people.

My last proposition is, that Christ received for his filial obedience all the blessings ever destined to reach the human family. To exhibit a connected view of this interesting subject, it will be necessary to go back to the essential idea of Sonship. Wherever the relation, character and circumstances of a father and son are perfect, there are three ideas essentially involved in sonship: generation, filial obedience, and inheritance. If the last two are united without the first, as in the case of adoption, the relation is imperfect. These three parts go in to constitute the Sonship of Christ. The first is beyond dispute. Luke i. 35. In respect to the second, as obedience was a vital part of the character of the priest, and as his appointment to that office was really an appointment to a course of filial obedience, we should expect to have some mention of it in the Divine record. No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a High Priest, but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee: as he saith also in another place, Thou art a Priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec. Heb. v. 4–6.

Accordingly, when he was publicly inducted into the priest's office, according to the Mosaic forms, at the moment of receiving the Divine unction, which constituted him a priest, he was named, from heaven, the Son of God; beloved, because obedient. Matt. iii. 17. The very name involved the idea of obedience. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered. Heb. v. 8.

As to the third, it needs nothing more to support it than a single sentence in St. Paul's sermon at Antioch in Pisidia. The promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Acts xiii. 32, 33. If we turn back to the second Psalm, we shall find these words to be the public acknowledgment of God, made at the sepulchre, when he raised the sleeping Saviour from the dead. Again: the same is brought to view by the apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews: Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they; for unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? Heb. i. 4, 5. And in the Epistles to the Philippians, it is affirmed again, He humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross: wherefore, God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name. Phil. ii. 8, 9. Again: the same thing is indicated in the angel's message to Mary, the mother of the precious Christ: He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. Luke i. 32. 'Accordingly, when his glorified state was shadowed forth in that miniature exhibition upon Mount Tabor, where God had decked him in the robes prepared for the heir of all things, the voice again pronounced, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Matt. xvii. 5." And one of the witnesses tells us, "We beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father." John i. 14, compared with 2 Pet. i. 16–19. He is called the first-born from the dead, and the first-begotten of the dead; and is said to have been declared the Son of God with power, by the resurrection. Rom. i. 14; Col. i. 18; Rev. i. 5.

It is said, also, in regard to those who are to be joint heirs with him, and who are to inherit in consequence of his Sonship and resurrection, that they are begotten again unto a lively hope, or hope of living again, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled. 1 Pet. i. 3, 4. Accordingly, all the promises which are offered to the world, and to believers, expressly including those of the Spirit and of the inheritance, were really made to Christ, and reach us as the oil on Aaron's head the skirts of his garments. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ.

South Ashburnham, Mass., March 5, 1871.

"That Great City."

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

Is Paris Babylon? Look at it now. A reign of terror. The insurgents holding the city. The scenes of '93 to '98 to be re-enacted. The blood of the best and most patriotic citizens flowing freely, and who can tell what the end will be? The Germans have withdrawn; who shall control the wand of revolution? Who allay the turbulent spirit of civil war? The government elected by the people to establish a permanent and national administration set at defiance. The army, on which the Assembly relied, gone over to the mob! Napoleon's emissaries all through the land. The Orleanists waiting for the voice of the people. The "Reds" crying for liberty (license); anarchy and confusion wherever they prevail. With them political freedom signifies the right to do as they please; to murder, burn, pillage and make havoc of every good. The foundations of society tremble. The republican fabric totters: confusion prevails. Lawless riot is rampant: Babel is there. The French have been under the superstition of the Papist priests long, long: till now, let loose, in the fiery wrath of insurrection and incendiaism; they bring retributionary trouble upon the system of religion and government under which they have been oppressed. Can they have peace? Not till they have taken the "double" portion. Not till the cup is drunk to the dregs.

We looked for the antagonism of parties; for civil war. The "devils" inhabit the city. The imps spread over the whole land. The "unclean and hateful" eagles screech for Cæsar. The "foul spirits" of sedition breathe ruin and death to the best purposes and labors of the good and the true.

Whether the French capital is the Babylon of Rev. xviii. (so far as a literal city is concerned) there are very striking resemblances, and she is the first great capital in the Roman world; and still further, the French are the first great power of the Papacy hitherto. Rome was declared the second city of the French Empire in 1808.

She must now expiate her great national and political sins, which are Catholic, as well, by a political death. Her national life pays the forfeit of her national blasphemies, God-defying arrogance. "Give her the cup." Let her drink, "for she hath drunk the blood of the saints."

Boston, Mass., March 21, 1871.

Note to Eld. J. B. Cook.

BY WILLIAM N. PILE.

Your note was received in due time, per Herald of Life. "I forbear to reply beyond a note," as you have addressed me in that form.

1. The promise and oath of God to "bless the nations" by "the seed" (not seeds) is applied by Paul to this dispensation, (Gal. iii. 6–9). The blessing is either salvation or the publication of its news. If it is the first, then universal salvation (all nations, if this term is used in the absolute sense) is true. If the latter, then as the Scriptures, which contain the news, have been translated into "earth's countless dialects," and all nations have them in their own language, the promise is fulfilled and the "end" is at hand. If it is not yet perfectly fulfilled, we are not so near the end as we have supposed, for "this gospel of the kingdom (hence before, not after the establishment of it) shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; then shall the end come."—Matt. xxiv. 14.

Provision is made for those individuals who have not been reached by the news, by Paul in Rom. ii. 12–15. If this provision is not sufficient then the dead among them must live again to mortality and probation. This I do not believe, but I think should logically be driven there by accepting your view.

The "rest that remains" is an eternal one as we have shown.

I believe that Christ will reign as "the governor of God's people Israel;" but "they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God," (Rom. ix. 8), hence not the "Israel of God."

2. If I have "utterly failed to see the points between us," my failure to "meet them" (in your estimation) must be charged to my obtuseness! The mere aggregation of texts from different parts of the Bible amount to little or nothing. The texts I accept but not your use of them. If I were to accept your use of them all, I think they would refute themselves, for, taken out of their connexions and true explanation they are necessarily antagonistic.

Psa. cx. is indeed a blessed portion of God's word, yet it certainly teaches the "withdrawal" of Adoni at the end of this age, in order to the destruction of his living enemies by Jehovah. Rev. xi. 15–18 (which you do not notice) teaches the same.

If Jehovah needs not to "drink of the brook" because of his immortal vigor, Christ has as little need for he is equally immortal and vigorous! Nothing is gained therefore by this transfer. The figure is a human one for human capacity, designed to show that the work shall be prosecuted to its final end without hindrance.

I accept your exhortation, which I also reciprocate.

If God can "see the harmony" of your views of the future, I confess it is more than I can do.

I do not believe that "Zion has been removed." It is no more improper to speak of Zion "above" as an antitype, than of the "tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man."

The same course of reasoning which you suppose involves me in this absurdity equally involves you, when you speak of the "tabernacle above."

The "King of Salem" resigns the "kingdom of grace" that he may enter upon the "kingdom of glory."

His Capital will then be removed from heaven to the new earth.

I have been up (by faith) into that "mount of revealed glory" (the transfiguration scene) which you speak of, and have realized that it was "good" to be there; but I think it will be better without mortality than with it. The three disciples were only "three witnesses" for your edification and mine, Br. C.

I never knew a man by gazing at a beautiful picture to become part of the picture he was contemplating. Neither were the disciples there as representatives of mortals in the kingdom, but as witnesses to the scene, that we might know of its occurrence.

Christ, Moses and Elijah were alone representatives, hence no mortal will enter the kingdom. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Amen.

Springfield, March 27, 1871.

From L. H. Rowe.

Br. Storrs: My object in writing at this time is to review a portion of Elder C. H. Sweet's letter in relation to the Second Advent Church in this city. Said letter was published in the "Crisis" of Feb. 15. He says:

"I wish to make the following brief statement of facts in relation to the church here. The time for which the church had leased Graffam's Hall, on Bates street having expired, they rented Central Hall, on Main street, where they are now worshipping. Some five or six believers in the non-resurrection of the wicked have since commenced holding meetings in Graffam's Hall, their avowed object being to divide and destroy the church. They have thus far met with but poor success, and everything seems to indicate that their efforts will prove a complete failure. They have among them but two persons who ever had any connection with the church, and one of them was expelled some time ago."

Br. Sweet made these statements as represented to him by the "church." Now, I desire to make a "statement of facts," as they exist, in regard to the matter. When the "church" left Graffam's Hall, the lease had not expired, as he affirms; and instead of "five or six believers in the non-resurrection of the wicked," there are twelve or more of said believers who have continued to hold meetings in said hall (where they had formerly worshipped in connection with the rest of the Lord's children), since it was vacated by the "church." Br. Sweet affirms that it is their avowed object "to divide and destroy the church," which is a misrepresentation, for it has ever been our prayer that the good Lord would bless them with success in their efforts to save sinners, just so far as they acted in harmony with the will of God; and as regards the "complete failure" of our efforts to do good, I would say, we are having some excellent meetings; and if the Lord be with us, who can be against us? But if He is not with us, surely all our labors will come to nought. Let the Lord judge in the matter, and not man. It is true that only two persons among us ever had their names on the church book; but, thank God, they are in the Lamb's Book of Life: and, according to Bible order, they still belong to the church, although one of them has been illegally expelled, as I understand it.

I do not make these statements to injure any of the brethren here, nor to open wider the breach that has been made. But I desire that the truth may be known in the matter; and my prayer to God is, that all difficulties may be speedily adjusted between us, and the spirit of harmony and union once more prevail in our midst. Jesus is soon to be revealed from heaven; the saints of God will soon be gathered, and shall we be found laboring together for the Master, in gathering in the gleanings of the harvest, or shall we be found scattering abroad? May the Spirit of the living God unite us, and help us all to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. Amen.

Yours, waiting for Life.

Lewiston, Me., March, 1871.

Note by the Editor.

We have given place somewhat reluctantly to the foregoing statement. It is not worth while for those who profess to belong to Christ to be found bearing false witness against each other. In the case referred to above, we take no part, as we have no knowledge of either of the parties: but we do know, it is not an uncommon thing for our opposers to represent "non-resurrectionists," as they call us, as attempting to "divide the church," when in fact the fault is, at least, as much their own as ours, by refusing to let us speak or preach in their places of worship. Let there be freedom and toleration on both sides; and let all do what they do in the spirit of love and good will. "In your patience possess ye your souls," said the blessed Jesus. Violence in opposition, on any side of a question, is unbecoming Christians; and misrepresentation altogether unjustifiable. Let it cease.

Children's Department.

"Does God Love Beggars?"

An old man knocked with his staff on a court-yard gate. Within the house, a happy family were clustered about a well-spread breakfast-table. The gate had been locked to keep intruders out.

A little girl, with a face as fair as an apple-blossom, looked up on hearing the knock, and said:

"There he is again—the old beggar man. He comes every Monday morning, and you've never given him a crumb all winter. Do now; he looks so pinched and hungry! May I give him a cup of coffee? It is my birthday; please let me?"

"No, no, Susie! If we give beggars coffee, we shall have a crowd around our gate every morning."

"But do, mamma, let Susie, just this once," asked little voices from all sides of the table.

"Oh you are all beggars!" exclaimed the happy father. "Wife, we will risk the crowd, and let Susie give the coffee."

The mother smiled permission. The man still waited at the gate. He could see the breakfast-table quite plainly, and no head had been shaken to bid him go on his way. Susie waited for the cup, and even begged an extra lump of sugar wherewith to make more sweet the coffee.

Oh, how happy the delicious draught made the "beggar-man!" Susie could see the wrinkles fade from his face, and smiles come in their places.

"It's many a weary morning," he said, "since I've tasted coffee. Tell your mother I thank her;" and, having caught up the last drop of sweetness, the old man went his way.

The family group separated, and were soon occupied with their various interests. At mid-day, tired with play, wearied of his horses, his carts, and his toys, little pet Arthur stole up to his mother, and said, "Kiss me, mamma." The kiss was given. Arthur turned again to his toys; but he was soon at his mother's side. "Kiss me another time," he said. The child received kiss number two; but it was not many minutes before he returned and with plaintive tone begged, "Do love me, mamma, and kiss me twenty times."

I am certain that the score of kisses were not counted by Arthur nor by his mother, as the lady gathered the boy in her arms, and looked anxiously in his face to learn if he were ill.

Arthur lay quiet for some moments, and sleep seemed creeping in at his eyes; when suddenly he darted up from his place of rest, and with his eyes of blue fixed on his mother's face he asked, "Mamma, you don't love beggars, do you?"

"I love you, Arthur."

"But old men and women with dirty faces, I mean, and ragged boys and girls who keep knocking at the door."

"No, Arthur; I am afraid I don't love them."

"Mamma, does God love beggars?"

"He loves all the creatures that he has made."

"But beggars, I mean—folks who keep teasing and teasing for things He don't want to give them?"

"I should think not."

"But I guess He does, mamma. I guess God loves beggars; for papa asks God every morning for just the same things, and every single night I beg God to keep me while I go to sleep, and Susie and Bennie and Mary ask Him just the same. We are all beggars, and I think God loves us; for he always takes care of us; and he never locks up his big court-yard gate; for, if he did, he would not hear us."—Child at Home.

"Who Took the Knife?"

"Somebody has my knife, teacher; I left it on my desk," said little Harry Bell.

So I tried to find Harry's knife for him. I asked Frank and Willy and John, and ever so many little boys if they had seen the lost knife. They all shook their heads; no one had seen it. I had reason to believe that the knife had not lost itself; and I feared it had got into some little boy's pocket where it did not belong. But how should I get it out? I could not see into their pockets, and I could not search them; so I told the boys that God knew where the knife was hidden, and he was then looking into every little boy's pocket.

Still no one produced the missing knife. I told them of a day that was coming when all naughty deeds would be punished, and lost things be found: when God and all the people in the world would know who did all the wicked things; then, if not before, we should know who took the knife.

A little boy who was standing near me crept up closer, and pulling at my sleeve, said with an almost frightened look—

"Do you know how long it will be till then?"

"Till when, Johnnie?" I said.

"Why, till that day when God will tell everybody who stole the knife. Will it be a great while?"

"I don't know, John; but why?"

"'Cause—'cause," said Johnnie, crying, "I took it; and I wish I hadn't. I don't want God to punish me and tell everybody I was so naughty."

"He will not punish you," I said, "if you are really sorry and ask him to forgive you; and then he will not tell everybody; for he says, 'Your sins I will remember no more.'"—Child at Home.

An Aimless Life.

"I committed one fatal error in my youth, and dearly have I abided it. I started in life without an object, even without an ambition. My temperament disposed me to ease, and to the full I indulged the disposition. I said to myself, 'I have all that I see others contending for: why should I struggle?' I knew not the curse that lights on those who have never to struggle for any thing. Had I created for myself a definite pursuit—literary, scientific, artistic, social, political, no matter what, so there was something to labor for and to overcome—I might have been happy. I feel this now—too late! The power is gone. Habits have become chains. Through all the profitless years gone by, I seek vainly for something to remember with pride or even to dwell on with satisfaction. I have thrown away a life. I feel, sometimes, as if there was nothing remaining to me worth living for. I am an unhappy man."—"Beyond the Breakers," by Robert Dale Owen.

Reverence for Age.

Reverence is always due to aged people. God, nature, and a proper education say to the young, reverence old age. Gray hairs are a crown of glory when found in the way of righteousness.

I love the youth who reverence the aged always, and whoever they are. O youth revere thy aged friend; respect those silver locks so whitened by the toiling hardships of many long years.

Carry thyself kindly and reverently to the infirm and old, tottering onward to the tomb in bereaved loneliness, and though for it thou be singular from the thousands of youths about thee, badly trained on this point, God shall bless thee for it.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

Wm. H. Spencer, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	3 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "
21.	Life and Death Real,	2 "
22.	Man's Destiny; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	The Life Views,	2 "
24.	How Readest Thou?	2 "
25.	What a Farmer has to Say: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, The Wrath of God: What Is It?	2 "
26.	Soul Survivance in Death: Not a Doctrine of the Bible,	2 "
27.	The Kingdom of God,	2 "
28.	The Destiny of the Wicked,	2 "
29.	The Dead are Dead,	2 "
30.	Inherent Immortality,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

George Storrs, Box 4,658, New York.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 27.
WHOLE NUMBER 361.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THINGS FOR CONSIDERATION.

IT is no little consolation to the Christian, amid the sorrows of bleeding nations, the rude shocks of hostile armies, and the clashing ambitions of restless, insatiable men, to know that "The Lord is high above all nations." "Our God is in the heavens, he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." "He is the governor among the nations," and is "Mightier than the noise of many waters;" and has his own eternal, immutable counsels and plans, which he will assuredly carry out. It is therefore an element of security and peace, in the midst of what is otherwise painful uncertainty and distracting tumult, when men's hearts are everywhere "failing them for fear and for expectation of those things which are coming on the earth," wondering whereunto the present crisis will grow, to know that all the dreadful energy of man shall only fulfil his everlasting purposes, who has decreed that the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and though "the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing," yet "the Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought, he maketh the devices of the people of none effect."

As every great event which is destined to become historical successively occurs, there are always many persons who seek therein a fulfilment of prophecy. The disposition of mind which moves so many to this belief is, I believe, a right one, although from a mistaken estimate or rather perhaps the absence of any clear idea, of the spirit and scope of Holy Scripture, it fails to seize on that aspect of any event which alone really does fulfil an object greater and beyond that for which the event was humanly brought about. Thus we may search the pages of the Bible in vain for the slightest particular allusion to the tremendous social and political changes of 1870 and its time, but such a search if carefully made in dependence on the teachings and guidance of that Spirit, who alone can unfold the things of God, would reveal to us the comprehensive outline of a vast divine plan towards the completion of which, it is true, these changes are direct steps. It has occurred to me that we may profitably direct our attention to a few considerations arising from the part of this grand prophetic outline contained in the vision of Nebuchadnezzar's image, as recorded in the book of the prophet Daniel.

The head of gold has long passed away with the times of Nebuchadnezzar himself, and other metals descending in the scale of value, such as silver and brass, have in turn successively symbolized the character of the governmental energy of man; even iron, pure and simple, is no more the symbol of power in any European country, its last representatives, Russia, Turkey, France, having yielded to an admixture of more or less of the clay element either in the form of "constitutionalism" or undisguised democracy, and we have reached the period of time when the iron and the clay are everywhere mingling within the boundaries of the ancient Roman empire. The power and extent of the monarchies have degenerated, while those of "the peoples"—(see Paris evening papers of September 5th, 1870)—the clay of the vision, are spreading both in area and intensity. The "Daily News," a European paper, one of the most enlightened and moderate of all Liberal organs speaking of the war, in its issue of September 10th, says:

"We shall never prevent its commencement till we have brought about 'the federation of the world.' Is it too early to dream of this result? The kings have failed: let us try the people. Dynastic alliances are worthless: let us seek an alliance of nations. Diplomacy has ended in confusion: let us pledge the populations to peace."

Here we have the clay very prominent indeed, under the titles of "the world," "the people," "nations," and "the populations," and this element is proposed as a substitute for "the kings," "dynastic alliances," and "diplomacy."

Far be it from me to assert that the form of government to be abolished is preferable to that proposed in its place. The particular form of government best fitted for mankind, or for mankind under differing circumstances, is a question we are not required to discuss here; we are only comparing the signs of the times with the prophetic outline. But we may remark, that though "the kings" have lamentably failed to govern without war, and bring about a peaceful union of the nations of this earth, we have no reason to suppose that "the people" will be more successful; on the contrary, the whole tenor of prophetic Scripture leads us to expect that "wars and rumors of wars" will characterize the governments of this world, down to the great and bitter end of the battle of Armageddon itself. Do republics eliminate human passions? Does the American war sanction this idea, to say nothing of the various wars of the Spanish American republics? We shall not have "abundance of peace" until his days, who "shall have dominion from sea to sea," before whom "they that dwell in the wilderness shall bow," and whose "enemies shall lick the dust;" before whom "all kings shall fall down," and whom "all nations shall serve;" who "shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper," "and precious shall their blood be in his sight."

But to return.

Do we seek for indications of the tendency alluded to, then we have them in the disastrous attempt, and speedy failure, some few years back, to establish monarchical government in Mexico, the enthusiastic reception and declaration of the new republic in France, the difficulty of the persistent efforts of Spain to find a king, which country, probably, will embrace a republican government at no distant period; do not all these facts, like so many straws on the surface of the stream, showing the direction of the current, point to the increasing tendency towards democracy, the rule of the clay mingled with iron? How often do we not read of "the supreme will of the people?"

And what do we read in the vision, followed hard on the establishment of this state of things? What but "that a stone (see Matt. xxi. 44), which was not in hands" (margin), i. e., not a human power, "smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces." History records the fulfilment of the first part of this prophetic vision; we behold before our eyes the development of the latter part, and why shall we not look for the final judgment direct from the hands of God himself? This dispensation is slowly but surely closing in. The ten nations springing from the old Roman Empire (Dan. vii. 7; ii. 41, and Rev. xiii. 1) are gradually shaping themselves. To what other end can the student of Scripture attribute all the great displacement of boundary lines, the total re-formation of countries that the last ten years have witnessed, if not to this? Is there not "a noise and behold a shaking" among the dry bones of long-dismembered nationalities? Verily, God is working, and will work, and who shall hinder? (Job xi. 10.) Now is the time for the saints of the most high God to look up and lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh; "and this, knowing the time, that now it is high time for us to awake out of sleep: for now is salvation nearer to us than when we believed: the night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

There is a wide-spread and growing inclination abroad in the world to deny all this; saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? In days gone by, our forefathers believed in a Divine providence in its fullest sense, and such passages as Ps. xxxiii. 13–19; lxii. 11, 12; lxxv. 6–8; cii. 19, 20; 1 Sam. ii. 7; Job xii. 9, 10, 14–25; xxiii. 10, 14; and many others from the New Testament perhaps more familiar to all, had for them a vitality and vigor seldom known in these days, when their more experienced children believe that "Providence is always on the side of the biggest battalions," to quote a forcible application of the belief attributed to Napoleon I. The world affects to hold that "God hath forgotten: he hideth his face; he will never see it;" and to such language as that of the first eleven verses of the ninety-fourth Psalm, the answer is the contemptuous "Tush! how should God perceive it?" of a generation peculiarly wise in their own conceits. But that it is not so, the children of God know well. The Psalms from which I have already largely quoted, teem with allusions to God's providential dealings with both the earth and man upon it; they delight in pointing out, that though wickedness may flourish for awhile, yet that bounds have been set to it which, whenever they are overstepped, judgment immediately falls; see, for instance, Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36; lxxiii. 3, 16–19. And this book of Psalms was written for all time, and for all men! The inference, therefore, is, that although this is not the world in which right reigns, and where the balance is evenly held, so that even God permits "the basest of men" to be set in places of power (Dan. iv. 17), while the heirs of the kingdom are like their Divine Master, "despised and rejected of men," in accordance with his inscrutable counsels of wisdom and love, yet we are taught to expect God's condemnation of evil, and approbation of right, in a wide and general sense.

Following on these considerations, I remark, that without supposing the Papacy to occupy the position in prophecy that many have assigned to it, no Christian, the basis of whose salvation is justification by faith, will deny that it has ever been, and still is, a gigantic apostacy, and a blasphemous usurper of the rights, honors, and dignities of our blessed Lord. I suppose, however, that the height of its presumption was attained at the late proclamation, as a dogma of the church to be received and held, of the Papal Infallibility. To the simple Christian it will not seem an incredible thing that God should avenge this daring insult to himself; indeed not a few avowed their belief that such would be the case, and half expected that on the day of proclamation the scene described in Acts xii. 20–23, would repeat itself in some form. But God seldom works in this way in these days, he brings his designs to pass in a quieter and more imperceptible manner. And can we fail to see this impending judgment in the downfall of the French empire, the ruin of the "Eldest son of the church," and the utter destruction of the French army, on whose bayonets alone the scarlet monster was propped up? Have we not even now heard the tramp of the march of the soldiers of victor Emmanuel to Rome? Rome, the capital of a monarch who has been formally excommunicated and anathematized! Papal Government is a thing of the past! The Pope himself—where? Have not signal misfortunes of late years befallen those countries of Europe that were the chief supporters of the Papal tiara? The dismemberment of Austria, the overthrow of the Spanish Bourbons, the unification of Italy, involving the flight of hosts of Papal tools, and now the disgrace of France. Where will the Pope establish himself next—in England or in Ireland? And what has brought about this awfully sudden collapse of French power? Is it not the supremacy of German arms? Does not King William right when he acknowledges, in his letters home to his queen, the hand of God in every step of this marvellous campaign? Is not Germany the birthplace and bulwark of that Protestantism which treacherous Englishmen and women are affecting to despise, and so are fast falling away to that system which they who know it best and truly are fast hastening to throw off, playing with the sparks which lighted the fires of Smithfield, and ignorant of its lessons, indulging in the foolish fancy that the Romanism of to-day is not actuated by the same spirit as that of pre-Reformation times, whereas all history, and the celebrated syllabus of Pius IX., testifies that the motto of Rome is "semper eadem;" and may not this war be for Germany the real finish to that Reformation so prematurely interrupted?

The true attitude of the children of God through all these troublous times is to take no part in them, knowing from the Word of God their appointed end. This is not the age in which they are destined to exercise political power, but possessing their souls in peace they know that the time is fast coming when "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever."

Meanwhile let us not be hinderers of God's plans, but "as workers together with him," let us "strive diligently to be found in peace, without spot, and blameless in his sight," "looking for and hastening the coming of the day of God," when will be introduced by the Lord Jesus himself that new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. "So then comfort one another with these words."—Selected.

THE MILLENNIUM, REV. XX. 4.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

BY the request of many, I give, through the columns of the HERALD OF LIFE, the reason why I believe Rev. xx. 4–7 is an interpolation. That there would be some addition to, or subtraction from this prophecy, is evident from the words found in chap. xxii. 18, 19, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." The same is said of those that take from this book. This is not said of any other prophecy in the Bible; which is conclusive evidence that some one would either "add to" or "take from this book."

There is no portion of this book that caused so much controversy as the Millennium of the fourth verse of this chapter, which teaches that the righteous are raised at the commencement of this thousand years, and at the end the wicked will be raised, and the devil, their captain, will marshal them and surround the camp of the saints and the beloved city; and then fire will come down and destroy them. The absurdity of such a thing taking place is sufficient cause for rejecting it as a dream of some designing or fanatical man. No such doctrine is taught or even intimated in the prophets or by Christ and the Apostles; but the reverse. The passages in the prophets and in the New Testament, and the writings of the Apostles, are too numerous even to refer to, that contradict such an absurd doctrine, and therefore I leave it for those who desire to compare Scripture with Scripture, that by so doing they may know the truth on this point.

There are those who would like to know what history says on this subject, and what are the opinions of the learned and critics respecting this Millennium controversy which has agitated the church for 1800 years. The controversy on this point so agitated the church in 1552 that the church of England added to their creed (41 articles) as follows: "They who seek to restore the millenary fable oppose the holy Scriptures and plunge into Jewish fanaticism."

It is generally agreed by historians that this addition to this book was made by Cerinthus, who was cotemporary with St. John, who declared that he was the enemy of truth. St. John entered the bath and discovered that Cerinthus was within, said, "Let us flee lest the bath should fall upon us while this enemy of truth is within." In another instance he calls him the "first born of satan." Gregory, in his church history, says, "Cerinthus was a Jew by birth, and was one of the earliest and most distinguished seceders from the Christian church. His heresy was that Christ descended to earth and entered the body of Jesus, which was crucified; but that Christ had not suffered, but ascended into heaven. He also taught that, after the resurrection, Christ would reign upon the earth with his disciples a thousand years, which would be spent in sensual indulgence. This mixture of Judaism and Oriental philosophy was well calculated to make many converts." Eusebius, in his history, says, "Cerinthus, by means of revelation, which he pretended were written by a great Apostle and also pretended to wonderful things, as if they were shown to him by angels, asserting that after the resurrection there would be an earthly kingdom of Christ, and that men would again inhabit Jerusalem, and would be subject to desires and pleasures for one thousand years." Dionysius says, "It is highly probable that Cerinthus, the same that established the heresy that bears his name, designedly affixed the name of John to his own forgery."

This apostate from the Christian Church succeeded in making disciples to his heresy among Christians; even Barsabas, upon whom lots were cast, Acts i. Eusebius says, he "taught there would be a certain Millennium after the resurrection, and that there would be a corporeal reign of Christ on this very earth; which things he appeared to have imagined; yet he was the cause why most of the ecclesiastical writers (urging the antiquity of the man) were carried away by a similar opinion; as for instance, Iraeneus or any others that adopted such sentiments." Theodoret says of Cerinthus, "He taught that the kingdom of Christ is terrestrial, or that he would reign on this earth; for he dreamed of eating and drinking, and marriage and sacrifices, and festivals to be accomplished at Jerusalem, and to last a thousand years; for, so long, he thought the kingdom of the Lord would endure."—(Lardner's Credibility.)

It is generally supposed to be of Jewish origin; but was introduced into the Christian Church as a doctrine by Papias, bishop of Hierapolis, in Phrygia. Prideaux, in speaking of the time when the Sibylline books or prophecies had their origin, to show that they could not have been written prior to A.D., as most writers contended, he remarks, "Besides the compiler of these prophetic books speaks of Christ reigning here upon earth according to the notion of the Millenarians, which plainly prove them to have been written after the origin of that heresy, which could not have been till after Christ's time, neither had it till the second century, when it was introduced by Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia." (Vol. IV. page 334.)

Here we perceive that Prideaux calls the Millennium doctrine a "heresy." He fully agrees with most writers on this point, that the definite time of the thousand years was fixed by an unwarranted deduction in reference to God's making the world in six days and resting the seventh; and that this world would continue six thousand years and the seventh would be the day of rest. (See Burnet's Sacred Theory, part 3, chap. 5.) Mosheim says, the doctrine had a Jewish origin; and he supposed the Christian doctors received, or, at least, tolerated it because they hoped by it to make the Jews more willing to embrace Christianity.

Dr. Walch says, "that the doctrine is of Jewish origin, and was derived from Jewish opinions." Lightfoot on Rev. xx says, "The thousand is of Jewish origin, and that the Jews applied it to the days of the Messias, which they understood to be a thousand years, and as proof they quoted the Babylon Talmund, which says, among other things, "It is a tradition of the house of Elijah that the righteous ones that he blessed, God shall raise from the dead; they shall no more return to their dust; but those thousand years that the blessed God is to renew the world, he will give them wings as eagles, and they shall flee upon the waters. The text indeed hath not the word thousand; but the marginal glass hath it, and shows how to understand the thousand years. The Jewish writer, R. Eliezer, gives the days of the Messias a thousand years. Now the Jews according to their allegorical view applied these days of Christ thus; That first there should be a resurrection, caused by Messiah, of righteous ones; then he is to conquer Gog and Magog, and then must come the BRAVE world to come that they dreamed of. It is absolute Judaism which they held to be a thousand years of earthly bravery and pompousness." (Vol. 3).

It seems useless to quote further on this subject. I could fill a volume with similar evidence from the most critical writers on this point, whose learning is world-renowned. When we turn to Encyclopedias, on this subject, there is an agreement on this point. I will quote a few on this point under the word "Millennium." "Millennium; a thousand years, generally employed to denote the thousand years during which, according to an ancient tradition in the church, grounded on some doubtful text in the Apocalypse." (Brown's Encyclopedia). (Buck's Theological Dictionary). "Millennium is grounded upon a doubtful text in the Apocalypse." (World's Progress). Henry Dana Ward, after examining the Scriptures, and the origin of the Millennium, comes to the conclusion that the Millennium had but one end, and that was its commencement, which began after the righteous and wicked have been judged at Christ's appearing and kingdom. He says, "No eye can see beyond that kingdom however far-sighted it may be; and my own eye discovers no object this side of that kingdom which is not in the valley of the shadow and under the curse of death. It will be an everlasting kingdom whose sun shall no more go down, to which God shall be an everlasting light existing forever, even for ever and ever."

We see from these few quotations that the doctrine of the thousand years is of Jewish origin, and first promulgated by a backslidden Jew from Christianity, whom John recognized as an "enemy of all truth," and the "first born of satan;" who, by false pretensions, managed to have it introduced into the Christian Church, and was tolerated in the church in hopes that it would be the door through which the Jews might be induced to enter. God's plan is the best, after all. Therefore, I say, let the Millennium begin and never end. Amen.

NEW YORK, March, 1871.

DEFINITE TIME AGAIN.

BY FRED. INGERSOLL.

I see in the HERALD OF LIFE of March 22, a long article on definite time. The writer of that article resorts to the usual definite time method for proof; a method often tried and always found wanting.

It is not my intention to review the article or refute the evidence offered; but briefly to notice a few points, usually held by definite timeists; and pass on to what I esteem of more importance than definite time.

The said writer, referring to former mistakes, conveys the idea that if the former movements had been of God the time would not have been right the first time; because, if it had been, there could have been "no increase of knowledge." Very true: had it been of God, it would have been right the first time, and there would have been no need of any further knowledge on the subject. The said writer admits three legitimate movements; viz., 1843, 1854, 1867, and according to his theory, the Lord was in them all, and yet he says, we were mistaken. Now if God was in these movements, He has made three mistakes, and He may make as many more; but if the people made the movements, they have made three mistakes, and God is not guilty of one blunder. I know our time friends generally justify themselves by saying they must have preached the time errors to have fulfilled the prophecy; there must have been a "tarrying time," and the little book must have been eaten to have been "sweet in the mouth" and "bitter in the belly." But the fulfilling of prophecy is no justification of an act. Christ prophesied that Peter would deny him three times; and Peter did it; but was not justified in so doing: and so of Judas, he fulfilled a prophecy in selling the Lord of glory for thirty pieces of silver, but he was condemned for it. I do not intend to convey the idea that our time friends were as criminal as Peter or Judas, for I believed in the '54 time with all my heart, and I know I was not guilty at all in so doing; but I was blind; and being led by the blind, we both fell into the ditch. With these remarks I pass on to what I esteem of the most importance.

That we are living near the end of this dispensation is quite certain. Now, how will it end? What is the dispensation to come? and who are prepared to enter the new dispensation? These are questions of more vital importance than the precise time.

At the close of the Jewish dispensation the people perished for lack of knowledge of the dispensation next after the Jewish. So at the close of this gospel dispensation the people will perish, even the zealous time people, for lack of knowledge of the next dispensation. Christ did not come as the Jews expected; therefore, they would not receive him. Many Adventists expect a real literal city 375 miles in length, breadth and height; that is, it is a perfect cube, every side of which is 375 miles; for the language is, "The length and breadth, and the height of it are equal," (Rev. xxi. 16), to come down from heaven, and hang in the air, like a great balloon over old Jerusalem a thousand years. And as it hangs there, they expect to ascend up into it to meet the Lord in the aerial city, and to remain there a thousand years, during which the earth will be burned up, and every thing in it; but at the end of the thousand years they expect the city to come down, and they will be let out like persons long pent up in a close place, to possess the remains of the earth, and to lord it over, they know not what. Now, if the Lord should not so come, they would repeat the Judaic cry, "Away with this man, we will not have him to reign over us." Thus they will perish for lack of knowledge, for it is certain that no such city will come down from heaven.

The everlasting city, the one that shall not be plucked up nor thrown down forever, (see Jer. xxxi. 38, 39, 40,) is to be ten miles square, and is to occupy the site of the present Jerusalem: it is to be built by the sons of strangers; in it, is Haggai's new house, the glory of which will eclipse the house built by Solomon. Neither will the Lord come first to the present Jerusalem, but to Egypt; then Sinai, Seir, Paran, Teman, Bozrah, Mount Olives and Zion. See Isa. xix.; Deut. xxxiii. 2; Heb. iii. 3; Isa. lxiii. 1; Zech. xiv. 4; Psa. cxxxii. 13, 14. Here are prophecies unfulfilled, but will be fulfilled as surely as the Lord will ever come. Neither is he coming to destroy every one except the righteous; but to give all people, nations, and languages, an opportunity to serve him. Dan. vii. 14; Isa. ix., and that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles on whom his name is called, (probably the Gentiles out side of the wall, Ephraim and Manasseh, Gen. xlix. 22.) Acts xv. 14–16. Neither is he coming to annihilate the Jews; but to reign over them, (Luke i. 32, 33), and to restore their government, city and kingdom, Isa. i. 25, 26, and Isa. ix. 6, 7. It is a persistent unbelief in these Scriptures, and hundreds of others of like import, that has fed and fanned the flame of opposition to the reign of Christ on earth over the Gentile nations, by those who profess the greatest love for the nearness of his second appearing.

The settled hatred to these great, glorious and soul-inspiring truths has well prepared a people to reject him when he comes, and to cry out against him, as the Jews did, because, according to their creeds, they see no comeliness in him. There are no people in the world more needy of a missionary being sent among adventists, to enlighten them on this subject before it is forever too late. And I hope and trust that God will raise up and send out such laborers as will give meat in due season.

It is not enough to convert people to Christ as a Saviour. Such converts, in view of the proximity of the "Great Day of the Lord," need converting to his reign on earth, over the nations in the flesh, in order to be fit subjects to reign with him.

One great object of the law was, to bring the people to Christ that they might have life. This the Jews did not understand; therefore, they perished for lack of knowledge; and their lack of knowledge was through their unbelief. So the object of the gospel is to take out of the Gentiles a people to be kings and priests (1 Pet. ii. 9,) to reign with Christ over the nations in the flesh; Rev. v. 10; Rom. xv. 12. But many zealous professors do not understand this, through their lack of faith, and are equally as liable to be destroyed.

It is strange that our time friends cannot see that their former numerous mistakes have been caused by their misunderstanding of prophecy: and yet they claim to be the only true expounders of it. But they present us with a wonderful anomaly, unprecedented in the annals of an erring people. With one breath they tell us, "All prophecy is conditional;" and in the next, they tell, by prophecy, the exact time the Lord will come. No wonder they have always been mistaken, and always will be; for after having annihilated the "little book," they attempt to eat it: and then prophecy again, (conditionally) that the Lord will come in 1873, and no mistake this time. Before our friends go into definite time again, I earnestly recommend them to bear in mind, that if prophecy is conditional, it is utterly impossible for them to tell the time of the Lord's coming; or whether he will ever come or not. If it is unconditional, Christ will certainly come again; and will as certainly reign over the nations; and his saints will as certainly reign with him; and we had better be fitting ourselves for kings and priests than to be in vain trying to find out a time not known to men, nor angels, nor yet, even to the Son of man.

Our time friends claim that sinners are converted by definite time preaching. It may be so: but such converts are like the converts made by shaking them over hell; they soon need converting again. The theory of the coming of the Lord to burn up all except good Christians; and the hell fire theory are just alike in effect. They both convert to the fear of an unjust and cruel God, and not to the love of a good God. A good Being will never burn a man alive until he gives him an opportunity to be saved. And there are millions now alive that never had the opportunity; for the truth has never reached them, and never can in this erring state of things.

One great object of the coming kingdom is, to give "the residue of men" an opportunity to "seek after the Lord," by sending missionaries to the ends of the earth to declare the glory of God among the Gentiles. Isa. lxvi. 19–21.

Our time friends believe, with Adventists generally, that they are to be kings and priests in the world to come. But there can be no king without subjects to be reigned over. The saints cannot reign over one another; for instance, King A. to reign over King B., and King B. to reign over King A., would be no reign at all for either. And just so of the priesthood. Wherever there is a priest there must be unrighteous people for him to minister to; for even Christ, the great High Priest came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. So where there are no sinners there is no more need of priest than there is of pardon where there is no crime. Christ is of the Melchisedec or royal priesthood, and will be both King and Priest when he comes again. See Zech. vi. 12, 13. He will rule over the "left" of the nations, and officiate between God and them in his sacerdotal office.

I am aware that desperate exertion will be made by our time friends to launch their ship again for 1873, with its india rubber hawser, to extend to '74 or '75; therefore, it is the duty of all who believe in the prophetic reign over the Gentiles to wake up and put on the whole armor of truth and prepare for the last battle between the fairy reign of the saints over nobody, and the prophetic reign over the Gentiles.

TOM'S RIVER, N. J.

GOODLY ADORNING.

BY ELD. J. B. COOK.

"As an earring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold so is a wise reprover upon an obedient ear."—Prov. xxv. 11, 12.

A communication to me insists that Christ does "WITHDRAW," and Rev. xi. 15–18 is quoted for positive proof that God takes the kingdom and judges, mediation having then ended. It reads thus, in brief; "The seventh Angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become our Lord's and his Christ's, and He shall reign," etc.

"All power in heaven and earth—given" to Christ, Matt. xxviii. 19, seems here "taken;" and "He—Jesus, is Lord (or King) to the glory of God the Father."—Phil. ii. 11; Rom. xiv. 9. But this writer quotes, to contradict this "doctrine of the Lord."

Mark the principle: "God hath spoken unto us." How? Answer: "By His Son." —Heb. i. 1–8; John i. 17; viii. 16; xv. 15. So we read that "God will judge the world." How? "By that man whom he hath ordained . . . and assured to all, in that He hath raised him from the dead."—Acts xvii. 31. The erring argument that would "Withdraw" Christ from the judgment, would also "withdraw" him from the Divine ministry of truth and grace.

In Luke xix. 11–27, Christ is represented as "A Nobleman going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." On his return, he rewards the faithful, and to the unfaithful he says, "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee. But those mine enemies who would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay before me."

Let this suffice for "a wise reprover." May it reach "an obedient ear." Christ, the coming "Judge of quick and dead" named and stationed in that very text to reprove every one who like erring Peter, ventures to say to him, "Withdraw." If I had no love to Him, it seems to me, that I should be far more presumptuous than Peter; and far bolder than Balaam, to go further than my informant in that perilous way. The Judge Himself is there, in the very text quoted, to withstand all such presumption and to vindicate his injured name, and maintain his official station as Judge and King; rewarder of the saints, and the destroyer of his foes. May this writer accept the reproof and the correction, and never more transform Christ's NAME and PRESENCE into an assumption of his ABSENCE. Acts iii. 19.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April, 1871.

D. SHERBURNE, late of Corinna, Me., now in Boston, Mass., writes: I want to say a word about the friends of Jesus down in Maine. There is a little band of believers in the towns of Exeter and Corinna that truly believe in Jesus the LIFE-GIVER, and the only way of life from the dead is to believe in Jesus Christ, the only LIFE-GIVER, who has promised to raise us up at the last day if we trust in him. But what I want to say is, that we had a short series of meetings of about ten days, and the Lord blessed us abundantly; backsliders were reclaimed and sinners converted to God, quite a goodly number. Praise the Lord. We did not have much preaching, but the little band of believers entered into the work, and the Lord blessed their labors. To God be all the glory. Well, I am glad that I ever heard that blessed truth, the righteous only will live again.

Yours, in hope of everlasting life when Jesus comes.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 12, 1871.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another ource, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

A MISTAKE.

BY some means a number of our subscribers were sent, two weeks ago, the HERALD for March 22, instead of March 29. Thus they had March 22 twice, and did not get March 29 at all. As far as heard from, we have since sent them the last-named paper.

How this mistake occurred we cannot tell. The mailing is done out of our office; and all papers not used are returned to us as soon as the mailing is over, and none should be left behind to get mixed with the following week. This duty of the mailing department must have been neglected March 22, and so became mixed with March 29, and thus some of our subscribers were served twice with 22 instead of the right number.

If others have not received March 29, we will do the best we can to supply them with it, though that number is nearly all gone.

THE PASSOVER SUPPER.

THE anniversary Lord's Supper was attended to in New York City, Wednesday evening, one week since. It was the most interesting season we have ever experienced. Nearly two hundred were present, who all appeared to be of one heart and one soul. There were no jarring strings, although differences on doctrinal points existed, no doubt, yet they were not so presented in the least to disturb our harmony and love one to another; and a united spirit of love to our common Lord and REDEEMER, who bought us with his blood was manifested by all. A happy season it truly was. Thanks to God and the Lamb. May we all meet at the "Marriage Supper of the LAMB."

THE PROMISE AND OATH OF GOD TO ABRAHAM.—No. 5.

AT THIS point of our argument, that "all the families of the earth shall be blessed in Abraham and his seed," we will notice the supposed disproof of our views by the text in Rom. ii. 12—. It reads as follows: "For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law." Then follows the parenthetical statement, thus, "(For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified. For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature" [or, truly do] "the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another;) in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel."

This portion of Scripture is supposed to militate against the idea that those who have died without ever having heard of Christ, may, possibly, be made alive again to hear of him, and so be judged by the gospel as to their final destiny. It is confidently asserted that the Apostle's language shows that heathen sinners "shall perish without law," or the gospel. This text bears something of the same relation to the view we advocate relating to the promise and oath of God to Abraham, that John v. 28, 29 does to the non-resurrection of the wicked dead; with this difference, however, this is a solitary text; there being none other that expresses the same sentiment this is supposed to convey. Let us then examine the text and context and see if we can arrive at its true sense and intent.

The Apostle's controversy was especially with the "Jew," who "rested in the law," etc., and was "confident that himself was a guide of the blind," etc.; (verses 17–19). Paul had told them that tribulation would be visited upon "every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first, and also [afterwards] of the Gentile: but glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God." Verses 9 to 11. He then adds, "For as many as have sinned without law" [the Mosaic, or Jewish law] "shall also perish without law:" [the Jews' law]: "and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law . . . in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel."

Thus reading the text, (as we must to get the sense) without the parenthesis, we see what the Apostle designed to teach. The Gentiles, to whom he preached, were not under the law, of which the Jew boasted; they were not to be judged by that law. If the Gentile sinned (using the term sin in its proper sense) his sin was not against the law, for he was not under it; but he sinned against the gospel light, now brought unto him by the preaching thereof: his sin (be it remembered) is "in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ; or, by the preaching of the gospel:" "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow; and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."—Heb. iv. 12.

It is by the preaching of the gospel (which Paul calls, "my gospel") that "God shall judge the secrets of men;" and it is "in the day" when the gospel is preached to them that the judgment takes place on the hearers of it: "the secrets" of their hearts are then laid open; their disposition towards God and his Son, the LIFE-GIVER, are manifested, and then, if they reject the proffered mercy, although never under the law, they "shall perish without law;" but not without having first rejected the message of God's love made known to them according to the promise and oath of God.

To suppose those who are said to perish without law, also perish without the knowledge of God's willingness to save them by Jesus Christ, is to envelop God's promise and oath in thick darkness, and is a dishonor done to His government of the creatures He has made, out of all harmony with His revealed character; for, "God commendeth his love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Rom. v. 8. Are we to admit that the same God will doom millions on millions of these same sinners, for whom Christ died, to eternal death for not believing on Him of whom they never heard? We think the Apostle to the Gentiles would characterize such preaching as "another gospel" from that he had preached.

As to what Paul saith in parenthesis, (Rom. ii. 13–15), it only shows there is intelligence in human beings to see truth when made known to them, and lays the foundation for responsibility so far as the truth is presented to their minds; but states nothing of the final doom of such as never have been blessed with the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is to judge those who hear it. It is then, that men pass into the investigating judgment, which fixes their final state for life or death eternal. The light which is necessary to this end, is what God's promise and oath to Abraham secures to "every creature" possessed of human nature, and will surely be imparted to them in some way, at some time, before they receive life eternal or are doomed to death eternal. God cannot be thwarted in his work whether we believe it or not. His promise and oath stand and will stand against all the theories and unbelief of good or bad men. He will take care to see that the end is reached, however impossible it may seem to us. The means are His. Faith is ours.

After it has been demonstrated that this promise and oath never have been fulfilled, either to all families, nor all nations, it is said, "Some of all nations have been blessed in Abraham and his seed, and that covers the promise." Before any one takes such liberty with God's pledge to Abraham they should prove that some of all nations have been blessed according to the promise and oath. But, for the sake of the argument, suppose we admit this assumption; then the promise and oath should be altered to correspond, and would read thus: "By myself have I sworn . . . that in thy seed some of all nations shall be blessed."

What would be thought of an immensely wealthy man if he should promise, and confirm it by an oath, saying, "In my wealth the United States shall be blessed." But the facts prove that only one of those States ever received any blessing from his wealth, or ever heard of his promise and oath? Would any thinking man, knowing these facts, say the promise and oath had been fulfilled?

What is the difference between a promise to nations and to families? It takes families to make nations; and a nation, as such, cannot be blessed without the families composing it being partakers of the blessing in some degree. God, clearly, included the families when he spoke of the blessing to come through Abraham, for He expressly said so to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3, and confirms the same to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 14, thus, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." To say that "all nations" means something short—far short—of "all the families" of which those nations are composed is making a distinction where God has made none, but has expressly joined the two together, so that the one includes the other; and "what God has joined together let not man put asunder," saith Jesus.

MAN NOT IMMORTAL.

REVIEW OF N. D. GEORGE ON "ANNIHILATION."

OUR Saviour was speaking to his disciples, his "friends." He exhorted them to faithfulness in proclaiming the truth, under all circumstances, not permitting any fear of bodily injury to interfere with or prevent the prosecution of the work assigned them. He adds:

"Fear not them who apokteinonton, murder (in the sense of cutting to pieces) the soma, body, but cannot apokteinai, kill, (in the sense of utterly destroy) the psuche, soul or being; but rather fear him who is able apolesai, to destroy both (psuche and soma) body and being, in Gehenna. The meaning undoubtedly is, that wicked men can only destroy the present being of the righteous, and that God could raise them up again; but if they apostatized to save their present lives, that God was able—which implies that He would do it—to destroy their entire being in Gehenna."—Bible vs. Tradition.

Jesus had said to them—"Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on."—Matt. vi. 25. The word here rendered life is the same (psuche) that is rendered soul in x. 28. What determined the rendering of it life in the one case, and soul in the other? Would it have been done had there been no soul-entity theory to serve? The reader cannot fail to perceive the true state of the case. Again: Christ said to the disciples, "He that findeth his life, (psuche) shall lose it: and he that loseth his life (psuche) for my sake shall find it."—x. 39. Here is much the same sentiment expressed as in x. 28.

Yet again: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Matt. xvi. 25, 26. Dr. Adam Clarke here remarks that he knows not on what authority many have translated the Greek term life in verse 25, and soul in verse 26: "but," says he, "I am certain it means life in both places." Since the translators desired to have it soul in the last verse, why did they not so render it in the first? The reason is obvious. They did not like the looks of a text which would express the possibility of a man losing his soul for Christ's sake. Had they put it life in both verses the reading would have been consistent and sensible throughout; for what would it profit any man, if he should gain the whole world and lose his life? or what would a man give in exchange for his life? However the terms are rendered they make sad havoc with Mr. George's theory. He says the soul is the man, consequently the text as it stands represents the possibility of a soul losing its soul; and if a soul possesses a soul, why may not the soul possessed possess a soul, and so on ad infinitum. On the other hand, if life be put in place of soul, as Clarke insists, then the difficulty is increased, for his real man, being immortal, can only die a "spiritual death," and Christ is thus made to urge his disciples to a willingness to "lose the life of God," to enter a "condition of sin and wretchedness" for his sake. What a wretched theory that must be which is ever floating upon the surface of such absurdities. It is lamentable indeed that rational men are willing to grope about in that kind of darkness.

A fact which we feel confident will not be denied by any well-informed person is, that the righteous are in the N. T. said to have a life which the unrighteous are not said to have. In recognition of this the term "sleep" is frequently used with reference to the righteous dead, but it is never used with reference to the wicked dead. Understand, we speak of the N. T.

Says Dr. Lange—"The designation 'sleep' is used in the New Testament to denote the death of believers only." Another fact is that believers obtain through Jesus the principle of the resurrection. This is fully conceded by some orthodox commentators. Paul remarked: "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11. The marginal reading for "by," in the text, is because of: and this reading is so well supported by MSS., that best critics adopt it, among them the translators of the AMERICAN BIBLE UNION. Dr. Hodge says of it—"The meaning is that the indwelling of God's Spirit is the ground or reason why believers are not left in the grave." The mind cannot conceive just how the indwelling of God's Spirit is the ground or reason why believers are not left in death, nor just what is that life in recognition of the existence of which the righteous dead are said, by N. T. writers, to "sleep," but we do know, because inspiration informs us, that the result, the effect is resurrection from the dead.

We conceive it to be precisely this kind of life or being which is meant in Matt. x. 28. When Christ said, "whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it" (life), he had reference, as none will deny, to two kinds of life. Enemies of Christ are able to kill the natural life of believers, but that which shall be found again is the spiritual life which they shall receive by being raised "up at the last day." Of course Christ's people do not have that life in its reality while the natural life is possessed, but they do have it as a seed or life-principle, and although they may be killed and given to the burning flame it will still exist and God will give them a life, by a resurrection from the dead, in full and glorious reality because of its existence. Therefore, believers should not fear them which kill the soma, body, take away its life, but are not able to kill the psuche, life, which they possess by virtue of a living union with Christ: but they should rather fear him who is able and will be likely, should they forsake Christ and the gospel to save their present or natural life, to destroy both.

Harwood renders Matt. x. 28, "Fear not those who can inflict upon you bodily pain and torture, and deprive you of a precarious being—but whose power extends no further. But let that great Being be the object of your fear, who can involve both soul and body in total and everlasting destruction. Let that great Being, I repeat it, be the object of your constant fear."

"Every reasonable person must perceive that psuche means a person's self. The learned know that Matthew—who probably wrote his gospel in Hebrew, uses a great many Hebrew idioms. Thus we find that Luke often explains Matthew. It was customary for the Hebrews to use the expressions, my soul, your soul, instead of the reflective pronouns, myself, yourself, etc."—Bible vs. Tradition.

It is evident that all the gospel writers understood a man's soul to be himself, not a fancied something within him capable of being separated from him. Not only is this so, but it cannot be proved that any member of the Christian church believed otherwise for at least the first hundred years—it would be safe to name a longer period—of its existence. The popular theory of man's nature was introduced into the church at a much later period, as will in due time be shown.

"Gr., fear not from those apokteinonton to soma, but the psuche not being able apokteinai; but fear rather that (him that) being able kai, both, the psuche kai, and, the soma apolesai en geenne. The verb apokteino, of which apokteinonton is the participle, and apokteinai the infinitive, is defined by the Hederici Lexicon, interficio, defined by Ainsworth, to kill, put to death, destroy, consume, occido, defined by Ainsworth, to be extinguished, to die, to be slain, to perish, to be lost, to be wasted, and perino, defined by Ainsworth, to take away wholly, destroy, ruin, deface, to kill, slay. . . . Apollumi, of which apolesai (the other verb used in the verse,) is the infinitive, is defined by the Hederici Lex., perdo, vasto, pereo, disperdo, to abolish, to waste, to cause to be lost, to perish, to be annihilated: the reader has already had the meaning of the last three of these verbs. . . . The reader perceives, that apolesai, applied in the verse to both the psuche and the soma, is a much stronger word to express utter extinction than the verb apokteino, applied in the verse to soma. If among the definitions of apokteino, we take kill, then the Greek of Matt. x. 28 will be, . . . fear not from those killing the soma, (i. e., the living person, for the body without psuche, breath, life, cannot be killed,) but the psuche, breath, life, (psuche is here used kat 'exochen, by way of eminence, for breath, life, from the dead) not being able to kill; but fear rather that (him that) being able both the psuche and the soma (i. e., the entire being) to abolish, waste, destroy totally, cause to be lost, to perish, be annihilated in geenna."—Theology of the Bible.

All will surely perceive, we think, that the psuche, (rendered soul) life, which Jesus affirmed men cannot kill, is something peculiar to the believer, and possessors of it are warned against disobedience, or in any way whatever seeking to save their natural life at the expense of the precious faith committed to them, lest, offending him who is able to destroy the whole being, they be not raised from the dead to everlasting life and glory. To deny the truth, knowing, or believing it to be such, is to deny Christ, and he has said, "whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." To be renounced by Christ, is to have him neither for a mediator nor Saviour. To so apostatize as to be thus separated from Christ, the LIFE-GIVER, the "author of eternal life," the "resurrection and the life," is to be destroyed utterly. If a man sacrifice his life for God, it is not lost, for God will give him, the man, a future life in infinite glory.

That part of the text, Matt. x. 28, which, rightly understood, positively prohibits the interpretation insisted on by Mr. George and others, we have hitherto refrained from noticing. It is the expression, "in hell." The word rendered hell, is gehenna. It occurs twelve times in the received Greek text, and is translated hell in every place. It is not itself a Greek word, but is simply the Grecian method of spelling the Hebrew words which are translated "The Valley of Hinnom."

"Parkhurst considers that as the Septuagint translate, or rather spell in Greek letters, without translating gee or gai, a valley, and Hinnom, a man's name, in Job xviii. 16, by Gaihenna, so the Gehenna of the N. T. is in like manner a corruption of the same Hebrew words, Gee, a valley, and Hinnom, the person who was once the possessor of it. So we may consider the word as Hebrew with nothing of Greek about it, except the spelling. Our translators have no more authority for translating gehenna by hell, than they would have had for translating Sodom or Gomorra, hell. All critics are agreed upon the origin of the word.

The valley of Hinnom was a delightful vale planted with trees, watered by fountains on the south-east of Jerusalem, by the torrent Kedron. Here the idolatrous kings of Judah placed the brazen image of Moloch. The idolatrous Jews were accustomed to sacrifice, not only doves, rams, calves, and bulls, but often their own children. . . . The pious king Josiah caused it to be polluted, and made a place of desecration, of loathing, and horror. There were cast all kinds of filth, together with the carcasses of beasts, and the unburied criminals who had been executed. Continual fires were necessary, in order to consume these; and there worms were always feeding on the remaining relics." —B. vs. T.

The author of THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, after remarking upon the use of the word in the various versions, says:

"Our orthodox editors give in the margin a note to the E. V. words, the valley of Hinnom, in Josh. xv. 8, thus, 'Memorable for the worship of the idol Moloch with human sacrifice; and as having given occasion to the New Testament name for the place of future punishment, Gehenna.' Thus early in the Bible do our orthodox editors say to the readers of the note, that Gehenna in the New Testament is a name, and a name for orthodoxy's place of future punishment. But the Rheims version, and James' orthodox ecclesiastics, have not ventured once to use the word Gehenna in their version of the N. T. It was so plain that the Gr. geenna, Lat., gehenna, Ital., geenna, of the New Testament was the valley of Hinnom of the Old Testament, that they entirely avoided the word gehenna."

L. C. T.

THE PASSOVER IN PHILADELPHIA.

BY W. F FAHNESTOCK.

BR. STORRS: I saw in the HERALD OF LIFE, of March 22, an invitation from Br. J. L. Boyd, of Philadelphia, to meet with him on the evening of April 5, 1871, to celebrate the Lord's Supper. I am personally a stranger to Br. Boyd. Last Sunday morning I opened my Bible at Matthew 26th chapter, and read, "He (Jesus) said unto his disciples, ye know that after two days is the feast of passover." My thoughts were for a moment drawn to the HERALD OF LIFE to see the date of the passover. Yes, it's just two days now, as when our blessed Lord spoke to his disciples. I asked myself, Will I be there? My heart responded, "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you;" and I asked grace and direction from my Lord. Wednesday, April 5, at 11 30 A. M., I started to Philadelphia (107 miles distant), and at 7 P. M. I called at Br. Boyd's house. I was very kindly received by Sister Boyd, who, from a full Christian heart, invited me in to supper with Br. Boyd, who also received me with the feelings dictated by that beautiful hymn—

"Our souls by love together knit,
Cemented, mixed in one,
One hope, one heart, one mind, one voice,
'Tis heaven on earth begun."

Supper over, we retired to the parlor, where several brothers and sisters had already arrived. One brother came in from Wilmington, Del.; one from Easton, Pa., and some others from distant points. Their names I have lost. I think there were about twenty brethren there, among whom I recognized Br. Burbank and Br. Grim. I think there were about thirty sisters with us; and "it was good to be there." Oh "how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.—'tis like the precious ointment." I think I speak the sentiment of each heart there, when I say,

"Our hearts have burned while Jesus spake,
And glowed with sacred fire;
He stopped, and talked, and fed, and blessed,
And filled the enlarged desire."

Yes, how sweet and cheering the recital of the precious dealings of a kind Providence who has led us for twenty-nine years through this wilderness of sin; the snatching as a brand from the burning, of one brother who had been an infidel, and another who was steeped in the curse of spiritualism, but who are now freemen in Christ Jesus—who now "stand up for Jesus," fearlessly proclaiming "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life: but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36.

We conversed and praised God in songs of praise, making "melody in our hearts" as well as with our voices, for the space of about two hours. Yes, it was a precious season to be in that guest chamber, and contemplate that near that hour, about 1838 years ago, Jesus was in person with his disciples, and occupied as we were; and has he not said, where two or three are gathered in my name, "there" will I be with them? Yes, we felt that Jesus was there. Love of the brethren was prominent. "Ye are my disciples if ye love one another." "Perfect love casteth out fear." Several questions were asked, in the spirit of love, for light on certain points, and answered in the same spirit. It's true there are babes in Christ who are fed upon the milk of the word; but there are also STRONG men, who can feed on strong food. The wheels of time flew on; the hour of ten came; the emblems of the broken body and the shed blood of our dear Redeemer were brought in, and after giving thanks were given to each waiting disciple, all of whom partook in memory of the death of Jesus, looking forward with joyful expectancy to meet with him on the next anniversary of this precious feast. He says, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.

Oh what a precious privilege to be permitted to live in this age of the world, just about to enter upon the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, to be ever with the Lord. And, on the other hand, how fearful the thought for those who do not love His appearing. Yes, yes, it cannot be avoided, it must be heard, and will echo over the sin-cursed world, and sleeping virgins—too late—too late—depart; I never knew you.

Let us all try to live more watchful, looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who shall change these vile bodies and fashion them like unto His glorious body, by the power whereby He is able to subdue all things unto himself. Hoping that we may all live humbly in the present evil world, and from our hearts say,

And when thou mak'st thy jewels up,
And sett'st thy starry crown:
When all thy sparkling gems shall shine,
Proclaimed by thee thine own—
May we, a little band of love,
We sinners, saved by grace,
From glory unto glory changed,
Behold thee face to face.

Your brother, in hope of immortality.
HARRISBURG, PA., April 6, 1871.

LOOK AT PARIS NOW!

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

APRIL 1.—The stronger party of the "Nationals," in the city, propose to use the guillotine upon the other party. The most foolish and absurd positions are taken that reckless power which assumes authority, and it is said that if the Government, at Versailles, does not, by attacking the city, give some employment to the mob which holds it, the scenes of the time of Robespierre will be re-enacted. This is just as we have expected and intimated before; for this "Babylon must come in remembrance before God to give her the cup," the cup of fierce wrath; and the overwhelming force of a conquering foreign foe did not seem sufficient, did not leave the work complete. See what confusion and anarchy. I quote from Leslie's Newspaper: "France, the curse of Republicanism, has done more, in the name of liberty, to delay it, than all the Princes and Powers combined. She now, in the hour when Absolutism, Cæsarism, and all obstacles to her emergence into the full light of rational freedom have disappeared, again gives the warrant for their restoration, and again places the dagger in the hand of irresponsible power.

"Her neck, relieved from the weight of the Napoleonic heel, she again, forgetting the severe lessons of the past, places it under the yoke of Monarchy. In the name of Liberty, Freedom and the Republic, Paris is doing deeds that delight the bastard Napoleon, who dragged her down to the very depth of humiliation. She is smoothing the way, nay, making it necessary to his restoration, or the rise to irresponsible power of some other perjurer or assassin, equally unscrupulous and corrupt."

The general expression is, that the French are not fit for self-government. They do not know how to estimate freedom. Let loose from the superstitious blindness of Catholicism, and the political degradation of Imperialism, they rush uncontrolled into anarchical confusion, and the murderous rage of demons. Thus Paris devours herself to-day—a Babel, "a habitation of devils."

IS PARIS THE GREAT CITY?

BY W. F. GARDNER.

No—but the world, the Catholic church, the Protestant church, and the new earth is.

The Pope and the Papal church are called by many, and some hard names—among the eleven are the "two witnesses." If Papacy is in the Book, it is under the guise of this name.

The Pope and the church are witnesses, because when broken up by a French army, under Gen. Berthier in 1798, they were found just as Daniel described them 2,355 years before: "witnesses," because they proved the word of God true.

The man or party that tells false, is a witness, as well as he that tells true. Matt. xxvi. 60: "Many false witnesses came." Rev. xi. 3: "I will give power to my 'two witnesses, and they shall prophecy a thousand two hundred and three-score days;" (i. e., years); "clothed in sackcloth." The time is the same as given by Daniel. But how can the 1260 years be made to fit Moses and Elias? "Clothed in sackcloth."—Zech. xiii. 4. "The false prophets wore rough garments, or sackcloth to deceive;" and so of the Catholics.

But where is the evidence that Moses and Elias wore sackcloth? Rev. xi. 4: "These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth." The Roman emperor was the god of the earth. "Standing before," i. e., to make battle: the Pope did stand before the emperor, and put Paganism out in 508. Rev. xi. 4: "These are the two olive trees."

"Olive trees" are given as an emblem or type of long life: so they are a fit representation, for Papacy is yet living. But is there any analogy between the olive trees and Moses and Elias? Rev. xi. 4: "These are the two candlesticks."

Rev. i. 20 says, "candlestick" means the church, not Moses and Elias. So as trees represent the Pope, candlestick does the church. Zechariah was cotemporary with, and understood Papacy, as per chap. iv. 5, as well as Daniel did. John, to make sure the "two witnesses" meant the Pope and the church, uses the same terms as Zechariah did. Rev. xi. 7: "When they shall have finished their testimony (i. e., at the end of 1260 years, in 1798,) the beast, (the political government,) that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, (i. e., from under Papal rule,) shall make war, overcome and kill them." That is what the beast, the government, did do.

Rev. xi. 8: "Their dead bodies shall lie in the streets of the great city, which, spiritually, is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." Sodom and Egypt, a type of the world. Deut. xxxiv. 6: "The Lord buried Moses in a valley in the land of Moab, and no man knoweth of his sepulchre to this day." How then did his body lay in the street three and a half days?

There is no account of the death of Elias.

If Elias is Elijah—as appears by the word, the record is no plainer: if Elijah went to heaven, he did not die at all. At the appearance of Moses and Elias on the mount of transfiguration, it is said by Christ (Matt. xvii. 9,) to be a vision; so as the same words are used in 2 Kings ii. 11, it shows the horses and chariot of fire was a vision also; and as Christ says (John iii. 13,) that "No man has ascended to heaven," we are bound to believe that Elijah, with all the rest of the dead, is in the grave. Rev. xi. 8: "Their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city." "Great city," the world; Papacy was and is world-wide.

Zech. v. 6: "This is their resemblance through all the earth." The capital I in the word This, is the cross on their churches. It was true of Papacy, it was killed and lay dead. Rev. xi. 11: "After three days and a half, (i. e., 3 1-2 years,) the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet." Papacy was broken up in March, 1798; restored by the First Napoleon in the fall of 1801, after it lay dead 3 1-2 years.

Rev. xi. 12: "They heard a great voice from heaven," the church. Ver. 14: "The second woe is past;"—the Papal rule made the second woe.

Rev. xviii. 24: "In her was found the blood of prophets and saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."

Words cannot make it plainer, that this city means the world. Rev. xvii. is descriptive of Papacy; ver. 18 says: "The woman which thou sawest is that great city." So Papacy as well as all the world is the great city. As Babylon of Rev. xvii. 5 is the Catholic church, Rev. xiv. 8, it is the Protestant; the meaning of the word is confusion. The holy city, Rev. xxi. 2, is the new earth, the third heaven of 2 Cor. xii. 2. So the city is never Paris nor Rome.

In much love, yours, waiting.
WASHINGTON, D. C., March, 1871.

FOR THE MASTER'S GLORY.

HERALDRY carries its motto in a scroll, alluding to the bearing or to the name of the bearer, "or expressing some important idea." Let us inscribe on our hearts, "FOR THE MASTER'S GLORY." The words express a more important idea than any found in the Herald's College. The stirring power of a word or emblem is sometimes wonderful. Badges and emblems on shields and helms occurred in the earliest times. The children of Israel were commanded to pitch their tents "every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, throughout their hosts. But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel; and the Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of testimony." The Greek and Roman poets speak of paintings and devices on shields and helmets. These symbols were hereditary. Xenophon tells us that the kings of the Medes bore a golden eagle on their shields. Suetonius says that Domitian had a golden beard for his coat of arms; and Tacitus asserts that the ancient Germans marked their shields with brilliant colors, and that standards were borne before them in battle. "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," was a grand device. It struck ths host of the Midianites with panic, and proved that "there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." Three companies of a hundred men each, with trumpets, empty pitchers, and torches, were certainly, by every rule of war, a contemptible army of defence against a powerful and well-armed enemy; but the lesson of faith in God which the sequel teaches, makes that sublime which, to military ideas, is simply absurd.

We need to have this lesson of faith in God repeated, for we have mighty foes, a trinity of evil, the world, the flesh, and the devil, to contend with; and we are not able, without the aid of supernatural strength, to resist them. We need the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand in the evil day. Our foes are subtle, malignant, persevering, determined, and we are mournfully slow in making the best of our experience; so much so, indeed, that the experience of yesterday is not of great service to-day, and that of to-day may be of little use to-morrow. The plans of the enemy are ever varying, and if we are not constantly prepared, we may be surprised and wounded at a moment when we think ourselves perfectly safe from attack. Moreover, as we have work to do and conquests to gain which require an aggressive attitude, with corresponding weapons, merely to stand on the defensive will be a failure of duty to our King. Let us then gaze upon our motto until it fire our hearts with holy zeal and inspire us to deeds of Christian heroism, which will bear grateful retrospection in the day of palms and crowns. "The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits;" and though we may not see great issues at present, either from our endurance or deeds, the recollection that, whether suffering or acting, it is for the Master's glory, will have a sanctifying effect upon the heart, and weaken the power of that miserable selfishness which spoils so many of our services.

Let us think. Could we not manage to "pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony" this year with greater union, more determined purpose, and warmer zeal, than we did last year? Whenever our Lord may come, the distance between that period and the present is lessened by a twelvemonth's journey. We shall not have to discharge the duties, or bear the burdens, or pass through the trials of 1870 any more for ever: but—and what a wonder of grace is this!—every thing we did for the Master, from the right motive, during that period, will come up again in forms of beauty and joy that will surprise us. That word of holy counsel, that fervent appeal for perfect loyalty to Christ, that piece of money given with glowing gratitude to sustain the light of His truth amidst the world's darkness, that visit of charity to the abode of sorrow, and that garment and piece of bread bestowed with Christ-like gentleness upon the widow and fatherless, all of which, let us hope, we had quite forgotten, will appear before us in the new age, in such lovely forms, that we shall not know our own children. But "ye did it unto ME" will explain all. In the light of that revelation all service will shortly be examined; and oh! it is humbling to think, upon the one hand, how much so-called service will be utterly rejected; whilst, upon the other hand, it excites our wonder to think what ample reward will crown all service that can bear the test of that light. Of course, the explanation is this: for service done heartily to Christ, Christ's heart dictates the reward. It is not a thing measured by rule or weighed in a balance, so much for so much; but Divine Love showing abundantly its appreciation of the filial love that endured, and labored, and dared for it.

Well, now, can we not gather around the ark of testimony—"the true and faithful Witness"—this year, with a single, settled purpose, animating, and cleansing, and strengthening every heart—to glorify Him? We are Churchmen, Independents, Baptists, Methodists, Brethren, Friends. Well, let us be thankful for the freedom of conscience—a blessed privilege involving a heavy responsibility—which permits us to elect our ecclesiastical brotherhood, no man forbidding us; but suppose now, seeing that we are a year nearer the time of the Lord's advent, we choose to forget all this, and say with one voice "We are CHRIST'S." These names at best are but sub-titles, and as proofs of what a man is in the sight of God they are utterly useless; but given a number of Christian men banded together to serve the MASTER under the absorbing influence of this one thought, We are Christ's, and you behold the sublimest sight under heaven. We have all paid somewhat more than enough attention to our divisions, each sect striving to build up itself: let us now, for the Master's glory, attend to the matter of union. If we would do this, and forget the things that are behind, we would make the year very fruitful in testimony for our Lord, our Life, our Head; and our years, thus employed, would become consecrated milestones on the road to immortality.

For the Master? Yes! It is plain duty. He gave Himself for us, and if the gift has been accepted we are His. A man does not like his property wasted or given to an enemy; nay, he does not like to see it unproductive, however safe it may be. Now, we are not supposing wasted property, or property given to the enemy, because we are supposing that truly Christian men, men who are Christ's, will read this paper; but is it uncharitable to suppose unproductiveness on the part of some men who are nevertheless Christians? Are we what we might be? Have we done what we could to diffuse around the savor of the Redeemer's name? The fragrance of holiness is the finest incense in the world. The Lord likes it; and what pleases Him should be a well-spring of continual joy to us. Are we thus ministers of the sanctuary? Do our fellows read in our conduct lines written by the Holy Ghost? Are we preachers of righteousness by righteous practice; examples of good will by benevolence; witnesses to the Divine love, by charity; imitators of Christ, by meekness and gentleness? Self-questioning on our part may save us the annoyance of cross-questioning by the world concerning the genuineness of our faith. And be the reason what it may, men expect more of the fruits of Christianity from those who look for the Lord's coming, than they do from those who are unbelieving or careless respecting the advent. This is surely a tribute to the doctrine which those who hold it should justify. If we really believe that the Lord may come at any time, such faith must bear precious fruit. We cannot be worldly, selfish, unspiritual, without the most manifest inconsistency. Living habitually under the consciousness that the eye of the Master is upon us, and that we may very soon have to give an account of ourselves to Him, our deportment before the world will necessarily bear testimony to these facts. The natural outgrowth of a true faith is a true life. The fruits of the Spirit should be found in those who have been quickened by the Spirit, and those who love the appearing of the Lord, should live in the world even as He also lived. Mere profession without corresponding practice, will neither convince the world nor honor the Lord. Men may pray so that a cultured ear shall enjoy the language in which they speak to the Heart Searcher, but if acrimony in business contrast with the style of the petitioner, damage is done, and God is not glorified. Sweetness in Christian fellowship and sourness to domestics or clerks are contradictions, and men will not hesitate to say that the sourness is the man, and the sweetness the mask. Of course, the conclusion is uncharitable; but why should any Christian man expose himself to it? In some cases irritability is hereditary, but patience and meekness are fruits of the Spirit, the Divine counteractives of the distressing human legacy. By grace, men have conquered nature, the new man has triumphed over the old; and what has been in this region of human experience can be and will be again. Even by our tempers we may honor the Master; let us do so this year.

But there is still another consideration which ought to have great weight with us in trying to make ourselves vessels unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work. The state of the professing church at large is by no means such as to give satisfaction to the thoughtful Christian, or to warrant the hope that she is destined to make many conquests in the moral world. If those who know that they are Christ's and live only by Christ, would also determine to live only for His glory, here is a very large field upon which at least some happy influence might be noiselessly exerted, some holy light quietly shed. Let us not be misunderstood on this delicate point. We have advisedly used these adverbs for the purpose of guarding against mistake. We would not ask a member of one Protestant Church to leave it and join another; for a man may do this without being a hair's-breadth nearer to the kingdom of heaven. We would not waste a moment in instituting comparisons between the different systems of ecclesiastical polity; for, if we mistake not, they are all doomed to pass away. We would not throw taunt or sarcasm, even though done in playful mood, at anything which, through education or association, the friend with whom we are conversing may deem sacred. And, above all, we would not make it possible for the rumor to go about that followers of Jesus Christ had withdrawn their confidence from a brother who had found in the Bible a truth hitherto unseen by him, and had, as in duty bound by conscience, declared his belief in that truth. Don't say, "Query, is it truth?" for we hold most distinctly that you are not to judge your brother in a matter in which he is conscientious towards God, and anxiously loyal for the glory of the great Master. He may be right, and the traditional orthodoxy which censures him wrong; but reverse the supposition, and what then? Excommunication? Never! so long as he is a devout Christian man, and a lover of our Lord Jesus Christ,—which is the spring of devotion and the test of Christianity. But if the Lord has graciously given him greater light than you have on the point in question, whatever it may be,—light which, as a faithful brother, he wished to shed upon you, that you and he might rejoice together as partakers of the benefit, and you excommunicate him—what then? Why, in God's sight you have refused a grace—the grace of further light—which He graciously offered you; in man's sight, you who, very properly, denounce all priest-rule as a yoke from which Christ's Church is free, have been guilty of one of the most intolerable acts of priest-rule; and in relation to the ejected brother, you have acted the part, not of Christian brethren, but of judges of conscience, an office which, thanks to the Lord! does not belong to any human being.

Well, then, what are we to do for the benefit of others? Let them see clear evidence that we love one another; that whilst we make no pretensions to superior piety, the real, living, blessed thing itself is in us; that we really feel ourselves not our own but bought with a price; that a Christian profession without practical holiness is a falsehood before God and men; that the fruits of the divine life in regenerated men prove the doctrine and necessity of the new birth; that if any man be in Christ he is a new creature; that we dedicate life, talents, influence, property, unreservedly to our Lord and Saviour; and that to honor him and live to His praise is the very end, and aim, and joy, and meaning of Christian existence. O for large grace to realize the privilege and honor involved in all this, and to make the inspiring motto of the year,—FOR THE MASTER'S GLORY!—EDITOR of the Rainbow, for Jan., 1871.

FROM STEWART CARLISLE.

BR. STORRS: Through the tender mercy of our loving Father in heaven, we live to see another day of rest, sweet emblem of that blessed "rest that remains for the people of God." How I almost envy those of our brethren whose privilege it is to meet together and hear the blessed truth from men whose eyes and hearts are opened by the spirit of truth. What sweet communion and holy joy is theirs; while gentle as the dew of heaven, and fragrant as the precious ointment on the head of Aaron, and the head of Jesus, is the hallowing influence of that divine Comforter for which Jesus prays, and of which, the Father sends in answer to his prayer: and although we see, as yet, "through a glass darkly," or "know in part," only, how can we suppress the ever-rising desire to see "face to face, and know even as we are known?" As the heirs of promises, that tell us of an "inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away," of an "exceeding and eternal weight of glory," such as "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into our hearts" to conceive, we cannot be otherwise than anxious for the speedy return of our glorious King; for though we see him not, yet believing in him, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

As there are no places of worship here, except "where satan's seat is," and we have no longer an ear for tradition of that sort, in our patience we shall possess our soul, looking for (the realization) of this blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ. For, he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry; and until he comes, or the enemy drags us to his den, we shall stand with armor on, with our loins girt about with truth, our lights brightly burning, and we ourselves like unto men that wait for their lord. And while we watch and wait, we shall bear an uncompromising testimony against serpentism in all its tortuous windings; for we hate it, and believe it is the abominable thing that the Almighty hateth, as it teaches man, he "shall not surely die; ye shall be as God."

Some time since I attended a Methodist love-feast; and after the others had spoken, I arose and said a very few words, and sat down. The P. E. then arose, and held us up as the objects worthy only of contempt and scorn, and unworthy of notice at all; and not satisfied with this, he published us in the "Home Journal," as the "man notorious in this city for strange doctrines, who knew his presence was not allowed in the meeting."

O how thankful I am that these men have not the keys of the kingdom of heaven; for, if they had, my chance would be very poor indeed; and yet I am sorry they have not the keys, for if they had, they would cease talking of a kingdom "beyond the bounds of time and space," and of "angels kissing immortal souls away to join those that have gone before;" and of the "crowns, and robes, and palms, and harps, that immaterial" ghosts are now clothed with, and upon which they play. But then, "The prophets prophecy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." "Dust thou art," they cannot or will not believe; they "will not endure" this "sound doctrine;" it cuts, wounds, and levels human pride, and brings it to the dust. "Prophecy smooth things" unto us, for we love them. Tell men, aye, tell God, (no matter who lies), the serpent told the truth when he said, "Ye shall not surely die."

"Satan has his seat" on this God-dishonoring lie. God hates this lie. Christ hates it; and every good man and woman ought to hate it; and from its teaching, in every form, may we be preserved till Jesus comes.

Yours, in hope.
WILMINGTON, DEL., April 2, 1871.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

BR. STORRS: I am thankful to our heavenly Father, that I am under circumstances of so much mercy. Praise His holy name for all his tender mercies and watchful care. May the blessing of heaven attend and abide with the dear brethren and friends that have heretofore aided me by their liberal donations. And now we take our leave of home and kindred friends at Grafton, not knowing whether we shall ever return again. May the Lord have mercy on them. I feel the infirmities of old age, and would willingly stay at home and spend the remnant of my days in retired life. But the King's business requires haste; what is done must be done quickly. The brethren in Shelby County, have sent for me to come back and preach to them; and they have sent the means to defray our expenses. This is as it should be. The Lord bless them.

We will close by reminding our friends that our post-office address will be, for the time being, at Mode, Shelby Co., Ill.; where we shall be happy to receive letters of correspondence from them.

GRAFTON, ILL., March 15, 1871.

SEEKING FOR IMMORTALITY.

DEAR SIR: I feel it my duty to acknowledge how much I am indebted to you for the light I have recently received from the subjects set forth in the "Rainbow." I, for many years, have been afraid to think of the destiny of the wicked, having been taught that it is endless misery; but about twelve months ago it pleased God, in his infinite wisdom, to lay me aside for the space of one month. My affliction was of that nature which did not prevent me from reading and thinking, although it prevented me from following my occupation. It was during that period that you preached upon the subject, and your sermon was inserted in the "Hackney Gazette," which I read very carefully over, and over again; at first feeling sorry that such a doctrine should be advocated by a Christian minister, but notwithstanding all my preconceived, and I must now say unscriptural views, I could not shake off the fact that the Scriptures do not speak of immortal or never-dying souls. At first I could not believe this until I took down my Bible and Concordance, and searched for myself, and was soon convinced that you were right. I also examined those passages of Scripture which speak of immortality, and was very much struck with Rom. ii. 7, "Seek," I thought, "for immortality." I was never in all my life told to seek to be an Englishman, for I am that by nature and by birth. Surely, if man is naturally immortal, he would not be supposed to seek for it. I also took down John Wesley's Notes on the New Testament, to see what he had to say on the above text, but was surprised to find him quite silent. I have given the subject much thoughtful and prayerful consideration for the last twelve months, and have read many of the works recommended by the Rainbow, and rejoice to find that they so well accord with the Scriptures. I find now I can understand many passages which I could not understand before, and also feel myself very much relieved to believe that the time will come when sin and suffering will be entirely done away. When I thoroughly received the new (to me) doctrine it gave me almost as much joy as when I was first converted.

Dear sir, I feel I must not be selfish, so I try to show it to those of my friends and acquaintances who are anxious to know the truth, and during the year I have lent the Rainbow to several, two of whom intend to take it in for themselves next year, and I wish all your readers may do the same.

Hoping your health and life may be continued for many years, that you may see the fruit of your labor,

I remain yours in, and looking for, Jesus,
—The Rainbow. G. S. B.

Do not speak a harsh, unkind word, and thus make sad the heart of another. Speak gently; it is better.

Do not live for your own comfort and enjoyment alone; live for others.

"HEALTH AND HOME" is the name of a new monthly, devoted to "Health and the Home Circle." We have received the first number, and judge it will be both instructive and interesting to families, if the future numbers shall correspond with this. It is published by "W. R. De Puy and Brother, 805 Broadway, New York. Terms, $1.50 per annum in advance."

"GOOD HEALTH" for April is received. A valuable "Journal of Physical and Mental Culture." Published by Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass. Terms, $2 per year.

APPOINTMENTS.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Sundays, April 16 and 23.
WEST MERIDEN, Sunday, April 30.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) May 7.
WOLCOTTVILLE, Conn., Sunday, April 9.
WM. STUART.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sundays, April 9 and 16.
CHARLESTOWN, Mass., Sundays, April 23 and 30. GEO. W. BROWN.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24,) April 23.
SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 14.
MERIDEN, Conn., May 21.
W. S. CAMPBELL.

BRISTOL, Conn., Sunday, April 16.
NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Sunday, April 23.
SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sundays, April 30, and May 7.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, May 21. W. N. PILE.

LEWISTON, Me., Sunday, April 16.
WM. H. DOUGHTY.

CORINNA, Me., (at the Chapel,) Sunday, April 16.
CORINNA VILLAGE, Me.. Sunday, April 23.
E. V. B. EDGERLY,
S. BRAGG.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—Mrs. Catharine Welsh, F. Winans, Jacob T. Albright.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Mrs. James Dull, John Bell (pays one year from this date).

VARIOUS SUMS—R. R. Bunnell, $4; Mrs. George Grigg, $2 50; Wm. Roworth, $25 on pledge; D. W. Miller, $20 on pledge. (We "can bear" with all such; but never promise to publish an article before we see it).

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Jonothan Moore, Brooklyn, N. Y., $10.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE

Fld. J. Lewis (2 parcels), E. V. B. Edgerly D. Cass, Samuel B. Hill (2 parcels).

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

HENRY F. LONG.—Received the money.

An Acrostic

BY A. G. HUDSON.

HERALD forth the pleasing story,
Earth the scene of future glory,
Robed in power by all adored,
Angels attend the coming Lord.
Loud shouts of joy the arches ring,
Death is conquered, Christ is King,
On David's throne to reign forever.
Freed from death, saints round him gather,
Life their theme in song and story,
Immortal life in bliss and glory;
From every heart, by every tongue,
Emmanuel's praise by all be sung.

LAKE CITY, MINN.

Up, and Doing!

UP, and be doing! nor wait for the morrow;
Never to-morrow may come to your hand;
Who waits for its advent may find to his sorrow,
That God shall to-night his one talent demand.
Be doing; there's never a lack of employment;
The harvest is white, but the toilers are few;
Life's sweetest, and purest, and noblest enjoyment
Is doing what Heaven has given to do.

Oh, up, and be doing! the duties lie near you;
Though humble the labor, work, WORK with a will:
God's voice in the heart will be music to cheer you,
God's smile will be sunshine, your bosom to fill.
No toil is too lowly, if rendered to Heaven;—
It may not be noted by angels above—
No service so simple, if faithfully given,
That God will not stoop to reward it with love.

Though humble the service, the wild bird, while singing,
Is pleasing his God in the song that he trills;
The violet, when from the green sward upspringing,
In smiles and in perfume, its duty fulfills.
So, a smile from your lips for the poor who may need it,
A word of sweet hope for the heart in despair,
A word of wise counsel for him who may heed it,
Are fragrant to Heaven as the incents of prayer.

Then UP! and BE DOING! nor wait for the morrow,
Nor long for great deeds; some little deeds do!
An angel to lighten a babe's little sorrow,
Might well spread his wings and come down from the blue.
BE DOING! for brief is the hour here given
To mortals to toil in a sin-clouded earth;
And many choice germs have been planted by Heaven,
That wait for your sunlight to bring them to birth.

—Selected.

The End of this Age.

BY W. H. HANFORD.

THOSE who teach that the inhabitants of this world are divided into two classes (wheat and tares) and think that it will be necessary to burn up the world in order to get rid of the tares, refer with a great deal of confidence to the words of Jesus, "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this age." Inasmuch as God's "people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," (Hosea iv. 6), it becomes us to rightly divide the word of life. If it be true, as we endeavored to prove in a previous article, that this parable refers to the Jews, to the separation of the true from the false wheat at the destruction of Jerusalem, then will our brethren who expect its accomplishment in the future meet with a serious loss.

We again call attention to the words of the great teacher, "this age;" and shall endeavor to show that the mission of Christ was accomplished under it, and that in this language he refers to the Mosaic age. The Son of God was "made of a woman, made under the law," (Gal. iv. 4), and continued under it to the day of his death; in fact, He was the only man that ever kept the law. "I say, that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision."—Rom. xv. 8. "When they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me (Paul) as the gospel of the circumcision was (committed) unto Peter. For He (Christ) that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles."—Gal. ii. 7, 8. Jesus not only refused to preach to the Gentiles, but he commanded his disciples to have nothing to do with them until the Son of man be come, or be manifested by a resurrection from the dead. As late as A. D. 58 we have Paul declaring that Christ had committed the care of the Jews to Peter, while He had sent Paul to preach to the uncircumcised Gentiles. We argue from this, that there was a lapping of the two dispensations. That the Mosaic dispensation closed with the ending of the seventy weeks of Dan. 9th, when the sacrifice and oblation ceased in the destruction of "thy holy city," A. D. 70, that the gospel dispensation commenced at the pentecost, or, as John the Baptist declared, one should increase and the other decrease.

Paul declares that God "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."—Heb. i. 2. The last days of time? No, but the last days of the Mosaic dispensation, this in A. D. 64. And again in Heb. ix. 26, "But now once in the end of the world hath He (Christ) appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Clearly in the end of the Jewish world or age. God raised Christ from the dead and exalted him above "every name that is named, not only in this (Jewish) age, but also in that (gospel age) which is to come."—Eph. i. 21. "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the age to come, whereof we speak."—Heb. ii. 5. The age that was passing away was introduced by "the disposition of angels," (Acts vii. 53), at Sinai. The age that was being ushered in, that was introduced by the dispensation of the Spirit at Pentecost, was not subjected to the authority of angels. Hear Paul: "Though an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, let him be accursed." In writing to his Hebrew brethren Paul speaks of "the powers of the age to come."—Heb. vi. 5. This power is undoubtedly the Holy Spirit. The gospel age is peculiarly a dispensation of the Spirit. "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this (Jewish) age, neither in the (gospel) age to come."—Matt. xii. 32. Any other interpretation of this text will give darkness instead of light.

Jesus stood at Pilate's bar and made this declaration: "My kingdom is not of this (Jewish) age: if my kingdom were of this age then would my servants fight that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence," (John xviii. 36), is not to be established at this time. From the evidence here brought to view, we are compelled to believe, that when Jesus says, "So shall it be in the end of this age," that he undoubtedly refers to the Jewish age in which he lived and died.

The tares as well as the wheat were developed by the truth. Can we expect the development of either in an uncultivated field? Is it not in theology, as in agriculture, true that where nothing is given, nothing is required or expected? There are hundreds of millions on the earth that have not heard of the popular, not to say the pure gospel. Shall we enter those uncultivated fields and denounce all as tares? Hands off, brethren: "As many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law."—Rom. ii. 12.

NEW YORK, March, 1871.

The Atonement.—A Review.

BY J. C. DAY.

AND this I say, that the covenant which was confirmed before of God, in Christ, the law cannot disannul. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster, for ye are all the children (heirs) of God by faith in Jesus Christ. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed (as being the seed of Abraham's greater Son) and heirs according to the promise. Now I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child differeth nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all. Hence the promise of inheritance, and all other promises, are in Christ. The mystery of Christ is now revealed, that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs (with the Jews) and partakers of his promise in Christ. The promise of life which is in Christ Jesus. For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen. In like manner eternal life, which he offers to a world of moral agents, and bestows on believers as a gracious reward, belongs to his own inheritance we inherit through him. In whom also we have obtained an inheritance. As many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God. When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ. This shows what is always meant by being a son of God. One who is in Christ, the second Adam, as the branch is in the vine; and it is by this connection, and this only, that the dead will be raised to immortal life. For since by man (by the sin of one man) came death, by man, by the righteousness of one man, came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.—1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. Thus he who is the Alpha, is the Omega also of our salvation. Now if all the positive good ever promised to the world, on condition of their faith, was really measured out to Christ as his reward, and expressly for the use of those who would believe, then it comes to them because it was first given to him. And this is His account of the matter: "The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them, that they all may be one as we are; I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in me, and that the world may know that thou loved them as thou hast loved me."—John xvii. 22–26.

The whole amount is this: He earned the inheritance, and his seed share it with him. By whatever means it happens, all things are actually made over to them by covenant. Now on what ground do they claim? And are not the all things which are given to them, the identical all things which were made over to the universal heir. If so, how came they in possession of a claim to the same things that are given to Christ? Are these conflicting claims? or do they inherit under him? Let the word of God decide: "All things are yours: whether Paul, or Apollas, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."—1 Cor. iii. 21–23. Hence the seed inherit all things. Rev. xxi. 7. In particular, they inherit the promise of eternal life. "Followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. For when God made promise to Abraham, he swore by himself . . . wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath", . . "which hope is sure and steadfast, and entereth to that within the vail, whither the Forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a High Priest forever, after the order of Melchizedek."—Heb. vi. 12–20. And the hope which follows Christ thither is grounded on the promise of the inheritance made to Abraham and his seed. "He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." —Gal. iii. 26. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. iii. 39.

As the literal seed of Abraham inherited the land of Canaan as a type or pledge (Gen. xv. 7), so we that are Abraham's seed through Christ, shall possess the better country, even the heavenly.—Matt. v. 4; Psa. xxxviii. 29–34. As heirs together of the grace of life; heirs according to the hope of eternal life.—Matt. xix. 29; and xxv. 34; Mark x. 17; Tit. iii. 7; 1 Pet. iii. 7. We are said to have an inheritance in the kingdom of Christ, and to reign with him; and even to be partakers of Christ. Eph. v. 5; Heb. iii. 14; Rev. iii. 21. Hence in that description of the inheritance of the Son and heir of all things, in the first chapter of Hebrews, we read of the heir the meaning of which is found in this: "If children then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ."—Rom. viii. 14–17. At one time he is the parent from whom the seed inherit. At another time, the first-born among many brethren: really the heir, but admitting his younger brethren to share with him. Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Rom. viii. 29. It might be expected, therefore, that everything would be ascribed to his essential influence. And so we find it. In and through him we have access unto the Father: boldness and access with confidence: we are complete in him; perfect in Christ: approved in Christ: accepted in the beloved (that is, because he is beloved) and our acceptableness is called a sweet savor of Christ; he and not our works, being the acceptable incense. Even common blessings come to us through him; and to rejoice in them, religiously, is to rejoice in Christ. That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me, by my coming to you again.

Those salutations at the beginning and end of the Epistles: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you: The Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ; were breathings of desire for all good on those addressed, and acknowledgments that all good came through the Redeemer. Hence that confidence of the apostle: My God shall supply all your need—by Christ Jesus; and that devout and comprehensive acknowledgment, To us there is but one God, the Father; of whom are all things, and we in him: and our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him Rom. xvi. 20; 1 Cor. viii. 6; 2 Cor. ii. 15, with Eph. v. 2; and Phil. iv. 18; Eph. i. 16; and ii. 18, and iii. 12; Phil. i. 26, and iv. 19; Col. i. 28, and ii. 10; 2 Pet. i. 2–4. And now, is it too much to say of the scheme against which our arguments are, that it takes away one half of a Saviour and one half of his praise? Nor is it the least important part that it filches from us, so far as our comfort and gratitude to Christ are concerned. To fill the eye with him as the heir of all things; the one who has earned the inheritance, and the only one who has any legal claim to it, and the only means by which we can ever expect to inherit eternal life: I say, to view him as the author of all our good, that every morsel of daily food, and every article of clothing as coming from our divine friend and as purchased by him, and as belonging to the test and mediatorial estate; is one of the sweetest and sublimest contemplations that ever occupied the Christian mind. To know that we are indebted to him for all things, is the richest ingredient in prosperity, and will be the brightest gem in the immortal crown. Do you tell me that it is no matter whether blessings come through Christ, or directly from the Father, as upon either plan they are equally secure? This is precisely the Socinian plea. The worst evil in the Unitarian heresy is its tendency to lower down the influence of Christ in the business of man's salvation, and to send a fallen race immediately to God. Exactly in proportion as Christ is excluded, our faith, dependence, gratitude, and all our religion is changed. If Socianism changes it entirely, this error changes it in part. But give me a religion which yields to Christ all his influence and all his honors; which in every part of salvation makes him all and in all.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, MASS., March 9, 1871.

The Immortality Invention.

BR. STORRS: I have copied the following article from "Harper's Weekly." If you have no objections, I would like to see it in the HERALD OF LIFE. I believe it will give universal satisfaction to the readers of the HERALD. Any thing within the brackets is mine. I have not room for remarks myself, but you cannot fail to see that "The unpractical, prospective justice which had become an excuse for tyranny" under the Egyptian system of preaching that sum of all lies—immortality of the soul—is the same now as it was then. It was invented at first to "skeer" the "mob;" and that is its use to-day. Light is breaking. God speed the "Life cause."

Yours, in love.

JAS. W. SMITH.

UPLAND, Del. Co., PA., Feb. 11, 1871.

THE EGYPTIANS AND THE ISRAELITES.

[From Harper's Weekly of Feb. 11, 1871.]

The Egyptians were the first people upon the earth who emerged into what is now called civilization. How they lived, how they were governed, during the tens or hundreds of generations which intervened between their earliest and latest monuments, there is little evidence to say. At the date when they become historically visible, they present the usual features of effete Oriental societies: the labor executed by slave gangs, and a rich, luxurious minority spending their time in feasting and revelry. Wealth accumulated. Art flourished. Enormous engineering works illustrated the talent or ministered to the vanity of the priestly and military classes. The favored of fortune basked in perpetual sunshine. The millions sweated in the heat under the lash of task-master, and were paid with just so much of the leeks and onions and flesh-pots as would continue them in a condition to work. Of these despised wretches some hundreds of thousands were enabled by Providence to shake off the yoke, to escape over the Red Sea into the Arabian desert, and there receive from Heaven a code of laws under which they were to be governed in the land where they were to be planted. What were those laws?

The Egyptians, in the midst of their corruptions, had inherited the doctrine from their fathers, which is considered the foundation of all religion. They believed in a life beyond the grave—in the judgment bar of Osiris, at which they were to stand on leaving their bodies, and in a future of happiness or misery, as they had lived well or ill upon earth. It was not a speculation of philosophers, it was the popular creed; and it was held with exactly the same kind of belief with which it has been held by the Western nations since their conversion to Christianity. But what was the practical effect of their belief? There is no doctrine, however true, which works mechanically on the soul [mind] like a charm. The expectation of a future state may be a motive for the noblest exertion, or it may be an excuse for acquiescence in evil, and serve to conceal and perpetuate the most enormous iniquities. The magnate of Thebes on Memphis, with his huge estates, his town and country palaces, his retinue of eunuchs, and his slaves, whom he counted by thousands, was able to say to himself, if he thought at all, "True enough, there are inequalities of fortune. These serfs of mine have a miserable time of it, but it is only a time, after all; they have immortal souls, poor devils, and their wretched existence here is only but a drop of water in the ocean of their being. They have as good a chance of Paradise as I have—perhaps better. Osiris [the ox-god, the deified bull] will set all right hereafter; and for the present, rich and poor are an ordinance of Providence, and there is no occasion to disturb established institutions. For myself, I have drawn a prize in the lottery, and I hope I am grateful. I subscribe handsomely to the temple services. I am myself punctual in my religious duties. The priests, who are wiser than I am, pray for me, and they tell me I may. Set my mind at rest."

Under this theory of things, the Israelites had been ground to powder. They broke away. They too were to become a nation. A revelation of the true God was bestowed upon them, from which, as from a fountain, a deeper knowledge of the Divine nature was to flow out over the earth; and the central thought of it was the realization of the Divine government, not in a vague hereafter, but in the living present. The unpractical prospective justice, which had become an excuse for tyranny, was superseded by an immediate justice in time. They were to reap the harvest of their deeds, not in heaven, but on earth.

There was no life in the grave whither they were going. The future state was withdrawn from their sight till the mischief which it had wrought had been forgotten. It was not denied, but it was veiled in a cloud. It was left to private opinion to hope or to fear; but it was no longer held out either as an excitement to piety or a terror to evil-doers. The God of Isaac was a living God, and his power was displayed visibly and immediately in rewarding the good and punishing the wicked while they remained in the flesh.

Children's Department.

"Lift a Little."

ONE day while walking up the street, I saw, a short distance before me, quite a small boy carrying a large bundle. It seemed very heavy, for the little fellow was bending and staggering under its weight; yet he went resolutely forward, only stopping occasionally to change it from one hand to the other.

He was poorly clad, and as he turned his head, I recognized him as the son of a poor widow, who was obliged to work very hard to earn food and clothing for herself and her two little boys. My heart ached for the brave little fellow who was beginning so early to bear life's burdens, and I wanted to help him. "Lift a little," he seemed to say to the passers-by, as he trudged on with his load.

Soon I heard rapid footsteps behind me, and, in a moment, a bright, pleasant-faced boy, the only son of a professor in one of our colleges, passed me. When he reached the little boy who was still bending under his burden, he stretched out his hand, and taking hold of the bucket, bore on his stronger arm the larger share of the burden, until he reached his own home.

How I honored the brave boy for his kind act! I knew his own heart was beating a happy measure, for we are never so happy as when doing something to make others happy. And as the widow's son went struggling on, I knew his burden seemed less heavy, that for a little while it had been borne for him. His heart was lighter, too, because another had shown him kindness, and the memory of that little act would be a bright spot to him in many a toiling day. It cost little, that act of thoughtful kindness, but how much happiness it brought!

Dear children, learn a lesson from the conduct of this noble boy. Do not, because you have kind parents, a pleasant home, and so many things to make life sweet to you, neglect or speak unkindly to those upon whom God has not bestowed so much. Help them to bear their burdens in every way that you can, and be willing even to deny yourself to help those in need.

But, perhaps I am writing to some one who is poor and sick. If so, let me say, that even you can be a burden-bearer. Do you not know some in greater need than yourself, to whom you may give a helping hand? If you have nothing else to give, you can at least give kind words and pleasant smiles to all.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—Child's World.

Little Sandie.

IN Edinburgh, two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel one very cold day, when a little boy, with a poor, thin, blue face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came and said:

"Please, sir, buy some matches?"

"No, I don't want any," the gentleman said.

"But they are only a penny a box," the little fellow pleaded.

"Yes, but you see we do not want a box," the gentleman said again.

"Then I will gie ye twa boxes for a penny," the boy said at last.

"And so, to get rid of him," the gentleman, who tells the story in an English paper, says, "I bought a box. But then I found I had no change, so I said: 'I will buy a box to-morrow.'"

"'O! do buy them the nicht, if ye please,' the boy pleaded again, 'I will rin and git ye the change, for I am verra hungry.'"

"So I gave him the shilling and he started away; and I waited for him, but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; but still there was that in the boy's face I trusted, and I did not like to think bad of him. Well, late in the evening a servant came and said a little boy wanted to see me. When he was brought in, I saw it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shilling; but, if possible, still more ragged and poor and thin. He stood a moment diving into his rags, as if he was seeking something, and then said:

"'Are ye the gentleman that bought the matches frae Sandie?"

"'Yes."

"'Well, then, here's fourpence out of your shillin'. Sandie canna come, he's no weel. A cart ran over him and knocked him doon, and he lost his bonnet and his matches, and your sevenpence: and both his legs were broken; and he's no well at a', and the doctor says he'll dee. And that's all he can gie ye noo," putting the fourpence down on the table, and then the poor child broke down into great sobs.

"So I fed the little man," the gentleman goes on to say, "and then I went with him to see Sandie. I found that the poor little things lived with a wretched, drunken stepmother; their own father and mother were both dead. I found poor Sandie lying on a bundle of shavings. He knew me as soon as I came in, and said:

"'I got the change, sir, and was coming back, and then the horse knocked me doon, and both my legs are brocken. And O Reuby, little Reuby! I am sure I am dee'in! and who'll take care o' ye Reuby, when I am gane? What will ye do, Reuby?"

"I took the little sufferer's hand and told him I would always take care of Reuby. He understood me, and had just strength enough to look at me, as if he would thank me; then the light went out of his blue eyes, and in a moment he was dead.—Scattered Leaves.

A CHILD'S NOBLE ANSWER.—A little boy, nine years old, a member of the Band of Hope, was at a dinner-party a short time ago, and those present wanted to test the strength of his principles.

A half-sovereign was put at the bottom of a tumbler, which was then half filled with ale. "Now," said they, if you'll drink that, you shall have what is at the bottom."

"No," replied the noble little fellow; "nor a dozen half sovereigns shall make me break my pledge!" Surely, the "root of the matter" was in him. That noble child will make a noble man.

THE SWALLOWS AND THE HERMIT.—Saint Guthlac once received a visit from one of his friends, named Wilfrid. Suddenly, two swallows flew into his cell and alighted on his shoulders, beating their long wings, and twittering softly. "Brother, how have you made these birds, which love freedom so well, feel such confidence in you?" "Do you not know that whoever is one with God through purity of heart, sees all created things grow one with him?"

THE pleasantest things in the world are pleasant thoughts; and the greatest art in life is to have as many of them as possible.

A Bible View of Hell:

Exposing the vain philosophy and traditions of men regarding the Nature of Future Punishment, etc., by E. Wolcott. Edited, with an Introductory, by Wm. H. Spencer.

This valuable work is a real Scriptural compend of the subject, and is an important addition to the Life literature. Among its contents may be noticed the following: Hell in the Hebrew and Greek; The righteous as well as the wicked go into hell; good men desire to be redeemed from hell; Hades; Capernaum brought down to hell; Hell shall not prevail against the righteous; The Rich Man and Lazarus Gehenna; Unquenchable Fire; Everlasting Fire; God able to destroy both soul and body in hell; Tartarus; Smoke of their torment; The Lake of Fire, etc., etc. The work is beautifully printed, and offered below cost. Single copies 5 cents; $4 per hundred, by Express. Address all orders to

WM. H. SPENCER, (Box 547), Rochester, N. Y.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures. The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	8 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	3 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2 "
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "
21.	LIFE AND DEATH REAL,	3 "
22.	MAN'S DESTINY; or, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "
23.	THE LIFE VIEWS,	2 "
24.	HOW READEST THOU?	2 "
25.	WHAT A FARMER HAS TO SAY: Or, An Instructive Letter. Also, THE WRATH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?	2 "
26.	SOUL SURVIVANCE IN DEATH: NOT A DOCTRINE OF THE BIBLE,	2 "
27.	THE KINGDOM OD GOD,	2 "
28.	THE DESTINY OF THE WICKED,	2 "
29.	THE DEAD ARE DEAD,	2 "
30.	INHERENT IMMORTALITY,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
208 BROADWAY, (Room 4,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, President.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.
L. C. THORNE, Assistant.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 1871.

VOLUME VIII.—NUMBER 28.
WHOLE NUMBER 362.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

LETTER TO A MINISTER.

BY STEWART CARLISLE

REV. CHAS. D. SHAW: Though a comparative stranger to you, you will please pardon me for intruding upon your "time and patience." I should not have done so, did not the cause nearest and dearest to my heart demand it. It may seem somewhat egotistic in one of my humble rank to take exceptions to, and express my disapproval of sentiments that fall from the lips of men, whose educational advantages are beyond question, vastly superior to mine; and if the question involved, were one to be determined by worldly wisdom, prudence itself would dictate submissive silence as the only sphere in which with propriety I should move. But in the presence of this momentous subject, worldly wisdom stands appalled, confused, and human reason, unaided by revelation, only stands bewildered and dumb.

"If a man die, shall he live again?" was the significant and earnest inquiry of the man of Uz. A few days since, a very worthy and highly esteemed gentleman of this city met with a terrible accident, by which in an instant he was rendered insensible, in which state he remained a few days and then expired, without uttering a single sentence; and your words of comfort to the bereaved, and sorrow-stricken relatives and friends, were not in harmony with the words of comfort as authorized by the Apostle Paul on such occasions. Please see 1 Thess. iv. 13 to 18 inclusive. If memory serves me right, your words of comfort were partly in substance as follows: "Think not of him as dead, but as living. As you follow this beautiful casket to its last resting place, think not that this is him, he lives, he lives in heaven; he has entered into that spiritual body, eternal in the heavens; he now sings with Jesus. 'I know this is so,' for God is not the God of the dead, but of the living," etc.

Now if this be true, it is no matter of surprise that you should keep the resurrection entirely out of sight and hearing. Is this following in the footsteps of them, "who through faith and patience inherit the promises?" Is this the language Paul used to comfort the sorrowing? Your quotation of a sentence from the Saviour's lips was wholly inapplicable; and such quotations are not unfrequent. Some time since a distinguished clergyman, was preaching on the immortality of the soul, and to prove the doctrine true, that the soul can never die, he quoted the following passages of Holy writ.

"The soul that sinneth it shall die, for the wages of sin is death." Here is the wisdom of men v.s. God's blessed truth. Which shall we believe? When the blessed Master said: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living," he was not speaking of spirits in any sense; he was teaching in plain unequivocal language the certainty of a resurrection of the righteous dead; the manner and the subjects of the resurrection, was the topic of his discourse; the future state, or eternal life is to be the portion enjoyed only by those "who are worthy to obtain that world, (or age) and the resurrection from the dead; they are equal unto the angels, neither can they die any more and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." This testimony of God's anointed Son stands impeached, if the dead who sleep in unconsciousness, yet in hope, are not raised up at the last day; and the unmistakable inference from this testimony is, that God is not the God of the dead who lived without God, and died without hope, and for the simple reason, they are not "worthy"; hence, God is not their God; and because they wandered out of the way of understanding, "they shall remain in the congregation of the dead," and never "see light or life."

